"Mr. Taylor has repeated to me the statement he made when served with the summons, and he asserts that it was as follows: 'I was called as a witness and I said, 'Have I got to go this afternoon? It is very inconvenient for me. I am a great friend of Mr. Gray's. I was one of the men who signed his petition.'"

Acting District Attorney Unger said yesterday: "We have got this case into concrete and tangible form, and something may be done next Wednesday, when the Grand Jury resumes its sitting."

CANDY DOG PLEASED HANNA.

No Later Christmas Gift Afforded the Senator So Much Enjoyment.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Dec. 23.—A Christmas entertainment was given at the Industrial Home in this city to-night by Miss Mabel Hanna, Senator Hanna's daughter. The Senator was the principal speaker. He told in a simple way of the enjoyment an ordinary candy dog once afforded him. He said it was his first Christmas gift, and that no gift received by him since that time had ever afforded him more pleasure.

One of the stage decorations was a large portrait of President McKinley. Senator Hanna said that McKinley had started in life a poor boy, as poor as any of those present, and that it was the privilege of any lad, no matter how poor, to aspire to the Presidency.

RAILWAY LOSES A CASE.

A Grain Firm Recovers a Judgment for $46,827.

PAOLA, Kan., Dec. 23.—In the District Court here to-day the grain firm of W. H. Harris & Co. of Kansas City was awarded a judgment for $46,827 against the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Railway, for failure to deliver 250,000 bushels of corn in Mexico on specified time. In a previous trial the firm secured judgment of $42,000, but appealed, and was granted a new trial.

The grain was shipped to Mexico in 1892, during the food famine in that country, and because of delay in transit the complainants set up that they lost considerable money. Since the litigation was begun, one member of the firm has died, and the concern has been sold out to the International Grain Company.

LAKEWOOD'S CHRISTMAS DANCE.

Gay Season Opened with a Large Holiday Crowd Present.

Special to The New York Times.

LAKEWOOD, N. J., Dec. 23.—Christmas is here, and right royally is Gen. M. G. Wentworth, the new manager of the Lakewood Hotel, celebrating it with a grand Christmas dance to-night in the pretty ballroom of the hotel, to which he invited all the cottage set. The result is a great success, for a throng is present, the number of arrivals at the hotel to-day being over two hundred. Several tally-hos and numerous other turnouts brought many guests to the dance from other hotels and some near-by places. Gen. Wentworth has numerous other events to follow, the next one being the New Year's Eve ball, which occurs next Saturday evening.

Included among those present to-night are Gen. and Mrs. R. D. Lewis, Judge and Mrs. David Leventritt, Mrs. M. C. Wentworth, Miss A. A. Bowen, Mr. and Mrs. C. M. Saunderson, Miss Bellman, Judge and Mrs. Alfred Steckler, Mrs. A. A. Bennett, Mrs. J. E. Blake, W. H. Langley, the Misses Langley, Mr. and Mrs. W. H. Parsons, E. A. Darling, proprietor of the Fifth Avenue Hotel; W. C. Langley, Mrs. A. B. Darling, Mr. and Mrs. Alfred De Cordova, W. T. Bennett, J. Murray Saunderson, Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Bellman, Mr. and Mrs. Howard K. Burras, Mr. and Mrs. J. Fred Ackerman, Mr. and Mrs. R. P. Doremus, Mr. and Mrs. George Brown, Col. George D. Lewis, Miss Estelle Walleck, Miss Hattie Belmont, Mr. and Mrs. Horace Lee, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Gleason, Mr. and Mrs. J. J. Gunther, Mr. and Mrs. R. Dun Douglass, R. Graham Douglass, Mr. and Mrs. R. W. Allen, Mr. and Mrs. W. W. Hill, Mr. and Mrs. George I. Stebbins, the Misses Ewing, Mr. and Mrs. Allan MacNaughtan, Mr. and Mrs. George C. Batcheldor, Miss Chamberlain, Randolf Beedle, Miss L. C. Gregory, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Gleason, M. H. Mallory, Miss Mallory, Mr. and Mrs. R. M. Field.

MR. HOWE'S APPOINTMENTS.

The Republican Machine Leaders in Brooklyn Are Dissatisfied.

Register-elect James R. Howe of Brooklyn, who is causing anxiety among the Republican machine leaders of that borough over his indifference to their appeals for a share of the patronage of the office to which he has been elected, yesterday gave out the list of his appointments. There was cold comfort in it for Michael J. Dady and the other leaders. Mr. Howe's principal appointments are as follows:

Counsel, Bert Reis, Fifteenth District; Deputy Register, Warren C. Tredwell, Eleventh District; expert, Alfred T. Hobley, Fifth District; Assistant Deputy, Jesse Frost, Twelfth District; private secretary, Frederick Goetz, Eighteenth District; chattel mortgage clerk, John J. McGinnis, Seventh District; assistant mortgage clerk, Alfred J. Schoenberg, Fifteenth District; chief of copyists, Hector McNiele, Thirteenth District; chief clerk current index, Charles Winants, Eleventh District; ticker clerk, Gus Nathan, Twenty-first District; general index clerk, Joseph Swan, Thirteenth District; assistant index clerk, Richard N. Bennett, Sixteenth District; map custodian, Joseph Daniels, Twentieth District; messenger, Richard Daly, Fourteenth District; messenger, Charles Dietrick, Fifteenth District; messenger, (veteran,) John Clarkson, Fifth District; messenger, (veteran,) Robert Braid, Fourteenth District; custodian, Henry Cleveland, Fifteenth District.

Mr. Howe made a statement yesterday afternoon in which he denied that he had not properly considered the organization in making his selections. He cites the appointment of Warren C. Tredwell, Jesse Frost, John J. McGinnis, and Joseph Daniels as being particularly selections of the organization. Mr. Howe said that the reason that the majority of the appointments were given to the Eastern District was that that part of the borough was almost wholly ignored in the appointments made by the Commissioner of Records.

PRINTER SHOOTS A HODCARRIER.

Killing Grows Out of a Kansas City Labor Trouble.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Dec. 23.—Robert Hoard, (colored,) for shooting whom Edward Jackley, a non-union linotype operator, employed at Lechtman's printing office, is under arrest, died at St. Joseph's Hospital to-day from the effects of the wound, and Jackley will probably be held for murder.

Jackley, with four other non-union men, was being taken home in a wagon Wednesday evening, when they were surrounded by a crowd of union hod-carriers, among them Hoard, who was shot by one of the five printers.

Jackley, who was arrested charged with the shooting, had previously been assaulted by union sympathizers.

ALBANY CAMPAIGN PLANS

Charter Revision and Canal Improvements in the Programme.

PAYN WILL GET NO HELP

Inspector General Hoffman May Succeed A. D. Andrews—Governor Hears Views of Republican Leaders.

Gov. Roosevelt received yesterday the views of many persons who are interested in measures which will engage the attention of the Legislature at the session which will begin next month. The Governor acted as host at a breakfast at the home of his sister, Mrs. Douglas Robinson, 422 Madison Avenue. Those who were seated around the board were United States Senator Thomas C. Platt and Chairman B. B. Odell, Jr., representing the Republican State organization; Charles Stewart Smith of the Chamber of Commerce, who introduced the resolution in that body calling for the naming of a commission to revise the New York City charter; Gen. Francis V. Greene, Chairman of the Canal Advisory Commission; J. Harsen Rhoades, Capt. F. Norton Goddard, a member of the Governor's staff and a Republican district leader; Dr. Albert Shaw, Prof. Nicholas Murray Butler of the City Club, and F. W. Holls.

After breakfast the guests retired to the library and had a general discussion on legislative matters. Everybody had an opportunity to freely express his personal opinion on the bills which are proposed for introduction and the course to be adopted in reference to matters which have been under investigation by Special Commissioners appointed by the Governor, and on which reports will be submitted to the Legislature during the Winter.

The question of the further improvement of the canals was considered at length. Gen. Greene outlined the report which will be made by the commission of which he is Chairman. It was learned that the report will advocate the completion of all needed improvements. It has been estimated that at least $20,000,000 more will be required to do all that is needed. It has been suggested that an annual appropriation of $1,000,000 be made for doing what may be needed, but it is problematical if the next Legislature will appropriate any sum for the canals. No decision was reached at yesterday's conference, and the Governor did not intimate what his course would be.

The revision of the charter and the composition of the commission to do the work as well as draw up amendments to the charter to be passed this Winter also formed part of the morning's discussion. The Governor said that the commission would be a large one, and that it had been about decided not to name any one of the original Charter Commission as a member.

"The members of the former commission," said the Governor, "undoubtedly put forward their best efforts in framing the present charter, and when another charter is framed we want to have the advantage of new blood and new ideas."

Further suggestions on this subject will be submitted to the Governor later by Charles Stewart Smith, who in the meantime will consult with the legislators from this city—such men as Senators Ford and Elsberg and Assemblyman Davis. It is understood to be the Governor's intention to have Brooklyn well represented on the new commission. While is the Governor's intention to leave the question of general revision to the commission which he will appoint, it is understood that he will approve some urgent legislation at the next session. His friends have convinced him that some changes in the charter should be made without waiting for the report of the commission, which will not be ready for submission until 1901.

One of the things that it is understood will receive immediate attention will be the question of compelling the Corporation Counsel to consult with the Mayor or the Controller before confessing judgment in suits against the city, instead of doing so upon his own responsibility, as he is permitted to do at present.

Another subject which was discussed was the plan proposed by the Unification Commission to place the public school system of the State under control of a Chancellor of the State Board of Regents. The Governor wants to see a bill passed, non-partisan in its character, which would insure a simple and good system of public instruction throughout the State. The Governor said after the conference was over that everybody had agreed that such a bill was needed and should be passed. It is no secret, however, that there is strong opposition within the Republican organization to any plan which in any way would interfere with the tenure of office of employes in the office of the State Superintendent of Public Instructions, who are adherents of the organization.

A general discussion of the question of a revision of the tax laws, for the purpose of securing a more just and equitable distribution of taxation, was indulged in, but nothing definite was decided upon, and probably nothing will be done in this direction, it is said, until the joint legislative committee which has been investigating this subject for the past few months, makes its report.

Dr. Shaw read a paper on the growth of corporations, which included a plan to abridge their powers. There was no decision as to legislation concerning the subject.

It was reported that nothing was said at the conference concerning a successor to Louis F. Payn as State Superintendent of Insurance. Mr. Payn's term will expire in February, and while Senator Platt and Chairman Odell are personally friendly to Payn, and would like to see him continued in office, it is said, it is not thought that they will go so far as to organize any opposition to the Governor's wishes in this matter. The Governor's friends say that he is determined to force Payn out of office, and will nominate a successor to him early in the session. Among those who follow closely the political situation, it is believed that even if Payn had ever had a remote chance ago when he threatened to make a fight against him in the Senate and defeat confirmation of any nomination other than his own which might be made. Well-informed politicians say that the organization leaders have decided upon a policy of non-interference in the Payn case.

During his stay in this city Gov. Roosevelt has had talks with several prominent members of the National Guard concerning the appointment of a successor to Adjt. Gen. Avery D. Andrews. The Governor said yesterday that he had several persons under consideration, any one of whom might be appointed, but that he had not made up his mind finally. The name of Capt. Goddard has been mentioned in connection with the place, but it is understood that the Governor has not even considered him as a possible appointee. The gossips around headquarters have made up their minds that Inspector General Edward Morris Hoffman of Elmira will succeed Gen. Andrews, and that Assistant Inspector General Sanger will be promoted to his place. It is understood that Col. Hoffman has once declined the appointment, but some of the Governor's friends say that the latter is anxious to have him accept the position, and has not abandoned hope of being successful.

Before returning to Albany Gov. Roosevelt had a talk with Grant La Farge, Gifford Pinchot, and Austin Wardsworth about forestry matters. Radical recommendations concerning the preservation of the forests are looked forward to in the Governor's annual message to the Legislature. Just what the character of these recommendations will be the Governor would not say yesterday, but he made no secret of the fact that he was greatly interested in the subject and would devote considerable attention to it during the coming session.

The Governor may come to this city once more before the Legislature convenes, if he finds it necessary to consult with any of those who enjoy his confidence. Chairman Odell went to Newburg at the close of the conference to spend the holidays with his family. He does not expect to be at headquarters again until after New Year's.

MUST SUPPORT HIS CHILDREN.

Federal Judge Says Bankruptcy Relieves No Man of Responsibility.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Dec. 23.—In ruling against Frederick J. Hubbard, who sought to evade a Curcuit Court decree for the payment of money to support his children, Judge Kohlsaat, in the United States District Court, has held that the Bankruptcy act is not intended to subvert the higher rule which imposes upon a parent the care and maintenance of his children.

Action for a divorce was recently begun in the Circuit Court by the wife, and last October an order was entered requiring the husband to pay $136 within six months, in addition to $3.50 per week, for the support of two minor children.

Hubbard filed a bankruptcy petition later and got a temporary order restraining the collection under this order.

OPERAGOERS DISAPPOINTED.

When Calve Did Not Sing, as Advertised, Many Wanted Their Money Back, but Could Not Get It.

Several hundred persons were bitterly disappointed yesterday afternoon when they entered the Metropolitan Opera House to see the notices posted up to the effect that Mlle. Emma Calvé was unable to sing the part of Marguerite, in which she was billed to appear, in "Faust," and that her place would be taken by Miss Susanne Adams. They learned that Mlle. Calvé had been seized on the previous night with a severe attack of hoarseness, and was recuperating at her apartments at Sherry's, and unable to sing, though she is expected to be able to sing Carmen next Friday.

Mlle. Calvé's name had been a potent attraction to the operagoers who could devote that afternoon to the enjoyment of music, and many of them had gone who would have been somewhere else if it had not been that they expected to hear her sing Marguerite. Many of them, in fact, only cared to spare the money for their seats in the expectation of hearing Calvé. When they discovered that she was not to appear, they manifested their disappointment in plain fashion. Their chagrin was still further increased by their being told at the box office that their money could not be refunded, nor could they get any other return for what they had paid for the tickets than to attend the performance with the altered cast.

A hundred or so people appealed to the box office and protested against what they claimed to be an injustice. Some of the women, in fact, appeared to be on the verge of tears. "We've paid to hear Calvé," was the universal declaration, "and we have a right to hear her. That's what we came for." The management maintained, however, that it must abide by its rule of not refunding money or exchanging tickets save in the case of the substitution of another opera for the one advertised. The purchasers of tickets had no other recourse but to hear Miss Adams instead of Mlle. Calvé or lose entirely what they had paid for the performance.

Max Hirsch was in charge at the time, Mr. Grau being away. Mr. Hirsch said last night that he thought the management had done the just thing. "The only thing we can promise in grand opera," said he, "is the opera. It is impossible to guarantee that the cast will be just as it has been advertised. We cannot be sure that illness will not keep some performer from appearing. When such is the case it is our rule not to refund money paid for tickets or to give other tickets for them. Indeed, that is stated on the tickets themselves." Here Mr. Hirsch showed a ticket, on the back of which was printed:

"This ticket is sold subject to the right of the management to make any alteration in the performance which may be rendered necessary by illness or other unavoidable causes."

Mr. Hirsch added: "There was of course some complaint, as some people were disappointed. But the artists got two encores in the finale, and that didn't look as if the opera was very bad. If we should give every one his money back who objected to a change in the cast we should find many who would want it refunded just because some particular friend didn't appear. This is not a new case. It is happening all the while, and so long as the opera advertised is given we make no return of money made for tickets. The public should remember that an artist does not disappoint them merely through a whim. It means just so much money lost to the artist every time."

It was suggested that a man who paid for a seat to see a star actor in a play would not feel justly treated if the play were given without the star.

"Ah, yes," said Mr. Hirsch, "but none of our artists is starred. In the advertisements and the billboards, all have their names printed in the same type. There is no starring in grand opera here."

YESTERDAY AT THE OPERA.

"Faust" in the Afternoon and "Lohengrin" in the Evening.

The programme for the first Saturday of the season at the Metropolitan Opera House had a very familiar sound. It was "Faust" for the matinée and "Lohengrin" for the evening performance at reduced prices. That this programme was not carried out in all its details as originally designed was not the fault of the manager of the opera. Mme. Calvé was to have given us another opportunity to study her unique composition of the traits of Marguerite in Gounod's masterpiece, but alas! Managers propose and the weather disposes. Mme. Calvé had again succumbed to the treachery of this inglorious climate, and the fatal handbills at the doors informed the entering auditors that instead of the bewitching Gallis sibyl they were to have the pleasure of hearing Miss Suzanne Adams.

Notwithstanding the fact that such stars as Messrs. Alverez and Plançon were still to be found in the cast, many of those who had gone as far as the doors turned away and decided to wait for a stronger combination. Two stars do not make an opera company at the Metropolitan, and if Mr. Grau sometimes reaps the evils of his own system, he must be content. However, he did not suffer greatly yesterday, as the advance sale was large and the holders of reserved seats had not the privilege of going away with their money in their pockets. It may be surmised that the loss in receipts was counterbalanced by the saving in the difference between the expense of the services of Mme. Calvé and those of Miss Adams.

Those who went to scold, however, remained to applaud. Miss Adams was received on her first entrance with almost a silence, but at the conclusion of the jewel song she had succeeded in arousing the audience to enthusiasm. Although Miss Adams does not warm her hearers greatly, the natural beauty of her voice is well displayed in such music as that of Marguerite. The Faust was M. Alvarez, who was much in the same state of mind in regard to the pitch as he was on Monday night. He was happiest in "Salut demeure," which he phrased excellently, and in the prison scene, where his vigor was allowed free play. M. Plançon repeated his familiar impersonation of Mephistopheles. The Siebel was Mme. Mantelli. The Valentine was M. Illy, and Signor Mancinelli conducted. The general effect of the performance was not inspiring, owing to the frequent departures from the pitch on the part of some of the principal singers. The audience was in a terrible cold, as was natural in the circumstances, but it is a rare thing, indeed, that the flower song of Siebel is permitted to pass without a hand, as it was yesterday afternoon.

The performance of "Lohengrin" last night was heard by an audience of moderate size, but abundant generosity in the matter of applause. It is impossible to avoid the conviction that the chief factors in the creation of enthusiasm were to be found before the footlights. The German conductor of the company, Mr. Emil Paur, made his first appearance in this city as a director of opera, and scored an immediate and emphatic success. This is a matter for general felicitation, because since the untimely death of Mr. Seidl we have been without a competent German conductor of German opera at the Metropolitan. Mr. Grau is now provided with a man who is fitted to continue the notable work done by Mr. Seidl.

In the first place Mr. Paur is thoroughly acquainted with the score, and he knows just what he wants. His reading of the music last night was intelligent, sympathetic, and enthusiastic. The nuances which he restored to the orchestral part of the work, and those which he introduced, were musically beautiful and dramatically significant. He brought out the climaxes with splendid force, and generally led his forces with inspiring vigor.

The orchestra, as has already been noted in these columns, is a great improvement on that of last year. The strings are much truer in intonation, firmer in attack, and richer in quality. The wood is altogether mellower and firmer, and the brass much more brilliant, and sound in quality. The work of the orchestra last night was vigorous, flexible, and at times brilliant. It is a pity that the same cannot be said of all the principal singers. Miss Susan Strong, who was heard as Elsa, sang with Col. Mapleson in his last season, and with Mr. Damrosch subsequently. She came over here from Philadelphia once to sing Elsa at the Metropolitan, when there was sickness in the company.

Her performance last night was weak dramatically and not delightful vocally, owing to her singing sharp. Mr. Dippel was the Lohengrin, and his interpretation is so well known that no comment is necessary beyond the statement that it was as pleasing last night as usual. Mr. Lempriere Pringle's voice has not been heard to better advantage than it was in the King, and he deserves especial praise for his good phrasing. Mme. Schumann-Heink as Ortrud was not in good voice, but her vigorous declamation evoked applause. Mr. Muhlmann as Telramund sang vociferously and indulged in a good deal of unnecessary parlando. Mr. Meux was the Herald.

THIEF CAUGHT AFTER A CHASE.

He Seized a Passenger's Pin in a Car and Sprinted a Block.

Louis Brodbeck of 103 East Seventy-seventh Street was riding up town on a Lexington Avenue car last night when at Fifty-ninth Street he felt a tug at his scarf and saw a hand being quickly drawn away. He seized it, but the owner freed himself and ran out of the car.

Brodbeck shouted that the man was a thief, and Policeman Sullivan of the East Sixty-seventh Street Station caught him after pursuing him a block.

The man said he was Walter Quell, twenty-seven years old. He refused his address. He had Brodbeck's scarfpin on him.

A White Plains train running into the Grand Central Station late yesterday afternoon did not obey its brakes promptly, and the head car crashed into the buffers with force enough to throw many of the passengers to the floor or seats. Nobody was seriously injured, though some were bruised by the shock. The cars were not damaged.

Freight Trains in Collision.

Special to The New York Times.

GREENWICH, Conn., Dec. 23.—The Harlem River freight, bound east, ran into the Pier 50 way freight of fifty cars at the signal tower west of the Greenwich Station this afternoon, and seven cars were wrecked, with the contents. No one was injured.

The Reiffs Will Ride for Croker.

WICHITA, Kan., Dec. 23.—Jockeys Johnny and Lester Reiff are here visiting their brother Elmer Reiff. They are under contract to ride for Richard Croker next year at $15,000 each. They will go abroad in February. A. Bailey, the South African diamond king, has second call. The boys were born and reared in Wichita.

THE WEATHER.

LOCAL FORECAST—Rain; brisk easterly winds.

The rain area which covered the States of the Lower Mississippi Valley Friday has extended over the South Atlantic States and the Ohio Valley west of the Mississippi and in the upper lake region fair weather has prevailed. The temperature is above the seasonal average, except in the Gulf States and Tennessee and from the Middle Pacific Coast over the middle plateau region. In the States of the Middle and Upper Missouri Valley the temperature is twenty to twenty-five degrees above the normal. During today an area of low barometer which extends from the lake regions over the South Atlantic States will move eastward, attended by rain in the Atlantic Coast Districts. In the central valleys and the Pacific Coast the weather will be fair. Fair weather is indicated for to-morrow in all districts, except in the States of the Upper Missouri Valley, where snow is likely to occur. Along the Middle Atlantic and New England Coast the winds will be brisk and possibly high from the east, shifting to westerly to-night. On the South Atlantic Coast the winds will be fresh to brisk from the west.

The record of temperature for the twenty-four hours ended at midnight, taken from THE NEW YORK TIMES thermometer and from the thermometer of the Weather Bureau, is as follows:

ROBERTS OFF TO THE WAR

London Crowds Cheer His Departure for South Africa.

MANY NOTABLES SEE HIM OFF

Prince of Wales and Four Field Marshals at the Station to Greet Him—Sails from Southampton.

SOUTHAMPTON, Dec. 23.—Lord Roberts, in the course of an interview had with him before sailing to-night for South Africa, said:

"I am deeply impressed by the feeling shown to-day in London, along the route to and at Southampton. I desire to express my gratitude to all who have seen me off and to send my best remembrances to all in the country. In all these outbursts of patriotism I see a good omen of success."

When those who were not to be passengers by the steamer left the vessel, Lord Roberts bade farewell to his wife and daughters and ascended to the bridge. His appearance was the signal for deafening cheers, and for the singing of "God Save the Queen" and "Rule Britannia."

Responding to cries for a speech, Lord Roberts said:

"My good friends, I wish you all good luck, which I hope I shall have."

As the ship disappeared into the darkness a great final cheer rang out from the watching crowd.

The General had left Waterloo Station, in London, at noon, amid scenes of enthusiasm that vividly demonstrated the national interest in the event, and the belief that the departure of the General can be accepted as a guarantee that whatever can be done in South Africa will be carried out by thoroughly competent hands and on carefully matured lines.

Although only privileged persons were permitted to enter the station, this did not prevent the gathering of immense throngs at all the approaches and other points of vantage, who cheered repeatedly as "Bobs," accompanied by his wife and two daughters, drove up. Seldom has the terminus witnessed such an inspiriting send-off. Every appearance of the Field Marshal was the signal for ringing hurrahs, lusty shouts, and good wishes. The moment the veteran commander arrived he was surrounded by military officers and other friends, and held a semi-private reception in the waiting room. After personal leave-takings, Lord Roberts reached the platform, where general greetings and parting words were exchanged. Many ladies pressed eagerly forward to get a last handshake, express deep sympathy with the distinguished soldier in his recent bereavement, and bid him God-speed.

One woman, with her eyes filled with tears, exclaimed: "God bless you, and bring you safely back to us."

This wish was echoed and re-echoed in varying phraseology by hundreds thronging the vicinity of the train.

As the General joined his wife and daughters at the door of the saloon carriage, he was speedily surrounded by distinguished statesmen and military men, including Mr. A. J. Balfour, the Marquis of Lansdowne, Field Marshal Sir Donald Stewart, and Lieut. Col. Carington, the Queen's Equerry. Lord Wolseley and others arrived late, and it required all the efforts of the police to clear a passage for them.

Scarcely had the Commander in Chief joined Lord Roberts when a great cheer announced the approach of the Duke of Cambridge. The crush was so great that the Duke, in spite of police protection, was so hustled more than once he gave verbal expression of resentment at the rough treatment he had to submit to, and the police redoubled their efforts, finally enabling the Duke of Cambridge to reach Lord Roberts, though in the confusion the police thrust aside many of those who were best entitled to remain, including Lord Wolseley, who, however, took the rough handling of the police good-humoredly. The ladies present suffered much from the crowds, but their piteous appeals were unavailing to stem the crush.

Renewed cheering heralded the Duke of Connaught's arrival. Then rousing cheers momentarily diverted attention from the hero of the hour, as the Prince of Wales appeared and greeted Lord Roberts in the most cordial manner. The Prince and the distinguished General engaged in earnest conversation and furnished a striking centre to a notable group, which included no less than five Field Marshals. Lord Roberts, who was in morning dress, looked fit for anything. In spite of his sixty-seven years, he was straight and soldierly, and his rugged features reflected determination.

At the time the train was due to start the Prince of Wales again shook hands with Lord Roberts and spoke a few words to the General, of which the phrases "God bless you," "Good luck to you," were caught by those near by.

The Prince also said: "Good-bye, Bobs; a happy Christmas, a prosperous New Year, and every possible luck in your job."

Mr. Balfour bid Gen. Roberts a similar farewell.

Amid the din, enthusiasm, and excitement no one heard the signals for departure, and, in consequence, the train was moving while Lord Roberts was still on the platform with his back to the carriage door. The farewells were abruptly terminated, and he was forced to make a somewhat undignified scramble for his seat. As the General disappeared in the saloon carriage a final, lusty cheer was started, and continued until the train passed out of sight.

On arriving at Southampton Gen. Roberts was heartily cheered by thousands of people, and as he boarded the Dunottar Castle, between a guard of honor of marines and bluejackets, there was a renewed outburst of applause. The Mayor and corporation officials were present.

DUTCH HEAR A WILD RUMOR.

Reported that a British Army Corps Landed at Lorenzo Marques.

LONDON, Dec. 24.—From a Continental Dutch source comes the incredible rumor that a British army corps has disembarked at Lorenzo Marques.

It is said to be marching toward the Transvaal border.

THE BOERS LOOK TO AMERICA.

Copyright, 1899, The Associated Press.

LONDON, Dec. 23.—Though Great Britain's plight in South Africa seems temporarily critical, it is learned that the Boers are straining every nerve to secure the mediation of President McKinley toward a favorable peace. But any one with the slightest knowledge of British feeling quickly appreciates that not one person in a million contemplates any result but an ultimate British triumph, and all sections unite in saying this must be secured, no matter what the cost. Hence, the Boer agents themselves have only slight hopes that mediation would be accepted, though believing if President McKinley could be persuaded to proffer it, Lord Salisbury, though perhaps bound to refuse, would lose humanitarian sympathy in the United States, and thus divert to the Boers much wavering sentiment.

It is learned from excellent sources that no offer of mediation would be accepted by Lord Salisbury in any shape or form. The popular conception of peace is that it must come through the idol of the army, Gen. Roberts, and his not less adored Chief of Staff, Gen. Kitchener. The country is prepared to wait indefinitely for that eventuality. The fall of Kimberley, Ladysmith, and Mafeking would not make a particle of difference, for this stoical resolve is thoroughly imbedded in the hearts of the people, who, for the first time in the memory of this generation, have drank deeply of the cup of military defeat and disgrace. Any other defeats that the future holds for the British, except entire annihilation, are anticipated by the scathing self-criticism which the nation has inflicted upon its own hide. Estimates of the duration of hostilities vary from three months to a year.

FEARS RHODES WILL BE SHOT.

LONDON, Dec 23.—A very general impression prevails here that Kimberley will succumb. An officer of the British South African Company, who has an intimate knowledge of South Africa, says he believes that if the Boers capture Cecil Rhodes they will shoot him.

Nowhere more than on the Stock Exchange has the lack of information caused extreme nervousness. It is realized that if Kimberley falls De Beers Mines shares and interests will shrivel to nothing, while the Chartered Company's vast issues will lose what little bottom they have left.

GERMANY'S CHANGE OF HEART.

Copyright, 1899, The Associated Press.

BERLIN, Dec. 23.—The change in public opinion in favor of Great Britain, which was referred to in dispatches from here Friday night, continues. Even the Hamburg Nachrichten, which hitherto has been intensely Anglophobe, prints a communication to-day from a Hamburg merchant, protesting against "blinden Englaenderhass," (blind Anglophobia.)

The papers are full of contributions from military writers on the subject of the war. The Neueste Nachrichten to-day contains an article pointing out that the military success of the Boers, numbering 250,000, against a nation, which at home alone numbers 30,000,000, is explainable because the Boers are armed with the best modern rifles, and know how to use them. The British, the writer adds, undervalued their adversary, and failed to appear on the seat of war with a numerical superiority, while their strategy was largely ordered in London. Again, he points out, all the British Generals neglected reconnoitring, and were deficient in the A B C of the field service. To this, he continues, must be added the fatal frontal attack, while the Mauser gun has brilliantly stood the test of this campaign.

On the other hand a military writer in the Boersen Courier maintains that no modern war has been so devoid of interesting features, of theoretical or strategic lessons, and that the British have proved their stupendous "asininity as a military nation in an unparalleled manner."

The papers also continue to discuss the problem as to what will be Great Britain's position hereafter, since, they claim, her total collapse as a military power has been proved by this war. The usually well-informed Kreuz-Zeitung contains a letter from a high personage at St. Petersburg claiming that the question as to whether it is advisable to use Great Britain's present powerlessness is again being seriously considered in Russian Government circles. The military party is urging the timeliness for an Asiatic advance. It can be asserted, however, on high authority, that, as concerns Germany, no such step will be joined in under any circumstances, but that full neutrality will be maintained to the end.

MANY ANXIOUS TO ENLIST.

Copyrighted, 1899, The Associated Press.

LONDON, Dec. 23.—The Prince of Wales will spend Christmas at Sandringham and the Duke and Duchess of York will also be there. But, neither at Windsor, at Sandringham, nor in the noblest or lowest homes in Great Britain will there be much merry-making, for, with 7,000 men killed, wounded, or missing in South Africa, there are few families which have not been touched with this depression, which only serves to make the nation more determined than ever, and which is a silent accompaniment to one of the most spontaneous outbursts of patriotism and universal desire to risk life and give up property that ever marked the history of any country.

Cooks' sons are no less anxious to serve their country on the battlefield than Dukes' sons or than the Dukes themselves. The Duke of Marlborough's offer to equip 150 men of his yeomanry regiment for service in South Africa is merely one among hundreds of such offers from his class. Peers with vast business, property, and political interests are exhibiting the utmost eagerness in their desire to have their names enrolled among the volunteers who are going to endeavor to retrieve the reverses to the British arms. The day of wild war enthusiasm and overconfidence has passed, and there reigns in its stead a grim determination to atone for the mistakes of the past by individual effort, regardless of consequences.

An instance of the spirit which pervades the country is that in the Cumberland and Westmoreland Yeomanry, of which the Earl of Lonsdale is Colonel, every officer and nearly every man in the regiment has volunteered, and is using every influence to get accepted. Among the officers is Capt. Hugh Jefferson, well known in America, formerly manager of the Sand Creek Cattle Company of Wyoming. The Duke of Marlborough will probably receive an appointment on Lord Chesham's staff.

In the northern counties there is keen rivalry as to who shall do the most for his country in the hour of need. Northumbrians, headed by Earl Grey, have subscribed large sums to equip 100 men, and the Earl of Durham calls on the men of his county not to be outdone by the Northumbrians, and heads the list with a substantial subscription. Lords Stanley and Wolverton will go as yeomanry troopers, though the former at one time was an officer in the Guards and the latter is an Admiral's son. Two nephews of Gen. Lord Roberts, both ex-Majors in the regular army, have volunteered to go in any capacity in the yeomanry. The Earl of Essex, who is a Major of the Hertfordshire Yeomanry, accompanies the contingent of his county.

In short, the 8,000 mounted men who have responded to the call for yeomen will have the brains, blood, muscle, and daredevilry of the famous American Rough Riders.

As repeatedly asserted, there is no likelihood of European interference, yet W. T. Stead, in The Daily Chronicle to-day has a very alarming column, in which he has visions of a "superior Jameson raid" by 60,000 Frenchmen on London, in the absence of the Channel fleet. Mr. Stead points out how easily, in his opinion, this might be accomplished, and says:

"To rely, as some appear to do, upon the addition of a number of raw recruits, under the excitement and stimulus of the present war fever, is to rely on a broken reed. Woolwich Arsenal might be in flames and the French tri-color flying over Westminster Palace before the first of these new recruits would have learned to handle a gun."

CANADIANS RUSH TO ENLIST.

Recruiting Officer Besieged with Volunteer Applications.

WINNIPEG, Dec. 23.—Capt. Williams of the Royal Canadian Dragoons, commanding officer of this district, is besieged with applications from volunteers for South Africa from all over Western Canada. He is busy making selections. Some of the city firemen have volunteered, and the authorities have agreed to hold their places for them.

City Engineer Ruttan, Lieutenant Colonel of the Ninth Battalion, has offered to raise a regiment specially adapted for road and bridge construction. If the offer is accepted, his place will be kept for him, too.

German Ex-Officer Joins the Boers.

BERLIN, Dec. 23. — Lieut. Bruesewitz, who, as a Germany army officer murdered a civilian workman, has gone to join the Boers. A private letter from him says he has been appointed commander of a battery in the Transvaal.

Canada Charters Transports.

OTTAWA, Ontario, Dec. 23.—The Dominion Government has closed a contract with the Elder-Dempster Steamship Line for carrying half of the second Canadian contingent to South Africa. The steamer Montezuma has been engaged, and the price will be so much per ton, as paid by the imperial authorities in such cases. The Laurentian of the Allan Line may be engaged for carrying the remainder of the contingent on the same terms

France Not Asked to Intervene.

PARIS, Dec. 23.—The French Foreign Office denies the statement of the Paris correspondent of The Daily Mail of London that Dr. Leyds, the European representative of the Boers, has asked the services of M. Delcassé, the Minister of Foreign Affairs, in the cause of peace.

Buller Tents on the Old Camp Ground.

CHIEVELEY, Dec. 17.—The British Army is occupying its original camping ground. The Naval Brigade this morning fired a few shells at the Boer positions. The result is not known, but the firing is taken to show that the naval guns are able to command the Tugela Bridge.

Foreign Attaches Join Buller.

DURBAN, Dec. 17.—The Foreign Attachés have arrived here on their way to Gen. Buller's headquarters.

Ohio Sends Recruits to the Boers.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 23.—Thirty-five recruits for the Boer army were examined here to-day. Those who passed will be forwarded to-morrow. It is believed Dr. Leyds, the European representative of the Transvaal, is furnishing the means. The recruits will go from here to New York, and expect thence to go via Antwerp to Delagoa Bay.

British Lawyers Urged to Enlist.

LONDON, Dec. 23.—The exceedingly grave view taken in some quarters of the present crisis is evidenced by a circular signed by Attorney General Webster, Solicitor General Finlay, and Gen. Sir Evelyn Wood, Adjutant General to the Forces, to the effect that the present position of public affairs is so critical that, as a greater part of the regular forces will be required abroad, it becomes imperative, for the purpose of home defense, that the volunteers should be augmented, and urging that every member of the legal profession not debarred by age or paramount duty enroll himself as an active member of the Inns of Court or other volunteer corps.

FIVE MAINE ATTENDANTS QUIT.

Men from New York Refuse to Accompany the Hospital Ship When She Sails from London.

LONDON, Dec. 23.—The American hospital ship Maine sailed from the West India Docks for Cape Town at 2:30 o'clock this afternoon, minus five of the male assistants supplied from the New York hospitals. One of these men is said to have expected promotion to a non-commissioned officer's rank. He succeeded in enlisting four friends, who a moment before the ship sailed notified Major Cabelle of their refusal to go, saying one of their number was ill and they had determined to stay. Major Cabelle informed them that their friend had been left in good hands, and that there was no reason to desert. The men, however, made other complaints, whereupon Major Cabelle informed them that they had had plenty of time to consider this beforehand, but if they refused to go they must sign off the rolls and leave the ship. This the men did, and, standing on the dock, they shouted: "We are too good Americans to leave a sick friend here for any one."

As the incident occurrtd at the last moment, Major Cabelle had only time to say:

"These men came at the last minute to declare they would leave, making a general complaint of ill-treatment, which I am unable to fathom. Some of the papers called them 'orderlies,' which they seem inclined to resent.

"I have tried to pacify them, but their radical decision was reached at the last moment and left me no time to find a solution. Therefore, I had no choice but to accept their decision to leave and order them ashore. Their conduct certainly is unjustified."

Mr. Vanduzer, a member of the Executive Committee, said:

"Before the men left the ship Major Cabelle made them acknowledge they had broken their contract, and, though they will be paid to date, they will not receive their passage home. The assistant, who is sick, will have the best medical care and will be sent to New York at the committee's expense. The dispute was an incident which was known to only a few."

The Maine departed under favorable auspices. The Red Cross flag floated from her foremast, the Queen's ensign from her main and the Stars and Stripes from her mizzen.

Lady Randolph Churchill was in her stateroom, on the main deck. The room was filled with floral designs of the Maine and red crosses, while holly and mistletoe overhung the doorway. Mesdames Ronalds, Blow, Vanduzer, and others of the committee were present. The nurses, in blue capes and soft felt hats, and the surgeons in the newly designed semi-United States uniforms, added color to the scene.

Lady Churchill said:

"I know no better way to spend the Christmas than on an American hospital ship bound for South Africa. The Maine is splendidly equipped and worthy of her people and mission. I go, with a grateful heart to all who have so munificently aided the committee. I hope we may prove worthy of this sacred duty. Wherever the ship goes, I go."

The final signal for "All ashore" was followed by many handshakings and farewells, and as the Maine moved into the river, three cheers were given for the ship, then for Lady Churchill, and, finally, for the United States. Then those on board gave three cheers for the Union Jack, and the sailors on the surrounding craft cheered the United States as the white hull disappeared in the thickening fog.

The Maine will coal at Las Palmas, Canary Islands. She expects to reach the Cape in three weeks, and will return with her first consignment of wounded late in February.

T. C. Speer, one of the nurses who left the ship, said this evening:

"My grievance for leaving the Maine was that my comrade Green was lying sick at the Prince of Wales Hotel. He had been there for two days without medical attendance. When I reported the facts to Major Cabelle this afternoon he told me the American ladies would care for him, but I decided that I would not leave him.

"My comrades complain that Major Cabelle sent them to St. George's Barracks, with its damp walls, where we were treated as English privates, and they could not stand it. They were removed to the hotel, but they had no further confidence in Major Cabelle."

In conversation with the other nurses, it was gleaned that their main complaint was that they had signed as nurses, and considered themselves treated as private soldiers.

FLOUR SEIZURE INVESTIGATED.

United States May Demand Pay from Great Britain.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23.—The State Department has received from the Pennsylvania Milling Company of New York a statement of the facts touching the seizure of two cargoes of flour belonging to that concern bound for Portuguese ports in East Africa.

The seizures were made by British warships on the ground that the flour was intended for the Boers. The company's letter is a presentation of the case without protest, and is evidently intended to serve as a basis of a claim for pecuniary damages against the British Government. Following the established usage the State Department has set about the ascertainment of the facts, and to that end has called upon the Acting United States Consul at Lourenzo Marques to make investigation.

Also Ambassador Choate has been furnished with a copy of the statement made by the milling company, and it is not doubted that if the facts are as represented in the company's statement, and the goods were really seized when under consignment from one neutral port to another neutral port, prompt reparation will be made.

Kansas City Aids Soldiers' Families.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Dec. 23.—Subjects of Great Britain living in Kansas City have contributed $1,022 to the fund for the relief of the families of British soldiers fighting in South Africa. The contribution was remitted to-day to the Lord Mayor of London.

OOM PAUL DISMISSED JUDGE.

Visited His Wrath on the Official Who Favored an American.

A passenger on the St. Paul yesterday was R. E. Brown of Spokane, Washington, who holds a judgment against the Transvaal Republic for about $1,500,000. In speaking of the Boer war he said:

"Everybody seems to note the marked difference in the feeling in Europe to-day and that of six weeks ago, so far as the Continental nations are concerned. Although suppressed, the feeling is favorable to the Boers. Great Britain launched out into this war with an idea that the mere presence of a big force would win her battles.

"The Boers adopted the same artful tactics in opposing them as the Indians of the Far West employed in opposing the progress of the United States, except that they have been more humane. The consequence is they have been successful in a majority of the battles and skirmishes.

"The English have to maintain communications in a stretch of country 1,000 miles long, which is especially adapted to successful guerrilla warfare, and in some localities 100 men could hold out against 5,000. It is gradually dawning upon Great Britain that the foresight and sagacity of the leading men in the Transvaal are quite equal to all the similar machinations of officials in other commonwealths and kingdoms."

Mr. Brown bought a lot of land in the Transvaal and conformed with the laws there. The Volksraad then repealed the law under which he made his purchase. Brown sued, obtained judgment, and Oom Paul dismissed the Judge who rendered the decision in Brown's favor.

DR. MENDES FOR THE BRITISH.

Preacher Declares America's Sympathy Should Be with England—His Solution of War.

The Rev. Dr. H. Pereira Mendes, at the Spanish and Portuguese Synagogue, yesterday, preached on "The Solution of War; What the Defeat of England Would Mean for Anglo-American Civilization and Interests." Dr. Mendes advanced the theory of an international supreme court of arbitration, which, he said, would lead continually to the Bible as a "Solution of War." He said in part:

"Many are they who hope that Britain will be beaten. Germany and Russia see her punished for greed that bids her grasp for brave men's lands. They forget Poland, the land they robbed of her independence. France rejoices at England's distress; France the land of shame that earned the contempt of all who heard the word 'Dreyfus.' France, whose vile, obscene attacks on Britain's Queen, whose age as well as whose pure womanhood should protect her in the eyes of manly men—France rejoices at Britain's defeat.

"If England fights for land greed, no word will I say to defend her. But let France that robbed Italy of Nice 100 years ago, and again forty years ago; and Germany of Alsace and Lorraine 200 years ago; let Germany that robbed Austria of Silesia; let Austria which helped to rob Denmark of Schleswig-Holstein; let Russia, which has robbed Turkey as Turkey has robbed many a province; let the United States, whose page of Indian reading is not righteous—let all, I say, reflect, and each shall by its national conscience stand condemned.

"But America must not lose sight of this fact; that Britain beaten means an end to the supremacy of the English-speaking races; America alone cannot hope for successful expansion single-handed against Frank, Teuton, and Russ. But for England at Manila and elsewher complications most awkward for this country would have arisen.

"I claim that the hope of the world for human rights, human progress, and material progress depends upon the supremacy of the English-speaking races. Would you look for human rights and mankind's material progress to the Latin or the Frank, whose men have written hate and injustice, prejudice and obscenity as chief words on the pages of their history in the closing years of this century? Or would you look to Germany, where militarism is the curse? or to Russia, where Nihilism and Siberia tell the awful truths?

"Speak not of France's love for America over 100 years ago; it was less her love for us than her hate of England. I repeat this country must expand, but by legitimate means; but without her ally—allied by common language, by descent, by literature, by love for liberty and reverence for religion—without her natural ally, the British Empire, nor Frank nor Teuton nor Russ will hesitate to thwart her. Not less do the Boers deserve our honor. They are fighting for their independence. They may be narrow in their ideas of government, but narrowness is not a crime.

"Here, then we have two brave foes, each commanding sympathy, each touching the heartstrings of every good man and woman, because the echoes of this war are, as always, widows' cries, orphans' wailings, the anguish of wounded men, and the groans of men stricken with disease. Oh, the pity of it! Oh, the shame that the nineteenth century and men cannot find a way to avoid war and maintain peace with honor!

"As Americans we must regret this contest. As men and women we must lament it. But as Hebrews we say there is no need for it. We exclaim, 'O, thou sword, how long will it be ere thou be quiet! Put up thyself into thy scabbard, rest and be still.' And I speak to you that you may do your little toward influencing public opinion.

"There can be a supreme court of national arbitration, composed of the three senior Supreme Court Judges in each nation. Before such a tribunal let be summoned the nation about to draw the sword, and let the banded nations not be neutral, but declare war for or against the nation as the court of arbitration judges.

"You might say that even in such a court political entanglements might arise and bias the Judges. True; but it would lead to the Bible solution of war—the appointment of a supreme tribunal of the only nation in the world that will have its people in all lands and yet have political interests in none. I mean our own, the Jewish nation. When Palestine is once constituted a neutral and independent State, with the armies of the world pledged to enforce the decisions of its court of arbitration, then will the sword be quiet; then will it put itself in the scabbard; then will it rest and be still."

TO SUCCEED GEN. KITCHENER.

Gen. Wingate Made Sirdar and Governor General of the Soudan.

CAIRO, Dec. 23.—Gen. Wingate has succeeded Gen. Kitchener as Sirdar and Governor General of the Soudan.

The career of Gen. Wingate, both as soldier and diplomatist, has been a most distinguished one, and the fact that nearly all the active service he has seen has been in Egypt and in the Soudan, while the greater part of his life has been passed as an officer in the Egyptian army, makes him peculiarly suitable to succeed Lord Kitchener as Sirdar.

Sir Francis Reginald Wingate, Knight Commander of St. Michael and St. George, Companion of the Bath, and the holder of a large number of other orders and decorations, both Turkish and British, was born in Renfrewshire, Scotland, about fifty years ago. He was educated at a private school in the Island of Jersey, and afterward entered the Royal Military College at Woolwich. In 1889 he became a Lieutenant in the Royal Artillery, and from 1881 to 1883 served in India and Aden. In 1883 he was attached to the Egyptian army, and did his full share in forming good fighting men out of the rough material to his hand. In the Nile expedition of 1884 he was aide de camp to Gen. Sir Evelyn Wood, and received a medal and a decoration from the Sultan in acknowledgment of his bravery in action. He was also frequently mentioned in dispatches to the War Office.

After a short period at home, Gen. Wingate rejoined the Egyptian army in 1886. He was present at most of the battles which were fought between 1889 and 1891, gaining special credit for the part he took in the recapture of Tokar. He acted as Governor of the Red Sea littoral in 1894, and in 1897 was appointed a member of the special commission, under the Hon. Rennell Rodd, to Menelik, Negus of Abyssinia. He was a most efficient assistant to Lord Kitchener in the operations which resulted in the taking of Khartoum last year.

Gen. Wingate is an aide de camp to the Queen. He has written a number of well known books on the Soudan, among them being "Ten Years' Captivity in the Mahdi's Camp." He translated and edited Slatin Pasha's "Fire and Sword in the Soudan."

Funeral of James D. Taylor.

The funeral of James Duane Taylor, Secretary and Treasurer of the Wagner Palace Car Company, who committed suicide by cutting his throat at a hotel in Washington Thursday, was held at his home, 352 Madison Avenue, last evening, and was attended by a large number of prominent officials of the New York Central and Wagner Companies. The services were conducted by the Rev. Dr. Donald Sage Mackay and the Rev. Dr. Edward B. Coe. A number of floral pieces were sent by William K. Vanderbilt, Commodore Van Santvoord, and by the officials and employes of the Wagner Company, and others. The body will be taken on a special train this morning to Palatine Bridge, where another service will be held. The interment will be in the Wagner plot at Palatine Bridge.

FUGITIVE OFFICIAL A SUICIDE.

South Dakota Defaulting County Treasurer Dead at St. Louis.

ST. LOUIS, Dec. 23.—A. W. Peterson, County Treasurer of Yankton County, South Dakota, who fled from Yankton, charged with being short in his accounts, has committed suicide here by plunging into the Mississippi River. Deckhands on the fireboat Alice Church found the body floating in the river to-day. It has been in the water apparently only a very short time.

A dispatch from Yankton, S. D., says that Peterson has been missing from there since Nov. 16.

ACTOR'S DRAMATIC SUICIDE

Clark Tried to Kill His Wife—Failing, Shot Himself.

HOLIDAY CROWDS SAW HIM DIE

Tragedy Occurred at Fifth Avenue and Twenty-third Street—The Bullets Grazed Mrs. Clark's Head.

The holiday crowds surging past the always busy corner of Fifth Avenue and Twenty-third Street, in one continuous kaleidoscopic, cosmopolitan parade, were startled just after 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon by the sudden advent of death. Above the tramp of hurrying feet, the clanging of loaded cable cars a buzz of shoppers' chatter, and the hoarse cries of street vendors, they heard three pistol shots discharged rapidly. A woman's scream broke on the air at once, and those who turned their heads saw a huge blue-coated figure rushing from the middle of the street and catch by the shoulders a man in citizens' clothes just as another shot rang out. They saw the man in citizens' clothes drop like a log at the instant on his face, his hand still clutching a smoking pistol, and the bluecoated man kneel on his body, while a thin stream of red trickled out from below the prostrate head, and they realized then that a tragedy had taken place.

The whole affair took but a few seconds. Willis Clark, a variety actor out of work, had fired three shots at his wife, and, missing her, had sent a fatal bullet crashing through his mouth up into his brain. By rare good fortune his first three shots had hit no one, though the marks of powder burn about his wife's right eye showed how closely death had passed her, and the only price paid for his shooting was his own unhappy life. He died before an ambulance could reach him and without recovering consciousness

Mrs. Kate Clark, whom her husband had tried to take with him in ending his own life, had long been in fear of him, and thinks his act was partly due to an unbalanced mind. She had their ten-year-old daughter, Dollie, with her when he fired, and some of the bystanders thought one shot was aimed at the child. But no one knows whether or not he meant to kill the little one, too. He had for weeks been brooding on the ill-fortune which kept them penniless, and struggling as well with the haunting fear that he was going blind, and so he determined that another Christmas should not pass and find his wife and him still making the old hopeless fight. And he picked out the busiest spot in the territory traversed by the Christmas shoppers, and a time when the crowd was thickest, to end the whole business in a minute.

HAD BEEN OUT OF WORK.

Clark, who used to write songs as well as act, had been out of work for five months, his last engagement being at Sam T. Jack's Theatre. He was living with his wife and child at Mme. Matilda Hoeree's boarding house, 46 West Twenty-fourth Street, and he left his family to make some money in Chicago after work failed here. He returned on Dec. 10, after a fruitless trip, and Mme. Hoeree told him that unless he paid the sum of $103 which he owed her for rent, he could not stay in her house His wife was getting a little money from a relative and was allowed to stay with the child, and Clark sought other quarters.

Yesterday morning Mrs. Clark got a letter from her husband, asking her to meet him at 1:30 o'clock at Bode's Raines law hotel, at Twenty-fourth Street and Sixth Avenue, where he was staying, as he had some important things to tell her. So she dressed Dollie and herself and set out, determined to keep the appointment. After the meeting they strolled up Sixth Avenue a way, gazing at the gay shop windows and the bustling throng of light-hearted purchasers who carried Christmas in their minds and on their faces, and then Clark said: "Come on, Kitty; let's get out of this street. We'll turn back and go over on Broadway. We don't want to buy anything."

His wife consented and they turned their steps idly southward with Dollie stealing glances now and then at the brilliant and wonderful toys that were made for other children. When they reached Twenty-fourth Street they turned east and walked by the house from which the husband had been turned, in gloomy silence. At Broadway Clark wanted to turn south again, and they began to make their way through the thick, ever-moving crowd that passed the entrance to the Fifth Avenue Hotel. They got by the hotel at last and Clark paused, just in front of the Second National Bank, on the northwest corner of Fifth Avenue and Twenty-third Street. He turned facing his wife, who held their daughter by the hand and stood nearer the curb than he. There was a continual procession of people of all sorts and ages just behind her, and hansoms and other traps moving in the street, with cable cars making slow progress.

"Wait here a minute," said Clark.

His hand was fumbling in his pocket as he spoke, and his wife eyed him with a narrow glance, and the words, "What's the use of stopping here?" on her lips, while little Dollie looked up curiously into his face.

TRIES MURDER IN VAIN.

Suddenly a trembling hand came out of his pocket with a bulldog revolver in it which his wife had seen before. He turned it toward her face and blazed wildly away twice. At the first shot he held the pistol so close that the powder burned the flesh about her right eye, but the bullet missed her. The second shot went through her hat. Then with a terrified scream she ran toward the curb, dragging the child with her as fast as she could through the crowd. As she went, Clark fired again. It is thought that this shot was meant for the child. But none of the shots hit the wife or child or any of the passersby.

Patrolman Frederick Schlotman of the Broadway squad, who had been standing for hours in the middle of the Twenty-third street crossing a few yards away, had heard the shots, and in an instant he left his post to seize the man before he fired again. Schlotman is a big man, and he came through with a rush that made even the terrified bystanders scatter. He reached Clark from behind, and just as he grasped his shoulders, Clark fired the fourth bullet into his own mouth and fell forward close by the railing that skirts the bank, his right hand spreading out on the sidewalk and still holding the weapon. The policeman dropped excitedly down upon the prostrate man, and as he sat there, took away the pistol, while the crowd began to gather.

Clark never moved. An amulance was sent for, but before it arrived he was dead.

Schlotman said that he noticed a colored boy just before he reached Clark himself, apparently trying to get the pistol away from him, and that the boy ought to get credit for it. This lad was also noticed by others, but he disappeared in the crowd and could not be found again.

The excitement caused by Clark's act was intense, and the corner was soon packed with a struggling mass of people, morbidly attracted by the gruesome spectacle. They came from all directions, and the policemen from adjacent posts who hurried to the scene could not keep away the curious who pressed eagerly in, asking, "Is he dead?"

Capt. Price of the West Thirtieth Street Station was about on Twenty-third Street in citizen's clothes, as was one of his detectives, and they made their appearance promptly. A patrol wagon took Clark's body to the West Thirtieth Street Station, but while it rested there under a canvas the policemen had great difficulty in keeping the crowd, which had fairly swelled to thousands, moving.

KNEW HE WOULD KILL HIMSELF.

Schlotman meanwhile walked up to the station with Mrs. Clark and her child, and she said to him as they went: "Oh, I knew he'd do this some day. I knew he'd do it. He has often threatened to kill me, and shoved his pistol in my face."

Mrs. Clark staid an hour or so in the station house, where she learned that her husband's body would be taken to the Morgue. Her daughter was not at all stunned by the tragedy, and told the story of the shooting tearfully, however, to the Sergeant without hesitation. Mrs. Clark's nerves were eventually quieted, and she went home.

She is a fairly good-looking woman, though her face shows signs of worry. She is thirty-two years old. She was plainly but neatly dressed and so was her child, who is uncommonly pretty and bright-looking. The mother seemed rather relieved than otherwise that her husband would not cause her trouble again, and heartily thankful that she and her child had escaped. She did not hesitate to speak of Clark as a villain, and said he had not given her any money or treated her rightly.

Mrs. Clark said that her husband's act was not attributable to jealousy, but that she laid it to his being out of his head.

"His mother," she said, "told me before our marriage, twelve years ago in Cincinnati, that he was not perfectly sane, and she knew he had had a long illness, which affected his mind. Then, too, his eyes were bad, you know, and that weighed on him. He hasn't been giving me money for a long time, and my brother-in-law, William Nevitt, of Kenton, Ohio, has sent some to me.

"My husband came a week ago last Wednesday to the boarding house where I stay and called me out on the steps. 'I have come up here to shoot you,' he said, and pointed his revolver at me. Then he went away. But I was afraid he meant to kill me.

"I have been taking care of my child, and yesterday he sent a Gerry agent to the house to take the child away from me. The Gerry agent refused to do so, when he saw that I could provide for it. I had no misgivings when I went to meet my husband at Bode's, for I thought he had found employment."

Mrs. Clark said she would probably have to go somewhere to work, but didn't know just what she would do. She was asked whether she could bury her husband.

"The Actors' Fund will look out for that," said she.

Clark, who was forty-two years old, was formerly a member of the variety team of Emmons and Clark. They worked with the two Dalys, Thomas and William. He also wrote jokes for minstrels and comedians, and had them accepted by well-known performers. Lately he published a little periodical called "Willis Clark's Joke Book." It was issued monthly for two months, and he then decided to issue it quarterly. The book had some circulation among vaudeville actors. Clark was well known among them. It was to advertise this book in the West that he went to Chicago three months ago.

The letter which Clark sent to his wife yesterday morning, in which he said he was able to provide for her, was shown by her to the landlady, Mme. Hoeree, and she advised Mrs Clark to live with her husband if he could support her. Mme. Hoeree says Mrs. Clark left the house weeping and speaking of the revolver she knew her husband carried.

Capt. Price said that in all his experience he had never seen such a dramatic attempt at murder as Clark's act.

Laborer Loses Both Hands.

Rugile Contoe, twenty-four years old, an Italian laborer working on the Jerome Park reservoir construction, had both his hands crushed, his leg broken, and was internally injured by the breaking of a derrick and the falling of a rock upon him yesterday afternoon. He was taken to Fordham Hospital, where both his hands were amputated. He will live.

THE BIG CITY BUYS GIFTS

Christmas Shoppers Break a Record in New York.

PROSPERITY'S HAPPY EFFECTS

Moving Pictures of Life in the Street and in Stores for Many Days.

New York, bent upon shopping, went down town yesterday morning empty-handed. It returned at intervals during the day and evening full-laden with more varieties of things than a generation ago were dreamed of for the good cheer of the Christmastide, conscious, indeed, that another pleasant duty was done, albeit at the expense of an empty purse.

Probably the happiest people in the city last night from one to two hours before midnight were the young men and women employed in stores and shops that have held nightly sessions to accommodate the multitude. At closing time yesterday these clerks breathed a sigh of relief, conscious that there were two days of rest before them after long days and nights of weary work catering to the caprices of those who buy.

Judging from the crowds that for two weeks have lined Sixth Avenue from Fourteenth to Twenty-third Street, Fourteenth and Twenty-third Streets, from Broadway to Sixth Avenue, and other spots at intervals, Christmas this year in its giving will go far ahead of many former years. Prosperity as struck strong and deep, and you may see the result of it almost everywhere, so, at least, say the shopkeepers, who judge by the sum total of receipts more than by the fluctuations of the crowds which this year seem to have come from all over.

Variety there has been in Christmas giving always. But there is more variety now where, for instance, one class of goods is concerned, than ever before—mechanical toys, the kind that get in everybody's way on the crowded sidewalks. In the living show of the streets the itinerant vendors of these run considerable opposition to the merchants of pretension, sheltered behind brick, stone, and iron. The toys are a never-failing source of interest to those who would naturally be expected to pass them by—the real, genuine, Simon Pure New Yorker, for what biped is more curious than the Simon Pure New Yorker?

"He doesn't exist," said a countryman from New Jersey yesterday. "The New Yorker is worse than a hayseed when it comes to blocking up the streets watching a sight that none but a child would be expected to be interested in."

So it was yesterday and the days before yesterday along dozens of thoroughfares, especially in Fourteenth Street, the home of the vendor.

"Here's your flying 'paraquet' for 15 cents!" yelled in strident tones a man whose nightly habitat is the Bowery. "Newest thing in the market."

"Come, buy the running seal!" yelled his neighbor. "He's a daisy, and won't break."

"Here's the old reliable running mouse," floats out over the crowd. "He'll scare your aunt and mother-in-law, and do it up brown." And suiting the action to the word the vendor wickedly lets go the toy, whereat a vigorous old lady comes along, sets her poor squared down, the thing mechanical goes squat, lifeless on the sidewalk, and the old lady goes on, with "Drat the thing!" leaving the vendor making imprecations.

"Confound those people," said he; "that's the third one smashed and only five sold to-day."

Inside the stores crowds surged all day yesterday to closing time in greater variety than on any previous day, and as the hours wore away to lamplight and beyond, others released from toil joined in until the marts became a packed mass of humanity, solid as a flying wedge.

"Well, this Christmas business isn't any fun at all," moaned a woman with a crying baby in a Sixth Avenue store. "Here I've been for half an hour and I can't get one way or t'other, and me having to get home to cook the supper, and me arms broke."

One of the prettiest sights, probably, that any shopper witnessed yesterday was that of a little girl in a big department store. She was accompanied by a big man, roughly dressed, just as intent as she on the work in hand.

"Now, let's see," said the child, at the handkerchief counter. "There's something for 25 cents for mamma and something for 25 cents for sister and something for 10 cents for the baby. That's how much, Billie?"

"Billie," whoever he was, was the strong protector. He forgot the interested crowd of women shoppers around, who looked on with deep, sympathetic interest. "Billie" said it was 40 cents.

It took the child just fifteen minutes to buy a handkerchief for her mother, and no one about—not even the saleswoman—begrudged the time lost in watching her.

"Now, mamma will like that," she observed, looking up into Billie's eyes. "Now, don't you tell her, Billie, will you?"

Billie made a solemn promise as they moved off to spend the rest of that 00 cents.

"Poor little thing!" a well-dressed woman exclaimed. "Just think. Sixty cents for Christmas!"

Then those near by saw this woman follow the pair down the aisle and stop them. The woman handed a bill to the child, who looked up with wide-open eyes, and presently a voice, accompanied by a childish clapping of hands, in delight shouted, "Oh, thank you! What a good Christmas we'll have now!"

And so went the moving pictures of Christmastide buying.

CHRISTMAS FOR THE POOR.

Plans of Charity in Providing Dinners and Entertainments for Children and Destitute Persons.

To-day and to-morrow will be busy ones for the many charitable societies in the greater city. Dinners and presents will be given to the poor, and entertainments will be provided for their pleasure that will strike fleeting rays of happiness into many dark places. The greater number of entertainments will be given to-morrow, although several celebrations will be held to-night.

The Hungarian Literary Society will hold its annual Christmas tree festival at the club rooms, 9 East Eighth Street, at 8 o'clock P. M. Gifts of clothing, toys, and food will be distributed to several hundred poor children. At Tony Pastor's Theatre and Tammany Hall will be held the annual stage children's festival, for poor child-actors and the children of poor actors. Clothing and other presents, unique in that they are selected beforehand by the children who write letters telling what they want, will be distributed. At 8 o'clock in the evening there will be a vaudeville entertainment in Tony Pastor's Theatre at which only children will act. After the performance dinner will be served in Tammany Hall. Then will come the Christmas tree celebration. A dance will close the festivities.

At the Five Points House of Industry, 155 Worth Street, to-day the usual services will be supplemented by a programme of Christmas carols sung by the children. At the Bowery Mission and Young Men's Home there will be a special Christmas Eve service.

The Salvation Army will dispense charity all day to-morrow at the Madison Square Garden. At 11 o'clock uncooked dinners in 3,200 baskets, each containing provisions for five persons, will be distributed to poor families. At 6 o'clock P. M. dinner will be served to 4,000 persons in the Garden. A musical entertainment and cinematograph exhibition of the Passion Play will follow the dinner. In Brooklyn an entertainment on a large scale has been planned for destitute children of that borough by the Brooklyn Christmas Tree Society. The Grand Opera House, with the Park Theatre for all overflow, will be the scene of a vaudeville entertainment and a distribution of presents to the children from 10 o'clock A. M. until 2 o'clock P. M. Dinner will be served, under the auspices of the Salvation Army. All the surface car lines will carry the children to and from the scenes of the festivities free.

The entertainments which have been provided for the destitute little ones are many. The Tough Club will hold a "Young Folks' Christmas Festival" at its clubrooms, 27 Grove Street, from 1 o'clock P. M. to 4 o'clock P. M., to-morrow afternoon. Only children will be admitted during those hours. In Brooklyn the distribution of Christmas gifts by the Immaculate Conception Day Nurseries, which begins at 3 o'clock this afternoon at the mother house, 117 Sands Street, will be continued Tuesday afternoon at the Italian Mission School, at the West Ninth Street School Wednesday afternoon, and at Branch No. 4, 866 Pacific Street, Saturday evening. In addition to toys and candies, each child will receive a new suit of clothes and pair of shoes.

The newsboys will enjoy free dinners to-morrow at several points in this borough. President Frank Tilford of the Bank of New Amsterdam is the donor of a large dinner for the up-town lads, which will be served at 1 o'clock P. M. to-morrow in Lyric Hall. William M. Fliess will give his annual dinner for newsboys at 7 o'clock P. M. in the Brace Memorial Lodging House, and V. Bonry of 814 Manhattan Avenue will serve the boys a Christmas feast from noon until 4 o'clock.

Destitute and homeless men will also be cared for. At the McAuley Water Street Mission a Christmas dinner will be served to nearly 600 of these unfortunates. The T. D. Sullivan Association has invited several hundred voters who live in Bowery lodging houses to a dinner at the Metamora Clubrooms, which will be served from noon to 2 o'clock P. M. At the Bowery Mission and Young Men's Home, Christmas gifts will be distributed to men at 8 o'clock A. M., a Christmas tree entertainment for poor children will be held at 2 o'clock P. M., and there will be a special evening service for men. Of a somewhat different character will be the Christmas celebration arranged by the associate members of the People's Institute, which will be held to-morrow evening at the Cooper Union.

An unusual Christmas entertainment has been arranged for the convicts at Sing Sing Prison. Cleveland Moffett will deliver his lecture on the Tissot paintings of the life of Christ at noon to-morrow in the prison chapel, which will be especially darkened for that purpose.

At all the county institutions Christmas will be celebrated in the usual manner by a special dinner, and the distribution of presents to the children who are inmates. At many of the hospitals, also, special entertainments have been arranged. At St. Mark's Hospital there will be a Christmas celebration at 4 o'clock to-morrow afternoon under the auspices of the House Committee. A Christmas tree entertainment will also be given at 3:30 o'clock P. M. at the New York Orthopoedic Dispensary and Hospital. At the New York Hospital, Christmas will be celebrated Tuesday evening. A Christmas tree will be lighted in the children's ward at 8 o'clock P. M., and the adults' ward will be lighted from 9:15 o'clock P. M. to 9:45 o'clock P. M.

At the churches there will be the usual Christmas services to-day. Elaborate special programmes of music have been arranged for many of them. At St. James's Methodist Episcopal Church, the "Messiah" will be sung to-night under the leadership of Paul Andrews. At St. Patrick's Cathedral, the pontifical mass will be celebrated to-morrow.

FESTIVITIES OF BROKERS.

Consolidated Stock and Petroleum Exchange Remembers Christmas.

The members of the Consolidated Stock and Pretoleum Exchange had their annual Christmas festivities on the floor yesterday afternoon. It was a jolly affair, and everything passed off as though none of the brokers had suffered in the recent bear pinch. Many of the members had invited their families to witness the celebration, and the gallery was crowded with well-dressed women.

After music by the Eighth Regiment Band there was singing by the Metropolitan Quartet; "A Trip to Chinatown," by J. W. Duff, assisted by the entire company; buck and wing dancing, a darkey song, "Darktown Is Out To-night," by James Lipsey and Anna Hamer, and a grand cake walk, with James Burns as Drum Major, and several famous walkers, including James Lipsey and Miss Blanche Dixon, Harry Bill and Miss Jennie Allen, W. H. Hamer and wife, and "Jack" Brown and Miss Emma Moxley.

EXCHANGE EMPLOYES' FUND.

Panicky Conditions Have No Effect on Brokers' Subscriptions.

In accordance with the time-honored custom of the New York Stock Exchange, the 200 employes, representing all grades, received a Christmas gift apiece yesterday, each getting a share, apportioned according to the length of his service and his salary, of $7,200 collected by subscription from the members of the Exchange.

Notwithstanding the exciting time of the last week in the market, during which the collecting had been done, the amount was about the same as in former years. The committee, consisting of A. H. De Haven, W. R. White, and William Weever, was the same that has had charge of the collecting of the Christmas subscription for years.

All the employes of the Exchange were summoned at the close of business yesterday and each was presented with an envelope containing his share of the fund. The brokers then gave them a cheer in addition. The employes cheered in return by way of thanks.

BIG INCOMING FOREIGN MAIL.

Christmas Increases the Labors of Post Office Clerks Here.

The outgoing foreign mails have resumed their normal size, but the incoming steamers are piling much additional work on the Post Office clerks. The Campania, which came in yesterday, brought 92,000 letters and a proportionate number of Christmas packages.

It is estimated by General Superintendent Joseph Elliott of the Money Order Division that the total amount of business in his division this year will reach $152,000,000, against $123,000,000 for this city last year.

Postmaster Van Cott announced yesterday that there will be a delivery at 8 o'clock Christmas morning in the wholesale district of Manhattan, and also in the Bronx. The usual first and second deliveries will be made in Manhattan's residential districts.

LARGE GIFT FOR PENNSYLVANIA.

Sum of $250,000 Presented to the University for Christmas.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 23.—The University of Pennsylvania announced a few weeks ago a gift of $250,000 for a new Laboratory of Physics. The Provost of the university announced to-day as a Christmas gift another subscription of $250,000. Of this sum $200,000 has been contributed without any restriction as to its use by the Trustees. But $50,000 is devoted toward the new dormitory buildings, now in course of erection.

This addition to the dormitory system, which will be completed by Aug. 1, 1900, involves an outlay of $240,000, and affords dormitory room for 175 additional students.

MRS. HOWARD GOULD'S TREE.

One Hundred Children Showered with Its Christmas Gifts.

Mrs. Howard Gould, in the drawing room of the Tuxedo, Madison Avenue and Fifty-ninth Street, yesterday afternoon gave to about one hundred children from the east side a realization of their wildest hopes of Christmas. It was a Christmas tree, a colossal one, decked with tinsel, so that the wide boughs stooped to its weight. It held, also, substantial gifts, and the floor for a wide space around the tree was covered with toys of all descriptions and other things better than toys.

The children came up early in the afternoon on electric cars. They were under the guardianship of Mrs. Lucy Bainbridge and her assistants of the City Mission. Every child was warmly clothed and looked as if the world had not dealt so badly with it. Mrs. Gould welcomed every one of her little guests and was assisted in looking out for them by Mrs. C. N. Kirkpatrick, Mrs. Le Roy Baldwin, and Mrs. E. W. Selis. Howard Gould was also present to assist his wife.

After the children were assembled the Rev. W. Merle Smith told the children the story of Tiny Tim and other Christmas tales. Then the little ones were taken into an adjoining room, where a Punch and Judy show and a sleight-of-hand performance were given.

Mrs. Gould and her friends and servants brought to the children sandwiches and cakes and cups of hot chocolate.

When it came to stripping the tree every girl got the material for a new dress—cloth, linings, buttons, and even the needles and thread. The boys got heavy woolen sweaters and a pair of shoes. The boys got also miniature steam cars, and every sort of toy, and the girls got mirrors and perfumes. As the children filed into the street each got a toy bank with a bright silver quarter in it. As a change after the street cars, they went home in omnibuses.

Crippled Children's Happy Day.

An entertainment for crippled children was held yesterday at the Sixty-third Street Industrial School of the Children's Aid Society. All of the children who were well enough came out yesterday and attended the exercises. Mrs. Arthur Elliot Fish, President of the Women's Auxiliary, had general charge of the affair. There was an exhibition of the phonograph, under the direction of Miss Florence Guernsey, and a general entertainment, arranged by the Junior Auxiliary, of which Miss Catherine Halsted is the President. There was also a very long stocking for each member of the school, filled with gifts. The school is under the direction of Miss May Darrash, the teacher, and Miss Maria G. Robinson, the trained nurse. It is absolutely non-sectarian, and it knows no race or color line. The members of the school who are now in the hospital had their gifts sent to them. Next Saturday there will be a New Year's dinner at the school.

Christmas in Sing Sing Prison.

SING SING, N. Y., Dec. 23.—The convicts at Sing Sing Prison are to fare well on Christmas Day. They will have a breakfast of fricassee chicken, for which 1,700 pounds of poultry will be used, more than a pound for each man, as there are less than 1,300 convicts in the institution. After this they will march to the Protestant chapel, where they will be entertained by a minstrel performance of "home talent." After the performance the men will get crackers, apples, and cigars to take to their cells, as they will be locked up for the remainder of the day. Hundreds of Christmas boxes have been received by the convicts from their homes. They contained chickens and turkeys already roasted, plum puddings, cakes, apples, pipes, tobacco, underclothing, &c.

Gifts for Soldiers' Families.

WILLETS POINT, L. I., Dec. 23.—The wives and children of the members of Companies A and B, United States Engineers, who are living at the army post here, will spend a merry Christmas while their husbands and fathers are fighting in Manila. The outlook for Christmas was not bright until Major John C. Knight, the post commander, suggested an entertainment to-night for their benefit. A large Christmas tree stood in the centre of the post amusement hall, and everybody present with a relative in the Philippines received a present—the wives checks for a family dinner and the children toys and games.

Rush of Christmas Travel.

Never in the history of the railroads in this vicinity has the rush of Christmas travel been so great as this year. For the past few days the officials of the various railroads and ferry companies have been taxed to their utmost to provide facilities for the many passengers, and extra cars have been kept in readiness to accommodate the visitors who are coming and going. Every train on the New York Central, Pennsylvania, Erie, West Shore, Jersey Central, and the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western has been packed with passengers.

A White Christmas in Berlin.

BERLIN, Dec. 23.—Crisp, cold, white Christmas weather prevails here. The Spree is frozen solid, the big Mueggelsee is alive with skaters, and everybody is busy with preparations for Christmas. Business is brisk, and many novelties are exhibited in the stores. Unfortunately, there is a scarcity of Christmas trees, owing to the deep snow in the Hartz Mountains and everywhere.

Gifts for an Ohio University.

CLEVELAND, Ohio, Dec. 23.—H. M. Hanna of this city has given $12,000 to found a chair of medical jurisprudence in the Medical College of the Western Reserve University. Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Mather have given $12,000 to the university for immediate use in the purchase of books for its library.

NEWS OF THE RAILROADS.

MONONGAHELA RIVER ROAD SOLD.

Acquired by the Baltimore and Ohio for $6,000,000.

BALTIMORE, Dec. 23.—An important railroad deal which has been pending for some time was concluded yesterday at the Carrollton Hotel, when the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad Company purchased for cash the Monongahela River Railroad. Possession of the new property will pass in April next. The road is said to have cost $2,000,000 ten years ago, and the price paid is reported to have been $6,000,000.

Ex-Senator Johnson N. Camden and his associates, who owned the railroad, made the sale. The road was built by the ex-Senator, who was the chief owner of the property, as well as of the extensive coal interests of the Monongahela Company, which was affiliated with the railroad. In the sale to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad the Monongahela Company retains the coal interests, which include over 20,000 acres of coal lands situated in the Fairmont and Monongahela districts of West Virginia. The effect of this deal is to turn over to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad the transportation business in this territory and to divorce this interest from the business of coal mining.

The railroad runs from Fairmont to Clarksburg, and connects with the line of the Baltimore and Ohio system running to Chicago. It is built along the face of the nine-foot Pittsburg coal vein, and through its connections at either end possesses exceptional facilities for reaching the markets of the East and the West.

SHIPPERS FORM ASSOCIATIONS.

Chicago Plan to Fight Advances in Rates on Eastern Roads.

CHICAGO, Dec. 23.—Merchants and shippers here have started a movement which they expect will force the railroads, especially the Eastern roads, to desist from what the shippers term their extortionate practices and compel them to make what the shippers regard as fair and reasonable rates. The advances lately made by the Eastern roads are considered so great as to threaten serious injury to commercial interests.

Not much relief is expected from the Inter-State Commerce Commission, with which complaints have been filed, and steps are being taken, therefore, to bring about the formation of local and State protective associations. Out of these will be formed a National association of merchants and shippers for the protection of their interests.

Passenger Commissions Abolished.

CHICAGO, Dec. 23.—All of the roads eastbound from Chicago have signed an agreement not to pay commissions on any kind of tickets sold over those lines after Jan. 1. The Michigan Central is a party to the agreement, with the provison that it reserves the right to retire from the compact as soon as it discovers any of its competitors breaking the agreement.

DEWEY AT RETIREMENT AGE.

Will Remain in the Navy, However, Under the Law Advancing Him.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23.—Admiral George Dewey will be sixty-two years of age next Tuesday, and under the ordinary process of law would be placed on the retired list on that account. The special law under which he was advanced to the head of the navy makes no provision for his retirement, and therefore he will continue on the active list of the navy, in all probability, until his death.

As a matter of fact, his retirement would make no material change in his existing status. His pay would be the same on the retired as on the active list, and he would be entitled to the same emoluments and privileges, including a private secretary with the rank of Lieutenant and the usual number of aides. The recent death of Lieut. Brumby leaves a vacancy on his staff, for which there is considerable friendly competition among the young officers of the navy.

Admiral and Mrs. Dewey spent some time at the Navy Department to-day visiting friends in the various bureaus.

SUPPOSED SALVE EXPLODES.

Man Who Tried to Open the Box with a Hammer Is Badly Hurt.

Special to The New York Times.

DANBURY, Conn., Dec. 23.—While endeavoring to open what he thought was a box of salve this morning, Henry L. Wildman, an elderly and prominent citizen of Danbury, was seriously hurt. The cover of the box did not come off as readily as expected, and Mr. Wildman tried to pry it off with a knife. This had no effect, so, picking up a hammer, Mr. Wildman laid the tin box on a table and started to pound it. This treatment was more effective than Mr. Wildman anticipated. At the first blow there was a loud explosion. Mr. Wildman was hurled to the corner of the room, ten feet away. His face was battered by the concussion, one of his eyes was so badly injured that the sight may be lost, and his left hand was mangled by the flying tin. A large hole was torn in the ceiling directly over the spot where Mr. Wildman had been standing, and every window in the room was shattered.

What the box contained is not known. It had been standing in the cupboard for ten years, and nobody remembers where it came from.

FUN IN CURRENCY DEBATE

Humor and Poetry Called to the Aid of Many Speakers.

QUOTATIONS TRITE AND APT

Mr. Cushman of Washington While Striving to be Serious Proves to be a Wit—Has a Joke at Mr. Bryan's Expense.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 2.—There was plenty of wit and humor in the debate on the Currency Bill.

One of the first outbreaks of this nature was made by Mr. Cox of Tennessee. Mr. Linney of North Carolina had the floor, and was ridiculing the claim of the Democrats that the bill was being jammed through. He said the question had been fully discussed for twenty years.

"It is said," exclaimed Mr. Linney, "that man changes his entire being every seven years—the nails, and every particle, every tooth in him, and every hair upon his head is turned to something else. Seven into twenty-six goes three and nearly four times. Over three generations, taking the measure of that length of time, have been spending their energies and the best part of their life in discussing this great question."

Mr. Cox broke in on Linney's speech and read an extract from a speech made by the latter in the Fifty-fifth Congress, in which Linney argued that bonds might be legally and morally paid in silver.

"Has the gentleman shed his toenails since he made that speech?" asked Mr. Cox amid great laughter.

Cushman of Washington in his maiden speech established a reputation as a humorist, much to his subsequent regret. He has a reputation as a humorous stump speaker, but he intended to be serious in his first speech in the House. He was replying to De Armond, and was soon firing epigrams like this at the Democrats:

"In 1892 the American people were so busy making money that they did not have time to think. They voted a Democratic Administration into power, and then they had plenty of time to think."

He succeeded in irritating the Democrats beyond measure by this reference to Mr. Bryan:

"I lived out in Nebraska a number of years ago, and I know him. Yes, Mr. Chairman, I know him as well as if I had been through him with a lantern."

Several Democrats attempted to reply to this sarcasm, but the only one who succeeded in arousing a laugh was Robinson of Nebraska, who said: "Why, the gentleman from Washington is so small compared with the man he assails that his 'going through Mr. Bryan with a lantern' could be likened only to a lightning bug wandering through the vast recesses of the mighty Mammoth Cave of Kentucky."

Cushman closed his speech, not with an eloquent peroration as he had intended, but with the following impressive apostrophe to the Democrats: "The trouble with the immortal William Jennings Bryan and with most of you gentlemen on the other side is that in your arguments you are so crooked you cannot walk around the block without meeting yourselves on the other side."

While John F. Lacey of Iowa was speaking he got into a colloquy with John Wesley Gaines on the subject of prosperity. He finally got Gaines to admit that the latter's section of the country was fairly prosperous, and commented on the confession thus:

"My friend thinks that his part of the country is doing well, but wants to do better. Let me recall the epitaph on the tombstone of one who tried experiments in life. It read: 'I was well, but wanted to be better. I took physic; now I am here.'"

BRYAN'S TWINS IN VERSE.

Mr. Gibson of Tennessee recalled Bryan's twins, silver and wheat, and said:

"But lo! since Bryan's defeat wheat and silver have had a fearful quarrel, and wheat has taken one end of the road, while silver has taken the other, and now they are far apart and divorced from bed and board, if not absolutely. They seem to have turned their backs upon each other forever. How sad! Wheat seems to have said to silver:

"Go, false one, go; I'd rather make
My bower upon some icy lake,
Where thawing suns begin to shine,
Than trust to love so false as thine.

"And silver seems to have said to wheat:

"Had we never loved so kindly,
Had we never loved so blindly—
Never met or never parted,
We had ne'er been broken hearted."

He scored the Democrats for their faith in Bryan, and said that the party's abject devotion to the Nebraskan reminded him of the implicit faith in her mother of the little girl who said, "It is so, because my mother says it is so; and what my mother says is so is so, even if it ain't so."

Mr. Dolliver of Iowa was explaining that the United States was now on the gold standard, when he was interrupted by a Democrat, who asked: "If we are now on the gold standard, what is the necessity of this bill?"

"Well," replied Dolliver, "the necessity for this bill arises from the fact that, notwithstanding we are on the gold standard and have been for more than two generations, there are some of the boys on your side that have not heard of it yet."

By the time their turn had come to speak, a number of Republicans had been embarrassed by Democrats who read their former speeches in favor of free silver to them, and Mr. Dolliver announced, "I do not want anybody to draw a quotation on me."

Mr. Cox, however, broke in and asked him about a speech he had made in favor of the Sherman act.

Dolliver admitted the speech, and Cox asked, "And you were wrong about that?"

"Well," replied Dolliver, "I am trying to apologize for it, Colonel."

"I am trying to get you out of the hole you put your party in," explained Mr. Cox.

Mr. Dolliver said he had nothing to say against Mr. Bryan because the latter's predictions had not come true.

"When a man tells me that it is going to rain," he said, "and it turns out to be a sunshiny day, I do not have any less respect for his moral character. But where a man predicts dry weather and plenteous showers fall instead, I insist that, unless he expects to hear a personal application of the proverb by which the mental outfit of such a one is described, he should at least get in out of the rain."

Gen. Grosvenor recalled the Democratic prophecies of disaster and calamity, and added:

"In the light of the history of the past two years, I say to my friends here on this side of the House and to my friends on the other side of the House there is hope for us yet. May we not apply to our situation the words of the poet:

"Ye fearful saints, fresh courage take:
The clouds ye so much dread
Are big with mercy, and will break
With blessings on your head."

Champ Clark began his speech by saying that the Republican jubilation over the recent election was "one of the most amazing phenomena that I have observed in forty-nine years of tabernacling in the flesh," and fortified the statement with the following story:

"A young physician was called in a case of great delicacy. When he returned to the office his veteran partner asked him how he got along.

"'First rate,' replied the youthful disciple of Aesculapius. 'The mother and baby are both dead, but I saved the old man.'"

DEFENDS THE WILSON BILL.

Clark declared that he was astounded at Gen. Grosvenor's statement that the Wilson bill was a free-trade measure, and said it reminded him of a remark made by Col. George W. Anderson, a lawyer in his county.

"He was a brilliant orator," said Mr. Clark, "but in his younger days was not well up in the technicalities of his profession. On one occasion he was about to be knocked out of court when Judge Porter, who was presiding—a very kind-hearted man—undertook to help him by saying: 'Col. Anderson, are you taken by surprise?' Whereupon Anderson electrified bench and bar by replying, 'Good God, your Honor! I am not only surprised, but utterly astounded!'"

He scored Gen. Grosvenor for making such a statement, and added: "He certainly cannot be excused on the grounds of ignorance, for one of his foibles is omniscience."

Clark's poetry was copious, but mostly of the "Familiar Quotations" order.

He reminded the Republicans of the fate which overtook those who, at the behest of Nicholas Biddle, tried to recharter the United States Bank, and said:

"I watch the wheels of Nature's many plan,
And learn the future by the past of man."

He twitted the Republicans on their former professions in favor of bimetallism, saying that every Republican stump speaker west of the Alleghanies in 1896 talked silver, and then, speaking of Senator Wolcott and the other International Bimetallism Commissioners, he said:

"Their candid opinion of the interview of Lyman J. Gage, with which he hamstrung them just as they were about to succeed in securing bimetallism by international agreement and brought all their labors to an inglorious conclusion, would contribute largely to the gayety of nations, if not to the gayety of the Secretary of the Treasury. I have often imagined the junior Senator from the Centennial State chewing the bitter cud of disappointment and repeating Tennyson's apostrophe to the ocean:

On thy cold, gray stones, O sea!
And I would that my tongue could utter
The thoughts that arise in me."

Several Democrats denied that the Republican Administration was to be credited with the country's prosperity, and said it was the act of God and not of the President. To this Gen. Grosvenor replied:

"The Lord always works through instrumentalities, and at present he seems to be operating through the instrumentality of the Republican Administration."

Lentz of Ohio read an extract from The New York Sun in his speech, and Overstreet of Indiana, gaining the floor for a moment to reply to him, said:

"It is a strange anomaly, Mr. Chairman, that the gentleman from Ohio, who in a ten-minute debate has undertaken to rapidly pass over all the subjects in modern politics with a speed only equaled by that with which his good friend Aguinaldo is measuring the territory of Luzon, should have undertaken to prove the verity of his statement by The New York Sun. It reminds me of a little verse by Coleridge:

"The river Rhine, it is well known,
Doth wash the city of Cologne;
But tell me, nymphs, what power divine
Shall henceforth wash the river Rhine?"

William D. Vandiver of Missouri, in illustrating the many-sided character of the currency views of some Republicans, as shown in their speeches of the past and present, told this story:

"The progress of this debate has reminded me of an Irishman who went out into a graveyard and read the inscriptions on the tombstones. Seeing one which read, 'Jonathan A. Jones, born July 1, 1831; died Jan. 1, 1891; an eminent lawyer, an honest man.' 'Faith, and be gosh, and the soil must be very dear when they have to bury two men in the same hole.'"

JOKES ON GROSVENOR'S APPEARANCE.

Mr. Vandiver was making some sarcastic references to "the gentleman from Ohio," when Mr. Sutherland asked him which gentleman he meant.

"Not being permitted under the rules," replied Vandiver, "to call gentlemen by name, I will designate him as the gentleman from Ohio who looks like Santa Claus and talks like Satan."

The first part of this description at least was such an accurate portrait of Gen. Grosvenor that it moved that gentleman to reply.

"I know how distinguished and handsome I look," he proclaimed, "but if I were going to retaliate in kind I would say, 'I thank God when a man looks at me he is not reminded of that familiar sign, the skull and crossbones and death-head on a poison jar in an apothecary shop.' And I further rejoice that when he hears the sound of my voice he would not think it is such a voice as suggested to the poet:

"Hark, from the tombs a doleful sound,
Mine ears attend the cry."

On Dec. 14 Mr. Burnett of Alabama declared that the Republicans in 1896 deceived the people into thinking that they were for bimetallism. The Republicans, he said, were

By smooth dissimulation skilled to grace;
A devil's nature with an angel's face.

"Scarcely a decade has passed," said he, since it denounced the Democratic Party for trying to do what it is about to do. But,

"Vice is a monster of so frightful mien,
As to be hated needs but to be seen;
Yet seen too oft, familiar with her face,
We first endure, then pity, then embrace."

He was followed next day by Mr. Lamb of Virginia, also a Democrat, who said:

"It is an interesting study to watch the course of our opponents upon this question and see how they have glided from one position to another until they have planted their feet, without disguise, upon this Atlantic City bill. Nothing more aptly describes their shifting attitude than the oft-quoted lines of Alexander Pope:

"Vice is a monster of so frightful mien,
As to be hated needs but to be seen;
Yet seen too oft, familiar with her face,
We first endure, then pity, then embrace."

Lamb inveighed against the bankers, but explained that not all bankers merited criticism. Some of them were "patriotic and given to charity and good works."

"To these," said Lamb, "we say, 'You are not included in the list of economical and political sinners.' We say to you, as said a gentleman sitting by a young lady in church, who appeared deeply moved by the minister's words:

"Fair maid, you need not take the hint,
Nor idle texts pursue;
'Twas only sinners that he meant,
Not angels, such as you."

Marriott Brosius began by saying he was not going to remind the Democrats of their failings.

"I believe," he said, "with Senator Benton of old bullion fame. He did not entertain a morbid affection for John C. Calhoun, and after the death of the latter a friend said to him, 'Senator, what have you to say now of Mr. Calhoun?'

"The Senator replied, 'Not anything; not a solitary thing. When the Almighty puts his hand on a man I take mine off.'"

VIRGINIAN ON EXPANSION.

Peter J. Otey of Virginia paid his respects to Mr. Dolliver in the following fashion:

"His eloquence on expansion reminds me of an old man in my town who was called on to explain 'expansion.' Mounting a goods box he said: 'This great Republican bird has plumed its wings and soared aloft and taken a view of this little world, and then lit, with one foot on the Asiatic shore, the other on the golden walls of California; has flopped its tail in the Arctic Ocean and pecked Filipinos off of the Island of Luzon.'

"Mr. Chairman, a bird with such a stride must split somewhere or lose its footing on the one shore or the other. My genial friend, for I esteem him highly, is not certain 'where he is at,' has been, or whither he is going, and he answers queries like a man at the county court starting to leave. He bridled his horse and put on the saddle. He put the saddle on hind part before. A bystander said, 'Mister, you've got that saddle on wrong end foremost.' He looked at the meddler and said to him, 'How do you know which way I'm going?'"

Mr. Otey was the only speaker whose poetry was original. He dropped into verse as follows:

My country, 'tis of thee,
Land of plutocracy,
Of the I moan.

He made up for this by libertal quotation, such as this epitaph for the Fifty-sixth Congress:

Here lies old Thirty-three per cent.
The more he got the more he lent;
The more he lent the more he craved.
Good Lord, can such a soul be saved?

Dragging Napoleon into the discussion in a somewhat unexpected manner, Mr. Otey thus described him:

A desolator desolate,
A victor overthrown,
The arbiter of others' fate,
A suppliant for his own.

The following was also aimed at Napoleon by Otey:

But where is he, the modern, mightier far,
Who, born no King, made monarchs draw his car;
Whose game was empires, and whose stakes were thrones;
Whose table earth—whose dice were human bones?

Joseph C. Sibley's explanation of his change of front on the currency question was bolstered up by support from the poets. He said he knew his opinions did not represent the sentiment of either party, but—

Let Whig and Tory stir their blood,
There must be stormy weather;
But for some true result of good
All parties work together.

As for his apparent inconsistency, he believed, with Lowell:

New occasions teach new duties;
Time makes ancient good uncouth;
They must onward still, and upward,
Who would keep abreast of Truth.

After him came Terry of Arkansas, with a sledge-hammer address to "you fellows" who have "more brass than brains," and have the habit of "thinking what Patterson dreamt," explaining that Patterson dreamed a lie. He then, without a moment's warning, became poetical, and, referring to the election of 1896, exclaimed:

Truth, crushed to earth, shall rise again—
The eternal years of God are hers;
But Error, smitten, writhes in pain,
And dies amid her worshippers.

Snodgrass of Tennessee also summoned poetry to the aid of the Democrats, and said, in discussing the persistence with which the people allow themselves to be guided by "bondholders and money brokers":

The lover may
Distrust the look that steals his heart away;
The child may cease to think it can play
With heaven's rainbow; alchemists may doubt
The shining gold their crucible gives out;
But faith, fanatic faith, once wedded fast,
Hugs the delusive falsehood to the last.

DESPAIR IN ARKANSAS.

Mr. Brundidge of Arkansas closed his speech with a remarkable quotation. He seemed to think that if the Currency bill passed there would be nothing for the people of Arkansas to look forward to. He said they would "continue to fight the great battle of life as best they can, and breathe the ennobling spirit of these beautiful lines":

So live that when thy summons comes to join
The innumerable caravan which moves
To that mysterious realm where each shall take
His chamber in the silent halls of death,
Thou go not, like the quarry-slave at night,
Scourged to his dungeon, but, sustained and soothed
By an unfaltering trust, approach thy grave
Like one that wraps the drapery of his couch
About him, and lies down to pleasant dreams.

Gibson of Tennessee, a Republican, rebuked the Democrats from his section for talking about the poverty of the South. "They seem to say to the South," he said,

Affliction is enamored of thy parts,
And thou art wedded to calamity.

The proper quotation for the South, he said, was:

The Southland, earth's new Eden,
Blessed are they who enter here.

"Uncle Mose, an old negro preacher," said Gibson, "was once asked by a Democratic orator in Virginia if the Almighty and not the Republicans did not free the negro.

"'Yes,' replied Uncle Mose, scratching his gray head, 'I s'pose the Almighty did do it, but these Republicans helped him a heap, I tell you.'"

In the same way the Republicans had helped in the creation of prosperity, and the Democrats could not explain it away. The Democrats, Mr. Gibson said, were the greatest explainers in the world, but they

Puzzle by their explanations
And darken by their elucidations.

Henry C. Smith of Michigan began his speech by saying: "This is the only place on this earth where a man is allowed to talk about silver."

In talking about the Democratic attitude on all questions, he said:

"I admit that the real Democrats have many times been right. The trouble is they are never right at the right time. They are like a man who sits in a street car with his back in the direction the car is going. They never see a good thing until they have got by it. They are like the boy who for the first time saw an elephant. He said, 'Oh, mother, he is going in the wrong direction.'"

Green of Pennsylvania warned the Republicans to "ponder on the seer's warning to the Highland chief:

Lochiel, Lochiel, beware of the day
When the lowlands shall meet thee in battle array;
For a field of the dead rushes red on my sight,
And the clans of Culloden are scattered in flight.

The lowlands, he explained, stood for "the debtor classes."

Mahon of the same State said he was unable to find out what the Democrats were driving at. He recalled a telegram sent to President Lincoln during the civil war by Gov. Curtin of Pennsylvania. The Governor said:

Dear President: The Confederate cavalry are in sight of the City of Harrisburg and they are firing. There is not a Union soldier within 200 miles of the city.

To which Lincoln replied:

Dear Governor: Will you be kind enough to inform me what the Confederates are firing at?

He said that the Democrats reminded him of these Confederates, for they were firing at calamity when all was prosperity.

FRANCESCO MARTINELLI DEAD.

Old-Time Restaurant Keeper Passes Away at the Age of Sixty.

Francesco Martinelli, one of the pioneer Italian restaurant keepers in this city, died in St. Vincent's Hospital on Thursday of diabetes. He was a native of Lucca, Italy, and was about sixty years of age. In 1864 he enlisted at Leghorn on the United States war vessel Constellation. In 1872 he opened his first restaurant in a basement in Third Avenue, near Twelfth Street. From there he moved to Fourth Avenue, near Twelfth Street, then to the Everett Hotel, and from there to Fifth Avenue and Sixte

$10,500,000 IN BUILDINGS

Last Day's Plans Under the Old Code Break All Records.

A TWENTY-STORY STRUCTURE

Principal Changes Effected by the New Building Code, Which Is Now in Operation.

All owners who wished to avail themselves of the privileges of the old building code had to file their plans before midnight on Friday, and the result was that during that day new building operations involving an outlay of $10,593,400 were placed on record. This is the largest amount represented by a single day's business in the history of the Building Department.

The most important set of plans filed was that for a new twenty-story building, to be erected at 44 to 58 Exchange Place, and 25 to 33 Broad Street, which is the southeast corner of those streets. The building will front 236 feet on Exchange Place, 106 feet on Broad Street, with an "L" 50 by 100, extending southerly. The structure will have twelve elevators, and according to the estimate of Architect Robert Maynicke will cost $4,000,000.

The owner mentioned in the plans filed yesterday was Peter J. Merrick. In reality, however, the operation will be conducted by the recently organized Alliance Realty Company. The Central Realty, Bond, and Trust Company, of which the Alliance is an offshoot, already owns 44 to 52 Exchange Place, and will, it is understood, soon after Jan. 1, acquire the other properties on the immediate corner of Broad Street and Exchange Place, necessary to complete the plot, and on which it now holds options.

Frederick Ayer of Boston filed plans for another brick and stone office and loft building covering the plot 524 and 526 Broadway. The building will be twelve stories high, and is estimated to cost $350,000. A. J. Manning is the architect.

The Linde Company, warehousemen, submitted plans for an eleven-story brick and stone warehouse, 179 by 229, to cost $1,200,000. The structure will be erected at 250 to 255 West Street, from plans by G. W. Thomson.

NEW CODE IN OPERATION.

The new building code adopted by the Municipal Assembly and approved by the Mayor on Oct. 24, which went into effect yesterday, supplements the tenement house law of the charter, which remains in tact and is the first codification made of all the ordinances and laws affecting buildings and building operations in the various boroughs of the new city. The Building Department yesterday gave out a statement covering the changes effected by the new code, in substance, as follows:

The first important change is the extension of what are known as the "fire limits" of the consolidated city, within which limits it is made unlawful to erect any frame buildings whatever, other than open sheds and temporary structures for the use of citizens engaged in building operations. The old law of 1892 fixed the fire limits to the territory extending from the Battery to One Hundred and Sixty-fifth Street, on the west side, and from the Battery to One Hundred and Forty-ninth Street, and northerly to Westchester Avenue, on the east side. The new code extends the limits of the old city, so that they take in practically the whole area of Manhattan Island, being extended on the west side two and three-quarter miles beyond the old limits, clear to the Harlem River, to what is now known as West Two Hundred and Twentieth Street.

The only territory exempted in this area is the high ground of Washington Heights and Inwood, west of that part of Broadway formerly known as the Boulevard. This was exempted because of the fact that it is all restricted property of a fine residential class, where the land is so laid out that the fire risk is reduced to a minimum. The code retains the provisions of the old law prohibiting the rebuilding within the fire limits of any wooden structure that existed before 1892 that may be damaged by fire so that more than half of the building is injured by flames. Fire limits are also prescribed for the Borough of the Bronx and the Borough of Brooklyn.

The code changes the old provision restricting non-fire-proof apartment houses, tenements, or dwellings to a maximum height of seventy-five feet above the curb where the first story of the building is occupied as a store. It permits such buildings to be erected to a maximum height of eighty-five feet where the first and second floors or stores are built of what is known as thoroughly fire-proof construction. This change was urged by builders and architects.

PRECAUTIONS AGAINST FIRE.

A notable amendment to the old law requires buildings exceeding eighty-five feet in height to be equipped with auxiliary fire appliances and apparatus, consisting of stand pipes, with Siamese connections at the sidewalk, and line of fire hose, properly stored on each floor, ready for use, and regularly inspected. Buildings exceeding 150 feet in height will be required to be provided, in addition to these stand pipes and hose, with wrenches, fire extinguishers, hooks, axes, and other fire-fighting appliances required by the Fire Department, and a steam pump; and at least one passenger elevator must be kept always in readiness for the instant use of firemen during all hours of the night and day.

Perforated fire extinguishing pipes or sprinklers must also be provided in the basements of buildings used for business or manufacturing purposes. Heretofore these requirements have applied exclusively to theatres and buildings used for large public assemblages, built subsequent to 1892. They are now made to apply to all public buildings, such as hotels, churches, theatres, railroad stations, public halls, as well as department stores and other exclusively business buildings.

The new code contains a specific definition of what constitutes a hotel, and provides that where the building is located on any but a corner lot it shall not cover, above the second-story level, more than 90 per cent. of the area of the whole of the lot, and if more than five stories in height, 2½ per cent. less than 90 per cent. for every additional story above the fifth story. In the case of corner lots the restriction is reduced to 95 per cent. of the lot area, with the same percentage of reduction of area for all stories above the fifth. This requirement is introduced to secure better light and ventilation to tenants.

The commission which drafted the code incorporated in it the law of 1896, which makes it mandatory upon owners, builders, or contractors, in cases of buildings over 65 feet in height, being erected or repaired, to construct over the sidewalk in front a strongly and tightly built wooden shed, extending from the building line to the curb, for the protection of pedestrians.

IN CASE OF UNSAFE BUILDINGS.

In other respects the new code continues in full force all the protections for life and limb and safeguards of health of the old law, such as the providing of fire-escapes and adequate means of exit from buildings, and fire-proof shutters upon window openings to prevent flames from extending to or from adjoining property in case of fire, and it also empowers the Building Commissioners of the various boroughs to take instant action where necessary when buildings become unsafe and dangerous, and authorizes them to recover bodies which may be buried under fallen walls of buildings damaged by fire.

Provision is made also for tests to determine the efficacy of various systems of fire-proofing and of fire-proof building material wherever owners or architects or builders contracting for the erection of fire-proof buildings apply for permission to use any certain kind of material or style of construction and desire that the department shall pass upon the character of the material or construction submitted.

The sanitary provisions of the code are to be supplemented by a series of rules and regulations adopted by the Board of Buildings to govern the arrangement of the plumbing and drainage and of the light and ventilation of all buildings to be hereafter erected. These rules are revised editions of those established in 1892, the department complying, in their formulation, with the sanitary requirements of the health laws, and, in their enforcement, cooperating with the Board of Health to secure the best sanitary conditions in all classes of buildings. To carry out the provisions of the code the department has also a series of regulations for the inspection and regulation of all elevators in use in the city limits.

TO BURY MR. MOODY TUESDAY.

Family of the Dead Evangelist Consents to a Change in Dates—Arrangements Not Complete.

EAST NORTHFIELD, Mass., Dec. 23.—Yielding to pressure brought to bear by friends, the family of D. L. Moody to-day decided to defer the funeral of Mr. Moody until Tuesday afternoon. Some of the details were arranged during the forenoon, and it was made known later that the family had consented that public services should be held in the Congregational Church at 2:30 o'clock. The body will lie in state at the church during the morning. The Rev. C. J. Schofield, pastor of the church, will officiate, assisted by the Rev. R. A. Torrey of Chicago, and addresses will be made by men who have been associated with Mr. Moody in his work.

The Trustees of the Northfield Seminary met this morning and set apart a spot at Round Top, one of the most interesting parts, historically, of the Northfield settlement, as the burial place of Mr. Moody. The grave will be on school property, but it is very near the Moody home.

Owing to the large number of friends who are expected, the Northfield, the hotel which is used for the accommodation of those who attend the institute annually, will be opened, and, if it is found necessary, other arrangements will be made to care for those who come to the funeral.

The selection of pall bearers and other details will be attended to on Monday.

During the afternoon two of the gentlemen who had been asked to speak a few words over the body of the dead evangelist responded, accepting the invitation extended to them. The others who were asked are expected to answer later, the delay probably being occasioned by an attempt on their part to arrange for the completion of such duties as might prevent an acceptance. Those who responded this afternoon were the Rev. A. P. Pierson of Brooklyn, N. Y., and Dr. H. G. Weston of Chester, Penn., both of whom had in some manner been associated with Mr. Moody in his work.

Nearly one hundred telegrams expressing sympathy for the family were received at the Moody home during the day. A number of cablegrams also were received.

Among those which came this afternoon were the following:

"All Christendom mourns with you. Our prayers are that you may be mightily comforted. T. DE WITT TALMAGE."

"You have the deepest sympathy of my race in your affliction. Your husband's work is of lasting value to both races. "BOOKER T. WASHINGTON."

"Mrs. Sage unites with me in deepest sympathy for you and your family in your sad bereavement. RUSSELL SAGE."

MOODY MEMORIAL SERVICES.

New York and Philadelphia Pastors Asked to Give Aid.

Friends and admirers of the late Dwight L. Moody in this city and in Philadelphia are preparing to hold a memorial service in the two cities at the same hour as the funeral service, to be held at Northfield on Tuesday afternoon. A committee, which met informally yesterday to start the movement, is at work bringing the matter to the attention of the members of the evangelical churches.

Dr. MacArthur and the Rev. F. R. Morse of Calvary Baptist Church, Charles L. Harrell, an ex-student at Northfield, and Dr. D. D. Yarnell, Secretary of the Fifty-seventh Street Young Men's Christian Association, started the movement. They communicated yesterday with a large number of pastors of all denominations in the city, and the responses received showed a general desire to honor the memory of Mr. Moody.

It is proposed to hold a simple service, as like the service at Northfield as possible, and, as stated, at exactly the same hour. A large number of ministers and laymen will be asked to speak.

It was first thought that the service should be held in Carnegie Hall, but Dr. MacArthur offered the use of his church, and as it will seat 3,000 persons it was thought that the service might be held there. As a large outpouring of people will be expected, overflow services will be arranged for in the churches near by.

A letter was written to John Wanamaker asking him to help start the movement in Philadelphia.

The members of the committee have been in communication with William Moody at Northfield, and the plans for the services there will largely guide the committee here. The committee invites suggestions and assistance from every quarter in carrying out the plans.

The Rev. Dr. F. Wilbur Chapman of the Fourth Presbyterian Church, who has been mentioned as the probable successor of Mr. Moody in the direction of the institutions he founded, has been asked to speak at the Northfield service. He said that he would speak either in Northfield or here.

SERGT. WALKER'S DARING FEAT.

Ran Gantlet of Shot and Rowed Miles to Fetch Help for Comrades in the Philippines.

In recent dispatches from the Philippines there was reference to "a trusty messenger" who saved the United States forces from destruction at the battle of Muntinlupa by traveling seventeen miles in a leaking boat for reinforcements. In the official reports it was said only that the hero was a Tennesseean. Mails have come since then, and the "trusty messenger" has been named as Richard Wilde Walker, Sergeant Major of the First Battalion, Thirty-seventh Infantry, son of J. Simpson Walker of Nashville, and nephew of Dr. L. P. Walker of 25 East Twenty-fourth Street, New York City.

Sergt. Walker, responding to the call for volunteers at the outbreak of the war, went from Mississippi, where he was in business, to Nashville and enlisted in the First Tennessee. He re-enlisted last June in the Thirty-seventh Infantry. He comes of Southern fighting stock. On his father's side of the family was Gen. L. P. Walker, who was Secretary of War in the Cabinet of Jefferson Davis; Major John J. Walker was a Captain in the Creek war; Judge R. W. Walker was in the Confederate Senate, and afterward on the Supreme bench of Alabama. On his mother's side was Col. Benjamin Herndon, a hero of King's Mountain, and John W. Rice, a Captain of the Mexican war.

Three companies of the Thirty-seventh Infantry received orders on Sept. 12 from Major Swigert to go to Muntinlupa from Pasig. They started out in bancas, rowing down the river, but at Laguna de Bay the water was so rough that they had to disembark. Through marshes and over rough country they went, until at last they sighted Muntinlupa and a veritable forest of white flags. Out to them came the padre of the town, who told Sergt. Walker that the insurgents had fled the night before. The Americans, unsuspecting, advanced. In a few minutes volleys were poured into them from all sides, and they knew the priest had betrayed them.

They lost seven men, and then fled into the town, where they could fight from better cover. There were 100 of them, surrounded by 400 insurgents. Their only hope was to send for reinforcements, and for that perilous mission Sergt. Walker was chosen. To succeed he had to travel seventeen miles to the nearest telegraph station in a boat that leaked, that was manned by three Filipinos impressed by him into service, and that had to cover most of the distance under heavy fire from the shore.

"When the enemy opened on us," writes Sergt. Walker, "the bullets hit the water all around us, and my 'hombres' tried to turn back; but I cocked my pistol, pointed it at the scoundrel in the stern, and said I'd shoot if he didn't go on. Then they began to dig, and we finally got out of range."

Several times his rowers rebelled, and Sergt. Walker finally was obliged to knock one man senseless to impress the others that he meant business. Lieut. Cocke, who was in charge when Sergt. Walker reached the field telegraph station, reported that the young hero was so wet and exhausted from his struggles with the Filipinos and from baling out his boat for four hours that for a long time he was unable to make known his errand.

The assistance for which he had come reached his comrades at 9 o'clock at night, when they had only six rounds of ammunition left. This was not Sergt. Walker's first feat of daring. Thrice he carried orders under fire across the bridge at Manila, and at another time, with the assistance of another, saved a comrade from drowning in Manila Bay.

Safe Blowers in South Carolina.

COLUMBIA, S. C., Dec. 23.—The safe in the store of W. H. Suber, at Peaks's Station, on the Columbia and Greenville Railroad, was blown open this morning and $1,000 in cash taken. There is no clue and bloodshound failed, owing to the rain.

Murdered Man's Companion Held.

NATICK, Mass., Dec. 23.—Arnold Stappen, the companion of Louis A. Perry, who was shot and killed by Miss Lizzie Morse on Thursday, after a hearing in the local court to-day, was held in $2,500 for the Grand Jury, for participation in the affair.

RELATED CIVIL SERVANTS

Many Members of Same Families Employed at Washington.

ACT OF 1883 NOT EXPLICIT

Departments Place Various Meanings on Word "Family"—Objections to Employment of Married Women.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23.—Assistant Postmaster General Heath's recent order against the employment of married women in the Postal Service has called attention to the employment of husbands and wives, and also of people who are related by birth, in the various executive departments. Before the era of civil service reform the departments were honeycombed with families. As soon as a man secured an office he set to work to get berths for his unemployed relatives, either in his own office or in others.

To a certain extent the same thing still prevails, but the evil of it is largely done away with by the merit system. Chiefs of bureaus see no objection to the employment of persons who can pass a civil service examination, merely because they are related to others who have done the same. Nevertheless, there is a tendency in some of the departments to discourage the employment of immediately related persons who live under the same roof, on the ground that in such cases one of them can usually support the other, and that somebody else "needs the job."

It might be expected that, since the merit system has the effect of interfering with nepotism, relatives would be bunched in the temporary lists; but the fact is that in those departments, where figures are obtainable, the number of related persons on the temporary list is found to be about the same as that on the classified list. Husbands and wives are comparatively few, though nearly every department has at least one such case; but brothers and sisters are common, and so are fathers and sons or daughters.

CIVIL SERVICE ACT PROVISION.

The Civil Service Act of 1883 attempted to break up the employment of related persons in Government service. Section 9 of the act is as follows:

"That whenever there are already two or more members of a family in the public service in the grades covered by this act, no other member of such family shall be eligible to appointment to any of said grades."

But this provision has always been inefficient, on account of the indefiniteness of the word "family." No one knows how many relationships are covered by the word. In President Cleveland's first term Civil Service Commissioner Lyman tried to get the Attorney General to define the word, but he did not do so, and since then heads of departments have construed it according to their own wishes. The general interpretation is that it covers only fathers, mothers, brothers, sisters, husbands, wives, and children. In some departments even this interpretation is taken to be too liberal, and the interpretation is that it means only persons living under the same roof, one of whom is charged with the support of the others. In explaining this interpretation, an official said to-day:

"It would be obviously unjust to extend the word 'family' to cover brothers, for instance, who are living far apart and have no common means of support. Suppose a man in Wisconsin passes the civil service examination and enters the employ of this department. Suppose that then his brother, living in Maine, who perhaps does not even know that his brother is in the employ of the Government, decides to enter Government employ and succeeds in passing the examination. It would certainly be unfair to consider him the second member of the family, for the purposes contemplated by the act."

No one knows how many persons there are who have relatives in other departments. The Cabinet officials do not concern themselves with that subject. But some of them have frowned upon the employment of relatives in the same department. The only systematic effort to break up the practice has been in the War Department, and there it has been due to Assistant Secretary Meiklejohn.

NEPOTISM IN WAR DEPARTMENT.

Mr. Meiklejohn has been making a steady effort for some time to reduce the number of related persons in his department, and he has made a reduction of about 50 per cent. There are now only ten persons on the temporary roll who are related, and in no case are there over two of a family. The number who have passed civil service examinations and are rated list is somewhat larger, but not much, and these of course cannot be interfered with except on charges, which, if they discharge their duties well, will never be brought. In such cases, as in the cases on the temporary roll, there are never more than two of a family. Mr. Meiklejohn, however, has not extended his axe to cousins or other distant relatives.

In the Post Office Department, which is a smaller department, there is proportionately the same employment of relations. There are a few married couples there, and there is no disposition to interfere with them, in spite of the exaggerated reports occasioned by Mr. Heath's order. That order, it is explained, was aimed at brides and bridegrooms, and not at steady old civil service employes who are doing their duty well in the department at Washington. It was also aimed chiefly at the branches of the service throughout the country, where the discord created by the employment of newly married couples is likely to be more pronounced. There has never been any attempt to interfere with related persons who are in the department. Their number is small, and there are not over two of a family.

There are plenty of relations in the Treasury Department, but no figures are obtainable as to their number. The department has never made the least effort to interfere with them or to ascertain how many there are. The rule about not employing more than two of a family is enforced, but the most liberal interpretation is given to that section of the law. This is one of the departments which holds to the interpretation that the word "family" means persons under the same roof immediately related.

The Navy Department has never had many related persons in its employ, considering its size and comparing it with other departments. But this is not because it discourages the employment of such people. The Navy Department sees no objection to the employment of relations, and Appointment Clerk Peters says he does not know how many families are represented by two or more members.

The State Department and the Department of Justice are small, and have no great number of related persons. Some of their employes have relatives in other departments.

The Interior Department has always been a hotbed of relatives, largely because of the number of large bureaus, such as the Pension Bureau and the Patent Office, which are big enough to be departments in themselves. Some years ago the Interior Department gave a list of the number of employes who had relations in the Interior and other departments, and the number was 1,441. No list, however, was made of those who had relatives in the Interior Department alone.

MARRIED WOMEN EXACTING.

There is more disposition to discourage the employment of husbands and wives than of blood relations. Many of the departments, however, hold that if a married woman performs her duties as well as a single woman her marriage should be no bar to her holding a position; that the public service does not exist to give employment to people who need it, but to get the Government's work done. Others take the view that there are plenty of single women who can do the work as well as married women, and that they need the position more. The chief objection to the employment of married women, however, is that given by Mr. Heath, that they insist on different treatment from that given to single women.

The crusade against married women was not started by Mr. Heath, but by Public Printer Palmer, and it began some months ago. Mr. Palmer's unfavorable attitude toward them was based largely on the same grounds which subsequently caused Mr. Heath's order. Some of his employes married other employes and then continued at work, in some cases without notifying the office of their change of name and state, and complications caused by this resulted in his official action.

As a general thing, officials are touchy on the subject, and disinclined to talk about it. It is a difficult thing to dislodge otherwise satisfactory employes merely because they are related, even where the head of the department is in favor of it, which is generally not the case. Where they are appointed under the merit system it is practically impossible. Mr. Meiklejohn is the only high official who has made it the policy of his department to break up the employment of relatives, and who has steadily adhered to that policy. Even he has found it by no means easy.

Six years ago a census of the Government employes in Washington who have relatives in the service here was taken, and it was found that 5,610 had such relatives, ranging from one to nine apiece. This was not restricted to persons having relatives in the same department with themselves, and it included remote as well as near relatives, and, of course, husbands and wives. Since then no such census has been taken, but it is stated at all the departments that the number has considerably decreased.

STORY OF BIBULOUS BIGGS.

Absence from His Wife's Birthday Party Creates Differences—Policeman Found Him Lost.

When Biggs woke up in Corlears Hook Park a morning or two since, the unfamiliar surroundings conveyed a severe shock to his clouded understanding. And Biggs promptly went to sleep again, possibly as a bracer against more trouble to follow.

The day before, precisely at 4:45 P. M., Biggs left his office, the wish to be early at his wife's birthday party, an important event annually in the family. He never got there. That is why the relations between Mr. and Mrs. Biggs at present are somewhat strained.

Ordinarily Biggs is a quiet citizen of regular habits, given to going home most nights orthodoxically, and frequently remaining there. The lapses his wife complains of occur not more than twice a year, but the great trouble is she never can tell when. They are as likely to bob up on week days as well as holidays or natal days. Incidentally Biggs lives somewhere adjacent to West Ninety-third Street.

"Now, William," enjoined Mrs. Biggs, the morning of the fateful day, "be sure to come home early. We must have everything ready by 8. Don't linger."

"Sure, Mike," assented Biggs in his favorite slang, to the great horror of little Miss Biggs, now going on fourteen and prim. Miss Biggs always exclaims, "Why, papa!" when papa says "Sure, Mike," and then he says "Sure, Mike" again, whereat little Miss Biggs goes off in a hum.

"Does your remark imply that you will linger?" asked Mrs. Biggs, conscious that her husband disliked birthday parties on principle.

"I'll certainly be nome on time, my dear," was the earnest rejoinder. "And that goes, too." he soliloquized a minute later as he ran down the steps. "I'll be in on that dodgasted hen party or die. Damn don't."

At 4:40 Biggs closed his desk and started up William Street, bound for home. "Well, now," said he to himself, "I'll just get a few flowers extra. There's nothing like a man being attentive to his wife, even if she will give a cemetery entertainments on her joyous birthday time."

"Hello, Biggs," called out one of his friends half way up the block. "Just going home? So'm I. Let's have a ball."

And it came to pass that the "balls" descended swiftly.

"Here's how," said Biggs's friend sixty minutes later in a group of five.

"How," mumbled Biggs, somewhat hoarsely, after the chorus of "hows!"

"Shay, now boysh, thish las' one. Las' one, 'say. Mus' g'ome t'wifesh bir'day par'y. Prom'."

"Just another, old man."

"No; no'er one; promish b'ome early. Well, yesh, jus' no'er."

"Nemmine o'man. Brace up. Just 'nother 'n we go home t'gether," put in Biggs's first tempter.

"A' righ'," beamed Biggs benevolently. "No'er 'n I go'n get flow—flowershes, flowershes, see?"

So far as Biggs's movements could be traced up to 1 A. M. he was awakened at the One Hundred and Fifty-fifth Street elevated station by a violent shake and a cry of, "Hey, you, get out."

"Cern'y," muttered Biggs; "cern'ly. Nin'-thir'?"

"Ninety-third nothin'," growled the guard. "One Hundred and Fifty-fifth. Say, if you wanted to be waked up, why didn't you say so?"

"Fif'-fif," repeated Biggs laboriously to himself, stepping unsteadily off onto the platform. "Thash shame, damshame.

"Mus' be sev'n clock. Wha'll Nelly shay. My, oh, my."

Biggs then solved the difficulty temporarily by sitting down on a seat and going to sleep. Five minutes later he was awakened by the ticket chopper.

"Go over on the other platform," said he, "and get a train in ten minutes."

Contrarily, Biggs, instead of going over the bridge, pursued a zigzag course down stairs to the street.

"That's always the way with them drunks," commented the ticket chopper. "They always go the wrong way when they strike up here." Biggs next boarded an Eighth Avenue surface car, being helped on thereby by a good-natured conductor.

"Wan' get off Nin'-thir' Street," admonished Biggs as he was propped up in a seat.

The next thing heard of Biggs was at the Ninety-third Street station on the downtown side. He rolled aboard a train holding to the guard for support.

"Shay, o'man, wan' ge'off Nin'-thir' Street," he whispered confidentially. "Don't f'get. Mus' g'ome to wifesh bir'day party."

"Why, we just left Ninety-third Street," laughed the guard.

"Ain't so," protested Biggs, straightening up. "Thash lie. Guess I know. Thash Hun' Fif'-fif' Stree'."

It is related that Biggs was put off at Eighty-first Street, and that in attempting to get on an up-town surface car boarded a down-town one instead, bringing up at the Battery at 4:30 A. M.

Biggs was still looking for Ninety-third Street, and the answer of the starter disgusted him.

"Ninety-third Street is a good many miles off," replied the latter, a facetious man, "or maybe it's more."

Biggs surveyed him unsteadily for a moment, and then started off in the opposite direction, which happened to land him on a Belt Line car. Between the Battery and the time a policeman found him in the park, Biggs was again lost.

"Say you," said the policeman, shaking him, noticing his respectable dress. "Ain't you off your beat?"

Biggs awoke sleepily and straightened up in that peculiar state of daze peculiar to the ragged end of a bad night.

"I say, wha'sit?"

"Lost, ain't you? Where do you live?"

"Mon. wayhome, wife's bir'day party. Mus' be home sev'n 'clock," Biggs answered irrelevantly, in a bewildered tone.

"Say, of'cer, wha' timesit?"

"Half past seven."

"Ha' pas' sev'n, nit. 'Sdaylight. Ain't daylight 'stime o' year."

"That's what it is," said the officer.

"Half past seven."

"Say, ol' man," asked Biggs, anxiously. "No foolin'. Say, 'shis t'morrow, yes'rday, or t'day?"

"Friday."

"Well, 'sall up," murmured Biggs, after a painful pause. "Wha'll Nelly say? Oh, my, oh, my! Bir'day gone 'n devil t'pay."

"Where's flowers?" asked Biggs, after another pause, looking on the bench and on the ground. "Had flowers—think I had 'em. Gone, anyway. Well, well! 'n 'taint yes'rday."

"Guess you'd better come around to the station for safe keeping," suggested the officer.

Biggs objected strenuously. Then he thought out a brilliant scheme. He produced his business card and proposed a telephone message to one of his clerks. Half an hour later Biggs was on the way to his William Street office under escort, pouring his woes, so far as he could recall, into a hireling's ears, and still unsteady in gait. It was then 8:30. Biggs's head was splitting.

"Have to fix up a story, George, for the old lady," he was saying as they opened the office door.

Suddenly Biggs uttered an exclamation. There sat Mrs. Biggs in his chair, erect, stern, and forbidding of countenance.

"Sall up, George," he whispered hoarsely, nervously grasping his clerk's shoulder. "I'm in for it now."

A few minutes later Biggs and his wife went home in a carriage with the curtains drawn.

ADRIFT ON LAKE SUPERIOR.

Crew of Wrecked Whaleback Experiences Many Hardships.

FORT WILLIAM, Ontario, Dec. 23.—Details of the wreck of Whaleback Barge No. 115 have just reached here. She left Two Harbors on Dec. 10, when the weather was fine. On the morning of the 11th the wind freshened, gradually increasing to a hurricane, when the towline parted, and the barge went adrift for five days and a half.

It finally went ashore on Pic Island, where the crew found an old shack, from which they obtained a few old spikes and nails, with which they built a raft, taking them to Middleton, on the south shore of Lake Superior, where they arrived after many hardships on the morning of the 22d.

The colored cook had his feet frozen, and the crew is in destitute circumstances.

MOLINEUX IN GOOD SPIRITS

Rumor that He Has Broken Down Under the Strain Is Denied.

TAKES WHISKY TWICE A DAY

Prisoner Somewhat Run Down from His Confinement—Proceedings of the Past Week.

Roland Burnham Molineux will spend Christmas in jail for the first time in his life, yet from information obtainable from the best sources, his father, his counsel, and Warden Hagan of the Tombs, the young clubman who has been on trial six weeks for the murder of Mrs. Katherine J. Adams nearly a year ago is in the best possible spirits under the circumstances.

There was a rumor yesterday that Molineux had broken down and that under orders from Recorder Goff he was being closely watched for fear of a collapse. According to the authorities responsible for the statement anent his spirits, there is absolutely no truth in this statement. It is true that Molineux has received stimulants lately—a few ounces of whisky before and after the day's session in court. This is under the orders of Dr. Campbell, the Tombs physician, and at the request of George Gordon Battle, one of the counsel for the defense.

Molineux has been in the Tombs for ten months. The facilities for proper exercise there are limited, and there is little to relieve the prisoner's mind, not even as much as there is in a convict's prison. The natural result, according to Warden Hagan, is that Molineux is somewhat run down. He was an athlete before his arrest, and as such took a great deal of exercise. He gets little where he is, and the long days in the bad air of the court room have made matters somewhat worse.

Therefore, when Mr. Battle asked that the young man receive such stimulant as the physician might order, and when Dr. Campbell did make such an order, Warden Hagan at once fell in with his views, and the whisky sent by Mr. Battle is given to Molineux as a medicine.

According to Gen. Molineux, Mr. Weeks, Mr. Battle, the Warden, and Dr. Campbell, that is all there is in the collapse story. Gen. Molineux, after his visit to his son yesterday, told the prison officials that his son was in no way depressed, in spite of the fact that such depression would be but natural at this season, but, on the contrary, he said his son was well and cheerful.

Nothing was said about how Molineux would spend his Christmas, but it was inferred from what the Warden said that the day would be passed as a number of other holidays had been spent by the prisoner. He can have to eat what he desires; in fact, the only thing denied him is his liberty. Warden Hagan said yesterday that his prisoner was "as fine as a fiddle."

When the trial goes on on Tuesday next the seventh week will have begun, three of which have been taken up with the taking of testimony. The larger part of this has been along the line of expert evidence in handwriting. Three experts have been so far examined. Mr. Kinsley was on the stand nearly nine days. Mr. Tyrrell of Milwaukee two days, and at the close of the session on Friday Mr. Tolman of Chicago had just begun to state his reasons for believing that Molineux wrote the address on the poison package that was sent to Cornish.

The experts have made Molineux a many-sided man, and have endeavored to prove their theories and conclusions by many and devious ways. Mr. Kinsley contended that the letters in evidence, the disputed as well as the admitted writings, were the work of a man quick-witted and nervous.

Then comes Mr. Tyrrell of Milwaukee, who, after illustrating his theories with charcoal and paper, comes to the conclusion that the writer of all the letters was careless. He had a great deal to say about wrist movement and the pendulumlike swing of the writing.

From the writings in evidence he drew deductions that Molineux—for he said Molineux was the writer of all of them—wrote a certain length of time and then had to take a rest and begin again. That, he said, was the pendulum motion, and he measured the writings with a pair of compasses to try to strengthen his theory.

Mr. Tolman has a theory, too. He says the writer—he has not yet reached the stage where he says it is Molineux—is a creature of very weak will. The writings show, Mr. Tolman has testified, that the person responsible for them may have great ideas at the start, but that they dwindle to nothingness before long, there being not enough of will power to sustain them.

This is proved, Mr. Tolman says, by the large flourishing capitals in Molineux's admitted writings, as well as in the disputed writings, and the subsequent dwindling down of the words to almost unintelligibility. For instance, he says, the "R" in Roland, is large and bold, whereas the "and" is weak and hardly discernible. Then there is the name "Molineux," which, being longer and more complex, shows, he says, the state of affairs more clearly. The "M," Mr. Tolman says, is large and full, while the "eux" is barely intelligible, so small and insignificant is it.

The twelve jurors who are to decide the fate of the defendant have listened to all this testimony with the greatest care and attention. Never an illustration has been made but that they have turned to their albums, in which the exhibits are pasted, and carefully looked at the words under discussion through the magnifying glasses furnished them by Mr. Weeks. They have even gone so far as to put certain letters about which there was a dispute under the microscope.

What impression the evidence has made on them it is not possible to discern, except in the case of Foreman Martin, who said that as a layman he could not see where the similarity between the writings in the Barnet and Cornish letters came in, and it is admitted by both sides that this remark is open to many constructions and may mean much or little.

The proceedings of the past week have been full of interest, although void of sensations. The principal features have been the evident change of base made both by the prosecution and the defense. On the side of the prosecution, it has become evident to Mr. Osborne that but little of motive has been yet shown in the case.

It was on that account, Mr. Osborne said, that he resorted to every means known to get in evidence a sample of Cornish's handwriting, which he contends in no way resembles the writings on the letters signed with his name and requesting that medicine be sent to 1,620 Broadway.

He said that Justice Pardon C. Williams of the Supreme Court had ruled that if the prosecution could show that Cornish had not written the letters signed with his name as well as the alleged bogus Barnet letters, but that Molineux had written them, that evidence would be relevant and material proof of motive.

When Recorder Goff refused to take up the time of the Court long enough to let Cornish write a copy of the "Harpster" letter in its presence, Mr. Osborne had Cornish go with an Assistant District Attorney to another office and write the copy and then put the witness to the writing on the stand to prove that it was in Cornish's hand. Mr. Weeks protested hotly against what he called "the unprecedented proceedings of manufacturing standards of comparison in court," but he was overruled.

Since Expert Tyrrell took the stand there has been a great deal of questioning on cross-examination by Mr. Weeks about simulated writing. Mr. Weeks had at first contended that the writings disputed in no way resembled the natural hand of the defendant, but from his questioning lately it appears that he is building up the theory that the person who wrote the bogus letters and the address on the poison package might have been simulating the defendant's hand.

There are still a host of experts to be examined on both sides, and there will be lay testimony as well, that of Cornish, Mrs. Rogers, Mr. and Mrs. Hovey, friends of Cornish, and Molineux, and the testimony of Dr. Witthaus, Dr. Hamilton, Dr. Weston, and probably that of the defendant himself. It was said yesterday it was hardly likely the trial would be finished before the middle of February.

RELIEF FOR A HERO'S WIDOW.

Bill in Favor of Hattie A. Phillips Is Now Pending in Congress.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23.—A bill is now pending in Congress for the relief of Hattie A. Phillips, the widow of John Phillips. Two Congresses have failed to pass on similar bills, but it is believed that the revival of patriotic enthusiasm brought about by the war will ensure the passage of this one, especially as there is a desire to honor heroes.

John Phillips was the man who made the famous ride from Fort Phil Kearny to Fort Laramie at the beginning of the Sioux outbreak many years ago. Though the hardships of his ride broke down his health and led to his early death, he never received anything from the Government.

Fort Phil Kearny was invested by the Sioux, who had suddenly risen in the dead of Winter. A detachment of troops, under Col. Fetterman, sallied forth and was cut off and killed to the last man, after making a desperate resistance until all their ammunition was gone. Red Cloud's braves outnumbered the garrison twenty to one. An attack was hourly expected, and the women and children begged to be placed in the powder house and blown up if the attack seemed likely to be successful, that they might escape the fate that would be theirs if the fort was captured.

There was no hope of holding off the Indians unless by outside help, and the outside world was in ignorance of the siege of the fort. Phillips volunteered to make the attempt. With a few biscuits or rations, he left the post at midnight and made his way through the Indians. It was a five days' desperate ride over country uninhabited by white men, but swarming with Indians. His traveling was all done at night, and in the day time he was obliged to lie in hiding. The thermometer was 20 degrees below zero. When Phillips reached Fort Laramie he fell from his horse in a faint, throwing his dispatches at the sentry's feet. Troops were sent from Fort Laramie, and Fort Phil Kearney was relieved in the nick of time. These facts are related in House Report No. 1,913, Fifty-fourth Congress.

The rest of Phillips's life was spent in dodging Indians, who regarded him as responsible for the failure of the attack on the fort and tried on many occasions to capture and kill him. At one time he was lassoed and dragged off, but managed to escape. Again, a band of Indians destroyed his live stock. Phillips got judgment for $2,210 in the Court of Claims, but it turned out that Phillips at the time was not a fully naturalized citizen and the claim could not be paid. He was a Government scout and received $300 for various services in that capacity, but his ride to Laramie was outside the scope of his scouting duty, and he never received any payment for it.

FARQUHAR AT SANTO DOMINGO.

Makes His First Stop in the Squadron's Winter Cruise.

SANTO DOMINGO CITY, Dec. 23.—The United States cruiser New York, flagship of the North Atlantic Squadron, has arrived here. The United States gunboat Machias, now at Puerto Plata, is expected to arrive here shortly. The American naval officers will be received this afternoon by the President.

The cruiser sailed from New York Dec. 16 for West Indian waters for the Winter's cruise and manoeuvres. It was announced that she was to touch first at this city, where she would be joined by the cruiser Detroit and the gunboat Machias.

Summit Strikers Return to Work.

SUMMIT, N. J., Dec. 23.—The owners of the Summit Silk Mills claim that the strike, which has been in progress for more than two months, has been practically settled. Several of the union weavers returned to work in the mills yesterday and more did so to-day. The men who were sworn in as special police to protect the company's property have been dismissed.

Westinghouse Company's Dividend.

PITTSBURG, Dec. 23.—The Directors of the Westinghouse Air Brake Company met this afternoon and declared the regular quarterly dividend of 2½ per cent. and an extra dividend of 5 per cent., making 7½ per cent. in all, both payable Jan. 10.

Roads Agree on Freight Rates.

CLEVELAND, Dec. 23.—An important decision has been arrived at regarding railroad freight rates which will, it is believed, remove a potent cause of rate wars during the last twelve years. The agreement reached is that no line of the Western and Central Freight Associations on east or west bound business shall have in the division of the through rates for its share more than the amount of rates from the local points to the shipping gateways.

PARIS POLITICS AND ART

Chamberlain, It Is Said, Submitted His Speech to the Kaiser.

SCHEME OF MURAL RELIEFS

Sardou's New Play a Poison Drama—Loie Fuller's Debut at the Olympia—Italian Dancer's Success.

Foreign Correspondence NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Dec. 8—In spite of the almost universal condemnation which Mr. Chamberlain's speech has received on both sides of the Channel, there is no doubt that it has been of good effect in clearing the air. There is still much mystery as to the exact circumstances under which it was produced. I have been informed by an influential diplomatist here, who is in a position to know, that Chamberlain submitted the full text of his intended remarks to the German Emperor before giving utterance to them. The German ruler acquiesced in the plan of administering a cold douche to French hotheadedness, and recognized that the grave insults directed against his royal grandmother ought not to be passed over entirely in silence. Several years ago, when the Empress Frederick came over here, the French papers, noticeably the organ of M. De Cassagnac, violently attacked her, and the Emperor was beside himself with anger. The Empress hurriedly left, but the Emperor told Count Munster that if the slightest personal offense were offered to his mother by a populace egged on by the mischief-makers of the Paris press he would instantly declare war. Count Munster communicated this threat without any attenuation to the then French Government. It is in the traditions not only of the German royal family, but of the entire German nobility, to be excessively sensitive about any slights offered to their womankind; and had the Emperor been provoked to do as he said, the entire feeling of his army and of most of his people would have been with him.

What the Emperor expected has happened. Prince Henri d'Orléans, in the name of the Nationalist Party, has issued a manifesto demanding an immediate settlement of the Alsace-Lorraine problem for the purpose of enabling France to combine with Germany against Great Britain. He believes that Alsace-Lorraine might be neutralized or given up to Germany in exchange for a territorial compensation to be carved out of the moribund Austrian Empire. He is very free with the disposition of other people's property. He is voicing, however, the general sentiment of France, which I have already mentioned in these columns, of willingness to be reconciled with the hereditary enemy, even at the definite cost of the conquered provinces, if only Great Britain can be curbed in her colonial enterprises. But the German Emperor knows that France, however great her desire may be to take from her neighbors, has no longer anything to give them—except peace.

Mr. McKinley's Presidential message has brought France no consolation, although it is universally recognized as a very correct and perfectly cordial utterance. It was hoped here that the repudiation of an entente between the United States and Great Britain would be categorical. But the mere denial of all arrangements, except where direct interests are concerned, is felt to be disappointingly ambiguous.

M. Sardou has written a new play the rehearsals of which, however, have not yet begun, and I doubt whether the first performance can take place before the middle of next year. Its subject is the mysterious poison drama which darkened the last years of the life of Louis Quatorze and embittered his final relations with Mme. de Montespan. The real facts of this terrible scandal and tragedy have only just been revealed in a curious volume of which M. Funck-Brentano is the author. They have remained hidden away for centuries in the archives of the Bastille, which are now in the keeping of the Bibliotheque de l'Arsenal. That a wave of demoniac superstition and a poisoning mania passed over the best French society toward the end of the seventeenth century is commonly known, but the extent to which Mme. de Montespan was mixed up in the poison drama was never suspected before. These archives contain official reports from the then Lieutenant of Police, which prove her guilt completely.

The whole story is replete with strange horrors. Sorcery and Satanism were associated in it with wholesale husband-murder and vulgar blackmailing. Across the horrible scene flits the witchlike figure of the Marquise de Brinvilliers, beheaded in the Place de Grève for wholesale poisoning in 1676. Mme. de Montespan stands convicted by these revelations of having attempted to poison even the King himself, and though her pretense was to give him a love-philtre only, there is no further doubt that she really compassed his death. Altogether, M. Sardou could hardly have chosen a more suggestive period of French history in which to lay the plot of a play such as he knows so well how to write, combining a careful reconstruction of contemporary life with its costume and architecture and color, and with great historical as well as subtle domestic interest.

Loie Fuller's début at the Olympia last Friday night was quite a Parisian event. She is clever in always finding new developments for her dance, which in its essential parts remains, however, unchanged. So intense are the lights which are thrown upon her that "la Loie" has to wear glasses even on the stage, though these are not noticeable to the audience. However, her present performance surpasses anything which she has done hitherto.

Mlle. Zambelli, an Italian dancer, made a successful début at the Paris Opéra a few days ago in M. Widor's "Korrigane," the well-known Breton ballet. Indeed, very seldom has an Italian dancer received such an enthusiastic reception from a Parisian public. Her dancing is very graceful. She is a pupil of the well-known Mlle. Mauri.

M. Daniel Osiris, who, although a gentleman of foreign extraction, is an officer of the Legion of Honor, has added yet another prize to the long list of those which are at the disposal of the Institute of France. It was M. Osiris who, on the occasion of the Exhibition of 1889, awarded a prize of 100,000f. to Dutert, the architect of the Gallery des Machines. It was he who undertook the restoration of the Château de Malmaison, sparing no expense in giving to that favorite residence of the Empress Josephine its true historical aspect and character. Only a year or two ago the same gentleman offered another reward of 100,000f., to be discerned by the syndicate of the Parisian press, for the work—the most useful or the most beautiful—in the coming exhibition.

The task of awarding the new Prix Osiris will be left entirely to the discretion of the French Institute. The conditions of the gift provide that the interest of the fund—amounting to 33,000f. yearly—is to accumulate during the space of three years and to form a triennial prize of 100,000f., which is then to be awarded "to the most remarkable discovery or work in the domain of science, art, letters, or industry, which should have taken place or been done in the course of the preceding three years." Among the works and discoveries which M. Osiris is more particularly anxious to see rewarded are such as pertain to the surgical and medical sciences or to any of their many branches.

The municipality of Paris, in ordering the erection in one of the squares adjacent to St. Germain des Prés of M. Alexandre Charpentier's colored relief, "Les Boulangers," has taken a step in the right direction toward the encouragement of mural decoration. The subject represents the interior of a baker's kitchen, in which three vigorous figures are seen at work. One kneeds the dough, another gives it the required shape, and a third is engaged at the oven. The materials used in the composition of the work are varnished tiles, red bricks, and terra cotta. The finish is admirable, and the whole represents a hymn to the glorification of labor.

It is difficult to say when the High Court proceedings will end. Little attention is being paid to them, though they daily fill the special supplements of most of the papers. The Senate must adjourn over the Christmas holidays, and a proportion of the Senators must present themselves for reelection, and if they fail at the polls their successors cannot sit as judges. Many delicate points of constitutional law will come up for consideration in consequence of these changes, and the ultimate outcome of the whole matter is shrouded in the deepest mystery.

MEDICAL STUDENT A SUICIDE.

Body of Augustus C. Hirth Found on Woodlawn Heights—Friends Know No Cause.

While passing the woods between Martha and Crotona Avenues, on Woodlawn Heights, just north of Two Hundred and Fortieth Street, at 10 o'clock yesterday morning, Patrick Brady, a foreman of street grading, noticed the body of a well-dressed young man resting against an oak tree. The left hand was thrown over the head, and at first glance he supposed the stranger was asleep, but going nearer he saw a bullet wound in the right temple, and that the man was dead.

The body was taken to the Wakefield Police Sub-Station, where from papers found in the pockets it was identified as that of Augustus C. Hirth, twenty-two years old, a first-year student at the College of Physicians and Surgeons, and living at 129 West Sixty-first Street. There was a box of cartridges from which five were missing, and it was evident that the fatal shot had been fired at close range, for the flesh about the wound was burned and blackened with powder, but no trace of a weapon could be found. The police, however, believe it a case of suicide.

Among other effects found in the clothing was a receipt for $200 for tuition at the college and a student's card for the terms of 1899 and 1900, made out in Hirth's name. There was also an enameled gold college pin with the letters "H. M. G.," which are believed to be the initials of some school the young man previously attended. There was a bottle of collodion with a metallic contrivance for pouring it drop by drop, a gold watch and chain, and a purse containing $9.82.

A letter from a girl in Hartford was also found, but it threw no light on the case. The girl wrote that she was delighted to know that Hirth enjoyed his studies, and expressed the wish that she had taken some advanced course herself.

There was a letter from Paul Schiller of 457 West Forty-ninth Street, and many letters and receipts from Hartford bearing Hirth's name.

At the West Sixty-first Street house it was said the Hirth's home was in Hartford, but that he had boarded there with a number of his fellow-students since his matriculation, early in October. He had been looking forward to a holiday visit to his relatives. They had last seen him when he left the house after breakfast Wednesday morning, and were surprised that he had not returned.

The news of his death came as a shock, for his companions described him as of a bright and cheerful disposition and inclined to be boyish in his ways. His habits were good, they said, and they knew of no cause which could have led him to destroy himself.

A SUBURB OF HAVANA.

Vedado One of the Most Beautiful of the Resorts on the Coast—Baths Cut Out of Coral Rock.

Foreign Correspondence NEW YORK TIMES.

HAVANA, Dec. 17.—Beyond doubt the most beautiful of Havana's suburbs is Vedado, situated on the coast about three miles from the city proper, and reached by "dummy" line or by coach. Another line, an electric one, has been spoken of to run from the city along the coast to the Playa of Marianao, a fashionable Summer resort eight miles out of town. It seems rather odd to speak of a Summer resort in Cuba, but it is a fact that the Summer temperature of points along the coast is much lower than that of many Northern cities.

As one passes through Vedado on the cars he catches glimpses of many beautiful homes, surrounded by palms and tropical flowers. A number of the houses are two stories in height, an unusual thing in Cuba. Many houses, though, and very handsome ones, too, have only one story, with six, eight, ten, and even more rooms on the one floor. Unlike those in the city, the yards surround the houses, and do not have the houses built around them. The yards are laid out in very pretty floral designs, the beds being surrounded by stone, concrete, or wine bottles turned neck downward and put into the ground.

One of the most beautiful places is owned by a man of French origin, but now an American citizen, I understand. It reminds one of some beautiful old English mansion. The large yard is terraced and about the upper terrace, which is reached by steps, is a low, white ornamental fence, such as one sees abroad. All through the grounds statuary is scattered. There are several delightful little Summer houses, lighted by electricity, and two or three pretty fountains. This place, like most of the others, is surrounded by a high iron fence with huge iron gates.

Along the shore are baths cut out of the coral rock. The water rushes in over the top and out of the exit holes lower down. Suspended from the sheds covering these are ropes, with the help of which one may resist the strong waves. It is not an altogether safe experiment to enter one of these baths while there is a heavy surf. The rocks without are so sharp and dangerous, that it is forbidden to the soldiers stationed here to bathe from them. They must use the poles. In fact, one soldier was killed a short while ago by being dashed on the rocks, and another very seriously injured. The baths are free for all, they are all along the shore between here and town.

Often the surf is very strong, and the breakers dash high on the rocks. At times the lower parts of the town are covered with several inches of water. It would certainly be unfortunate for any ship to be dashed on this shore, for it would take but a short time for her to be ground to pieces on these rocks. After every storm there are dozens of people on the shore looking for shells and corals that have been washed in. There are small, pretty shells of many varieties, but few large ones. The corals are beautiful, the brain coral predominating; this resembles the convolutions of the brain, hence its name. In town some of the smaller shells, bright, glossy ones, are sold for watch charms. Necklaces for children are made of the same kind. Little boxes of shells and coral are about to start to the States, as Christmas gifts for friends.

On Sunday evenings a Cuban band plays in Caranza Park for an hour or more just before sunset, and then all of the seats are occupied with the wealth, beauty, and fashion of Vedado. The selections are for the most part popular. First, last, and in the middle of the programme the Cuban air, "Bayamesa"—so called from the revolutionary centre of the insurgents—is played, and in compliment to the Americans the National airs of our country are also given.

No. 179, Columbus Avenue and One Hundred and First Street, forty-eight classrooms.

Addition to No. 5, One Hundred and Forty-first Street, near Edgecombe Avenue, eight classrooms.

Addition to No. 138, William's Bridge, eleven classrooms.

NEWS OF AUSTRALASIA

Surrender of Samoa Arouses Feeling in the Colonies.

NO WORK FOR BOYS AND GIRLS

The Bad Effects of Some Labor Laws—The Servant Girl Problem in New Zealand.

Foreign Correspondence NEW YORK TIMES.

WELLINGTON, N. Z., Nov. 25.—No more unwelcome tidings could have been wafted to Australasia than that Great Britain had come to an arrangement with Germany to hand over to that power the control and management of the lion's share of Samoa. The transfer has occurred at a time when there is little disposition to call into question the wisdom of Great Britain in surrendering Samoa without previously taking the colonies into her confidence on the question. The outbreak of the Transvaal war has brought with it a tidal wave of imperialism all over the colonies of Australasia, and the feeling is so intense that for the moment the colonists generally are blind to the danger of having a great European power like Germany brought into such close proximity to their shores. Had the proposal been put before them in a time of peace, there would have been a howl of indignation from all the British dependencies in these seas and a stubborn diplomatic effort to prevent Germany from obtaining the foothold she has gained in Samoa.

Powerless as the colonies now are, without any hope of getting the thing undone, a strong undercurrent of feeling prevails that Great Britain has not treated the Australian colonies as she ought to have done, and this sense of injustice will become intensified with the restoration of peace and a more thorough realization of the dangers to which Germany's presence as a close and powerful neighbor exposes us. It is well known that Germany's interference in Samoan affairs has always been repugnant to the wishes of the majority of the inhabitants of that country, and no less to Australasians, whose chief desire has ever been to keep foreign European control out of the Southern Pacific as much as possible. To this end, resistance has always been offered against the acquisition of the New Hebrides by France, and, in spite of this, Samoa has been quietly surrendered to Germany, as an expedient of British policy to cultivate the friendship of that nation in a fleeting emergency.

The only atom of consolation we can discover in the arrangement is that Tutuila is to be American, and that an alliance between the two great English-speaking nations of the world can at any time minimize the dangers arising from such an undesirable Germanic proximity to our coasts. One immediate effect of the handing over of Samoa to Germany will be this: It will impress the colonies with the necessity of inaugurating and gradually perfecting a combined system of defense on land and sea, as well for internal safety as for the protection of their commerce with the outside world and the insuring of a greater influence in the councils of the mother land.

After many years of fruitless negotiation, the Colony of New Zealand has at last succeeded in impressing upon the authorities at Washington the desirableness of establishing a parcels post system between the two countries. This handy and expeditious method of interchange will be of considerable benefit to commercial circles in America, for it will enable mercantile firms in the Republic to feel the pulse of Colonial markets; as it were, by the introduction of samples of their special wares instead of forwarding bulkier consignments without any certainty of disposing of them at paying rates. In addition to this, it will bring American residents in New Zealand—and there are a good many of them, naturalized and otherwise—into closer touch with their relatives on the other side of the Pacific, as it will enable them to send parcels to and fro at a trifling cost without the present trouble of shipment by trading vessels and the passing of customs entries at either end.

New Zealand is a progressive country so far as labor legislation is concerned. Many of its laws on the subject are yet in an experimental stage, and how far they will succeed in improving the relations between capital and labor is, to a great extent, problematical. In some respects this advanced legislation has been productive of good results, but in others the effect is less assuring. Take, for example, the new law which has just come into operation for regulating the employment of girls and boys under eighteen years of age. Under this enactment no boy or girl can be employed in any shop or factory without being paid a minimum wage of 5 shillings and 4 shillings per week, respectively, from the very start of such employment.

Primarily, the object of this act of Parliament was to prevent girls being taken on by unscrupulous employers, kept for a twelvemonth without any wages whatever under the pretense of learning a trade, and then cast adrift in order to make room for fresh hands on the same conditions. Unfortunately Parliament has gone a step further, and decreed that no employer can accept a premium from, or on behalf, of any boy or girl. An official of the Labor Department, a State institution, can prosecute any employer for an infringement of the act in this way, and a heavy fine will be the consequence of conviction. This provision has already been found to be inimical to the interests of boys and girls, but more especially to the former. Employers are refusing to take them into their employment under indentures, when the law forbids them to accept premiums and compels them to pay the boys' wages from the beginning.

Sooner than be bothered with teaching them trades under such one-sided conditions, masters are evincing a disposition to dispense with boy and girl labor altogether, and to employ adult skilled artisans only. Already that plan has been adopted by several firms, and if it becomes as general as it threatens to do, the question arises, What is to become of our boys and girls? Already numbers of them have been thrown out of work, and unless the act is altered when Parliament next meets the avenues of employment will be closed in various directions and comparatively few boys will be able to learn trades of any kind. The effect of the new law will not prove so generally mischievous, however, in the case of girls, except that their preference for shop and factory life must be exchanged, however reluctantly, for domestic service.

All over the colonies the servant girl is a very important, independent, and oftentimes exceedingly impracticable personage. The colonial servant girl commands the situation. She is well paid, well housed and fed in most instances, and is worked no harder than her prototype in other countries. She may be as untrained and inefficient as any domestic servant could be, but nevertheless she will hold out for the highest wages and impose conditions that her mistress must comply with, or she will leave at a moment's notice. Some of the characteristic independence of the colonial servant girl springs from the knowledge that in her election of lawmakers she has just as much to say as the master or mistress who employs here, for every adult man and woman, poor and wealthy alike, possesses the electoral franchise in precisely the same degree.

IN FOREIGN MISSIONS' BEHALF.

Preparations Made for the Ecumenical Conference in April.

The Secretaries of the Ecumenical Conference on Foreign Missions, to be held in this city next April, have issued a bulletin setting forth the progress already made in the arrangements for the event.

The conference will be truly ecumenical, gathering its membership from every section of the earth, and taking up in its discussions every phase of Christian work, even among the most remote peoples.

Ex-President Harrison has consented to act as the honorary President, and among the prominent Americans expected to attend the sessions are Ex-President Cleveland, Admiral Dewey, Rear Admiral Philip, Capt. Mahan, Justice Brewer, and John W. Foster, ex-Secretary of State. From England it is hoped that the Earls of Aberdeen and Harrowby, Lords Kinnaird and Overtoun, the Archbishop of Canterbury, Principal Fairbairn, Mrs. Monuro Gibson and Grattan Guinness, Prof. H. G. O. Moule and others will come.

From the mission field there is assurance of a large representation. A partial list includes, from India, Mr. Jacob Chamberlain, Bishop Thoburn, the Rev. J. E. Abbott, the Rev. L. B. Wolf; from China, Dr. William Ashmore, President D. Z. Sheffield, the Rev. J. Hudson Taylor, Dr. H. H. Lowry; from Japan, Dr. M. L. Gordon, the Rev. J. L. Dearing, Dr. Julius Soper, and from Turkey, Dr. H. H. Barnum, Dr. H. O. Dwight, and Miss Corinna Shattuck.

The Committees of Arrangement have estimated the expenses of the Conference at $40,000, which must be raised by voluntary contributions. Any one desiring to subscribe may send money order or check drawn to the order of George Foster Peabody, Treasurer, 27 Pine Street.

OPENING OF THE HOLY DOOR.

Description of the Solemn Religious Services Attending the Catholic Ceremony in Rome.

Correspondence of The Baltimore Sun.

ROME, Dec. 10.—The thoughts of people in many lands are turning toward Rome and the opening of the Holy Door, which marks the beginning of the year of jubilee.

The slight illness of the Pope during the week brought again to mind the feeble tenure on which he holds life, for he is so thin that his countenance at times seems diaphanous, and it is only by his energy and will that the spirit is held within its frail tenement. Yet it was in fulfilling one of the duties of his office—that of presiding at a sitting of the Congregation of Rites—that the Pontiff overwearied himself and was obliged to take to bed.

Now, however, he is completely restored to health, and on Friday morning he celebrated mass, that being the Feast of the Immaculate Conception, and afterward he gave a few necessary audiences to Mgr. Tripepi, Substitute Secretary of State, and to Cardinal Rampolla, Secretary of State, the latter audience enduring for more than an hour.

THE POPE'S HEALTH.

Yesterday the Pope again received, and one of those to whom audience was granted informed me that there was not the least sign of illness about the Pope.

His physician, Dr. Lapponi, is, however, anxious that he should husband his strength in view of the demands that will be made upon it by the ceremony of the opening of the Holy Door in St. Peter's, and the receptions of pilgrims which will mark the beginning of the jubilee.

In order that Leo XIII. may suffer as little fatigue as possible, vestments of very light material are being prepared for his wear on the occasion of the opening of the Holy Door. Workmen are busy in the vestibule of St. Peter's, closing up with boards the fine gates in order that an even and warm temperature may be maintained during the time the Pope will stay there. The ceremony also will be shortened.

Platforms and tribunes are being constructed for the use of the Cardinals, the prelates, the Chapter of St. Peter's, the Ambassadors and Ministers accredited from foreign nations to the Holy See, the Knights of Malta, and the Roman nobility. After all these are accommodated space for about 500 persons will be left, and ten times that number are making applications for these places.

The formalities to be used at the ceremony of Dec. 24, which will take place at 11 in the morning rather than the usual hour of 5 in the afternoon, will be very much like those used on the last occasion of opening the Holy Door. These are recounted in an interesting and timely work recently published by the Cavaliere Virginio Prinzivalli.

OPENING THE HOLY DOOR.

On the vigil of Christmas, writes Prinzivalli, the Porta Santa was opened by the Pope according to the prescribed ritual. From his apartments he proceeded to the Chapel of Sixtus IV., where he adored the Blessed Sacrament.

Afterward, candles were distributed to the Cardinals and to all those who took part in the procession. The Pope, having received the gilded candle from a Cardinal Deacon, and having intoned the Veni Creator, ascended into the sedia gestatoria, and with a mitre on his head and a candle in his hand the white silk canopy being held over him, he descended the Royal Staircase toward the Vatican Basilica.

Then he descended from the sedia gestatoria and, assisted by two Cardinal Deacons, he ascended the throne which had been prepared for him.

Then he came forward to the Porta Santa and thrice did he strike the wall—for it is built up of brick work—with the silver hammer which was presented to him by the Cardinal Grand Penitentiary, intoning in the meanwhile the words: "Aperite mihi portas Justitiae"—"Open ye to me the Gates of Justice."

Then he gave back the hammer to the Cardinal, and, having returned to the throne, he gave a sign and the door was lowered to the ground and carried away.

The penitentiaries then washed the threshold and the jambs of the door.

The Pope, having taken off his miter, rose to his feet and recited the prayer imploring the help of the Almighty.

Then, having turned again to the Holy Door, now open, he, with a stafflike cross in his right hand and in his left a lighted candle, intoning the Te Deum, entered the church by the newly opened entrance, followed by the Cardinals and all the members of the Pontifical Court.

Then he ascended into the sedia gestatoria, and having descended and knelt at the Altar of the Blessed Sacrament, he ascended it again, and was brought to the Altar of the Confession, where vespers were intoned.

Such are the ceremonies that accompanied the opening of the Porta Santa on the last occasion, and they are in all essentials those which will accompany it on the present occasion.

AN INTERESTING ANECDOTE.

Cavaliere Prinzivalli relates a most interesting anecdote which he heard from a person who was present at this ceremony in the year 1824.

When Pope Leo XII. returned the hammer to Cardinal Castiglioni, Cardinal Deacon, he turned to him and, in a whisper, said to him that he remembered the time that when they were both very young students together at the seminary they were acting as acolytes at the opening of the Holy Door in 1775, and that they quarreled and threatened to strike each other with the candlesticks!

These two seminary students were now together at a similar ceremony, the one as Grand Penitentiary, the other as Pope; and four years later the Penitentiary became Pope under the title of Pius VIII.

The present Pontiff, Leo XIII., has delegated three Cardinals to open the Holy Door in the three greater Basilicas. These are: For St. John Lateran, Cardinal Satolli, archpriest of that Basilica; for St. Mary Major, Cardinal Vincenzo Vannutelli, archpriest of the same, and for St. Paul's Beyond the Walls, Cardinal Oreglia di Santo Stefano, Dean of the Sacred College.

The ancient state and ceremony with which the Cardinals of old delegated to this duty performed it are to be seen no more, and it will now be carried out with "maimed rites."

A Cardinal describing the former mode a few days ago in my presence said that the Cardinal Delegate of the Pope went to the Basilica whose holy door he was appointed to open, accompanied by soldiers and by the prelates of his household in carriages and he himself in a state carriage with all the state and pomp of a Prince of the Church going to fulfill one of his most important functions.

But now all this is changed, and the Cardinal Delegate will fulfill this duty in all simplicity, and it will not be any the less effective in the minds of the people who witness it on account of its diminished ceremonial.

The idea which prevailed in the minds of some strangers in Rome that this jubilee is a time of rejoicing is a mistaken one, for it appears that repentance of sin and the fulfillment of penances and recital of prayers are its leading elements. It is in view of this that the new Cardinal Penitentiary, Cardinal Serafino Vannutelli, has issued a notification announcing the names of churches to which additional penitentiaries, with all necessary faculties and powers for the occasion, will hear confessions.

NEW HOME FOR EX-CONVICTS.

Mrs. Ballington Booth Buys a Ten-Acre Plot in Queens.

Mrs. Ballington Booth of the American Volunteers is the purchaser of the ten-acre plot on the north side of Flushing and Bayside Plank Road, Queens Borough. She paid $12,000 for the property, and will build on it a home for discharged prisoners from the State prisons.

A large dwelling, big enough to accommodate sixty men, and a barn and poultry house are on the land at present. It is intended to give the occupants temporary employment about the place at farming in the Spring, Summer, and Fall, and other work in the Winter.

BLEW HIM THROUGH A DOOR.

Exploding Gas Handled a Restaurant Waiter Roughly.

Benjamin Hunt, twenty-three years old, employed as a waiter at Freeman's restaurant, Ocean Avenue, Jersey City, yesterday had the unpleasant experience of being blown through a door, carrying the panels with him. It was his custom to open the place at 5 o'clock, and after he had lighted the gas in the hall the wind made by the side door as he closed it put out the light.

Hunt did not discover this until the hall was filled with gas. When he struck a match to relight the gas an explosion followed, and he was blown through the door. His employer, who was aroused by the noise, found Hunt unconscious on the restaurant floor. He will not be able to resume his duties for a week or two.

FAMINE RELIEF IN INDIA

Public Works Started to Keep the People from Starvation.

REFORMS BY LORD CURZON

Bids Fair to be One of the Most Successful Viceroys Known, but Is Not Socially Popular.

Foreign Correspondence NEW YORK TIMES.

SIMLA, India, Nov. 23.—The Viceroy left this city for a tour in the plains something like a month ago, while his members of council, heads of departments, and other officials of high degree, both civil and military, have also followed suit. Lord Curzon's first real tour in India has perforce been of a somewhat melancholy character. Pestilence, in the shape of the plague, we have long had with us, but now the still more dreaded famine has once more reared its head.

The plague is doubtless a terrible evil, but the suffering which it causes is as nothing when compared with all the distress, the grievous loss and calamities, the prolonged agony occasioned by a scarcity of food and water such as now afflicts vast tracts of India. For the monsoon rains, which, in spite of the ever increasing spread of irrigation throughout the country, are still the very life blood of India, have failed over an immense area. Beginning in June and July apparently favorably, the monsoon current toward the end of the latter month was for some reason or other deflected to the Arabian or African coast. At any rate, no more rain fell on the western shores of India. On the eastern, the Bengal side, rain came in normal quantities, but all the vast tract which depends for its annual supply of moisters on what is known as the Bombay current was left without the life-giving supply. Consequently all the western half of the country, a tract hundreds of thousands of square miles in area, embracing the Deccan, the Central Provinces, Central India, Gujerat, Rajputana, and the Southern Punjab, is at this moment afflicted by a grievous famine.

Not only have the crops which should ordinarily have been harvested in the month of September entirely failed through being burned up by the fierce and pitiless rays of a burning tropical sun, but it will be impossible for the peasants to plow or sow, or prepare for the crops which are harvested in the Spring. Thus the effects of a failure of the rain supply last for a whole year, since it will be impossible to carry out any further agricultural operations until the next year's monsoon rains have come. Of course the wide system of railways now happily prevailing throughout India enable grain to be freely imported into the afflicted districts, but this is of but little avail when the people have no money. Moreover, the want of water means that there is no fodder for the cattle, and in many districts nothing whatever for them to drink.

CATTLE DYING BY THOUSANDS.

The Indian peasant depends entirely on his cattle for carrying out plowing and all other agricultural operations. These are now dying by thousands all over an immense tract of country, and nothing can be done to save them. Here and there village proprietors will drive their cattle to the hills, but these are hundred of miles away, and are in not much better plight than the famine-stricken districts themselves. And on the long and weary way to these hills the cattle drop and die from sheer starvation and exhaustion, and in many cases it is to be feared that their owners, too, fall to rise no more.

If the Winter rains should also fail, concerning which it is, of course, impossible to say anything at present, it is not too much to say that a large portion of India will during the first six months of next year be afflicted with the worst famine of the century.

Under these circumstances, the duty of the Government of India is fixed and clear. It is its duty to see to it that, if possible, not one human creature shall die of want of food if such can possibly be avoided. This is the line taken up by Lord Curzon and his assistants, and it is to see that proper arrangements to effect this are being made that Lord Curzon has made his recent tour through the famine-stricken districts. Wherever there is scarcity, much less pronounced famine, test works are opened in order to see if the people are really hard pressed. If numbers of people flock to these test works, the scheme of operations is enlarged, and regular relief operations are started.

PUBLIC WORKS BEING STARTED.

Roughly speaking, these relief works may be said to be schemes for the improvement of the land. In some places wells are sunk, or tanks for the storage of water made. In other places the earthworks, embankments, cuttings, and so on, of projected railways are made, roads are constructed in districts remote from railway communications, and all sorts of similar works of utility started. The Government pays each man engaged on such works a rate of wage which is sufficient to keep him in fair comfort. For the aged and the children gratuitous relief is given, as is also done with these natives of better class whose caste or rank makes it impossible for them to engage in manual labor. In all districts, too, shops are opened where persons of small means are enabled to purchase a certain quantity of grain at something considerably less than the market rate.

Of course all this costs money—in fact, it is already apparent that one or two millions of pounds sterling will have to be provided for these famine relief works in the present financial year alone. If the Winter rains should also fail, the scheme of operations, and the consequent cost to Government, will have to be immensely extended. For the supervision of this work, too, an enormous number of English officials is required. The civil service of India is not equal to the provision of these. It is barely sufficiently manned in normal times, indeed, and when a period of stress such as the present occurs help has to be brought in from outside. To this end the military services are called in. Officers of native regiments, well acquainted with the language and customs of the people, are being now widely utilized for these purposes, and, by the unanimous reports of the heads and rulers of provinces, are doing excellent work. During the course of his tour, which has already extended over some five weeks, Lord Curzon has been personally superintending these famine relief works, and everywhere making himself acquainted at first hand with the needs of the situation. In this way should the worst come to the worst, and famine increase its present grip of the land, he will be in a position to at once take those further and more extended measures which the situation will render necessary.

LORD CURZON'S POLICY.

At the time Lord Curzon was appointed it must be confessed that his coming was looked upon somewhat dubiously here. A brilliant debater and parliamentarian, he was of course admitted by all to be. But whether such qualities would make a good Viceroy was another matter. Consequently his first official actions were somewhat eagerly scanned and criticised. In little more than a month from now he will have been a year in India, and the time may be said to have come when it is possible to offer some opinion on the quality of the work he has done in the first twelve months of his satrapy.

As to this there can be now hardly two opinions. He has justified his appointment to the full. He has infused new life into the somewhat sleepy veins of the bureaucratic Government of this country. He has everywhere awakened the officials of all classes into a keener interest in their work. He has ruthlessly cut away much of the red tape and circumlocution which hampered the business of government. In a word, he bids fair to be one of the most successful Viceroys yet known.

But Lord Curzon is not socially popular. There is no disguising that fact. He is to his inferiors haughty and high-handed. He is, indeed, often rude when it is unnecessary to be anything of the sort. He believes in keeping himself utterly aloof from his countrymen, in maintaining a more than regal dignity, in treating even his colleagues of the Government with a disdain which is hard to bear. He behaves, in fact, in a way in which great nobles such as Lords Dufferin and Lansdowne never felt themselves obliged to behave. This may be, perhaps, on account of his comparative youth. His colleagues and counselors are men much older, and more experienced in Indian affairs than himself, consequently he may think that it is necessary to be unapproachable, unattainable. He is, in fact, in all things the "superior person" of his Oxford days. But as a ruler he is a success.

THE CRAIL MEMORIAL WINDOW.

There will be unveiled for the morning service in the Church of the Holy Trinity, at Lenox Avenue and One Hundred and Twenty-second Street, to-day a new window, designed and executed by Francis Lathrop, the well-known decorative artist, and which has been placed in the church by Mr. Leander H. Crall in memory of his wife. Mr. Lathrop has achieved deserved reputation for his work in stained glass and his mural decorations of late years, his chef d'oeuvre being the chancel windows and decorations in St. Bartholomew's Church in this city.

The present window, while not as large and ambitious a work as some that Mr. Lathrop has executed, is, however, the most satisfactory, and, in some ways, the most artistic that he has yet produced. Its unveiling at this Christmas time is appropriate, its subject being "The Adoration of the Magi," and with its rich and deep color, fine composition, and rarely devotional atmosphere, it adds much to the effect of the beautiful interior of Holy Trinity. When it shall have been supplemented by the three windows illustrating the Crucifixion, Resurrection, and Ascension, which it is purposed to place on the south wall of the church, Holy Trinity, with this tryptich and the present window, will be worthy the attention of all art lovers.

The Crall memorial window contains thirteen life-size figures, and is 23 feet high by 7 feet wide. Placed on the north wall, it has, naturally, a north light, and so is seen to great advantage. Mr. Lathrop has aimed at a freedom of composition and a completeness of drawing and expression which belong more to work on canvas than to that in stained glass in this window; but with his knowledge of the material he has so employed its resources as to give to it that translucency and glow of color that no painting on canvas can attain. While keeping to the traditions of religious art in his treatment of the subject, he has not confined himself to the conventional forms usually followed in ecclesiastical windows. The result is that he has produced an art work rather than solely and simply a church window, and one that must bring him added fame. There is a suggestion in the composition of the central group of that most satisfactory of modern Madonnas, "The Flight into Egypt," of Knaus, by some art lovers and critics placed above most of the more famous Madonnas of earlier men. Seated on the raised platform of a rude building, the Virgin holds in her lap the infant Christ, St. Joseph stands behind her, and in the foreground, on the right, are the Wise Men, with their attendants, offering their gifts of gold and incense. The child Christ observes not the glittering gifts of the Magi, but the branch of thorn, the nails and hammer, rope and sponge, as well as the spear carried by one of the attendants. These, with the exception of the spear, are assembled on the timbers of the interior of the stable building, which are so shaped as to indicate a cross. Over and behind these figures in the foreground is the thatched roof of the building, while through a window top is seen a group of five angels singing the Christmas anthem. The light falls from the crescent moon in the sky above the angels, and from the Star of Bethlehem, which shines below over the stable roof. The effect of radiated light from the moon and star has been cleverly managed. As a composition and in richness of color and tone gradations the window, or, rather, picture, is remarkably fine, but its effect is chiefly due to the devotional spirit which Mr. Lathrop has breathed into his work, and which is rare in any art work of this material and unpoetic age.

SMALL BRONZES AT ARTS CLUB.

For the holiday fortnight the Exhibition Committee of the National Arts Club has arranged a little showing of bronzes which are for the most part objects suited for the decoration of interiors, drawing rooms, parlors, the office, balconies, and terraces. Certainly for a club which opened its doors on the 30th of October the new arts club is making a record for exhibitions. This is its fourth since that date, the others having been exhibitions of gold and silver objects, paintings, and water colors by the Woman's Art Club, and art pottery by Americans.

The principle followed is the same, for whereas the gallery is not overcrowded, American bronze work and models in plaster to be cast in bronze form the bulk of the exhibition; but fine specimens of modern French, Belgian, and German work are added, together with beautiful old pieces from unknown workmen of the remote past in Europe and Asia, delightful specimens of Italian and French work of the fifteenth and sixteenth centuries, and bronzes from China and Japan, as well of to-day as of former centuries.

Small bronzes by Frederick MacMonnies come from the shop of Theodore B. Starr, and comprise his "Boy and Heron," "Venus and Adonis," and "Running Cupid," as well as reductions of his "Bacchanté" and "Pan." From the same shop come the clever busts of Max Bachmann, including his "Silenus," with its broad and leering face, and his impish "Faun." The late Olin L. Warner is represented by reductions of ideal bronze busts, bas reliefs of Indians, and a free-hand plaster cast portrait of a comely young woman. The President of the Sculpture Society shows a small bronze bell, very beautifully modeled. Mr. Ward cast gold and silver into this bell while the metal was in flux, which may or may not account for its clear and brilliant tone. He is represented by the bronze reduction of his famous "Freedman," one of the finest creations of his life, and another reduction of his "Shakespeare," in Central Park.

Herbert Adams has a pretty little bowl, shaped like the petals of a tiger lily, and a bas relief portrait which shows his charming gift. From Paul W. Bartlett there is a statuette called "Ad

WITH THE BOERS AT WAR

Transvaal Forces Exhibit Little or No Bitterness.

WOMEN SHOW MOST FEELING

In Some Cases Men Who Return from the Front Are Forced by the Wives to Return to Their Commands.

Foreign Correspondence NEW YORK TIMES.

CAPE TOWN, Nov. 22.—Particulars of further engagements between the British and Boer forces in Natal state that two companies of British mounted troops engaged about 300 of the enemy about eight miles from Estcourt. The Boers occupied a strong position, but were driven back with great loss. Only one trooper on the British side was wounded. Sharp skirmishes have taken place at Kimberley. While reconnoitering with a small body of mounted troops at Otto's Kopje, near the Free State border, Major Scott Turner was attacked by Boers under cover of artillery fire. The British again carried off the honors of the day, about a dozen Boers being either killed or wounded, while the only casualties on the British side were two men wounded. A squadron of the Kimberley Light Horse, under Major Peakman, had a skirmish with the enemy at Carter's farm, the result of which is uncertain but hopeful. The bombardment of Kimberley has been resumed by the Boers, with, however, only one casualty, an old colored woman being killed by a shell. The Boers have entered Aliwal North, Cape Colony, where they have hoisted the Transvaal and Free State flags, and have given British subjects fourteen days' notice to quit. Burkhersdorp, also in Cape Colony, where the Dutch element is particularly strong and anti-British feeling very pronounced, has also been occupied by the Boers.

OCCUPATION OF COLESBERG.

Proceeding further south in Cape Colony, the Boers have now occupied Colesberg. They entered the town early in the morning without arousing the inhabitants. When the people awoke, they saw all the kopjes round the town dotted with armed men and horses. Shortly after sunrise the Boers called on the Magistrate, from whom they obtained the keys of the public offices, in front of which a crowd soon assembled to see the Free State flag hoisted. As this reached the top of the staff the rope broke, and for some time the flag could neither be secured nor got down. A burgher was sent up, but could not reach it. Eventually, however, the flag was hauled down and tied to a bamboo, which was lashed to the staff half-mast high, where it remains.

The Magistrate attempted to address the townspeople, but was told by a man named Rothmann to "shut up," as the town was now Free State territory, and he had no longer the right to speak. Rothmann, a resident of the town, was fined a short time ago for cursing the Queen. However, the burghers intervened, and allowed the Magistrate to continue his speech. He requested all loyal subjects to remain quiet. Commandant Grobbelaar then mounted a few packing cases, and made an eloquent and impassioned speech, calling on all Afrikanders to come to their help. He quoted Scripture copiously, and mentioned Naboth's vineyard. He said they had done their best to make peace, but England demanded more and more, and they had either to crawl in the dust and say "What's ours is yours; come, take it," or stand up like men and fight until they were victorious or every man had fallen. He appealed to all Afrikanders in the name of blood relationship, of nationality, and of belief. How long, he asked, would they bear the yoke of England, 7,000 miles away? Were they hogs? He concluded a telling speech by asking them all to listen while the proclamation was read. Commandant Schoeman followed, and indorsed everything Grobbelaar had said, and appealed to the women for their prayers in a "righteous cause."

He said, "We will win over and over again, for God is on our side." After the reading of the proclamation, the meeting dispersed to the singing of the Free State and Transvaal "Volkslieder," the Britishers looking on in sullen silence.

MUST SUPPORT THE BOERS.

Commandant Grobbelaar stated that any person not wishing to be loyal to the new Government must leave the town within seven days. Being subsequently asked whether quiet non-combatants would be allowed to remain in their homes, he said he thought so. He further intimated that all property would be respected and everything wanted would be paid for, or a receipt given within seven days.

The Boer force, about 1,300 strong, camped at the south end of the town. The men were splendidly mounted and had double bandoliers full of ammunition; they had half a dozen Maxims with them. A further force of 1,500 is expected to arrive in the town in a day or two. They are sanguine of success and state their destination is Cape Town via De Aar.

The Boers are accompanied by their native servants, who are armed. Their supplies are conveyed by means of about twenty wagons, among which is the provision van of a Johannesburg firm, bearing an advertisement in huge letters, advising the use of a well-known local brand of tea. The Boers treated the inhabitants of the town with all politeness, but some of them, arriving before the Commandant, when the bars were closed, contrived to secure a number of bottles of whisky, the effects of which were soon noticeable in some of the burghers, accidents, serious, and in one case fatal, befalling riders in consequence.

A good many of this force are Johannesburghers. Their aim in annexing Colesberg is to allow sympathizers to join, without, as they think, being guilty of treason. Those of this force who fought at Elandslaagte are principally Free Staters. The Colonial Military Police of the town managed, though narrowly, to escape capture.

At other towns in the north of the colony the Boers have not acted with the same forbearance as at Colesberg, their behavior being described as that of brigands.

The British forces have gained two decisive victories over the Boers at Ladysmith. On both occasions, the Boers, who were in great force, fought with the utmost stubbornness, but were repulsed with a loss estimated at between 700 and 800 men.

ARTILLERY ATTACK OPENED.

The Boers commenced the attack early in the morning, their artillery pouring shell thickly on the positions taken up by the British, but without any great effect. Advancing under cover of their guns, the Boers took up positions on the ridges and kopjes adjacent to those occupied by the British. The latter were on the alert and quickly left the camp where they had been standing to arms, and lined the hills surrounding the town. Continuing their advance, the Boers crept up, using every available bit of cover, but the British infantry opened a steady, warm and accurate fire, which beat back the Boers, notwithstanding they displayed a tenacity of purpose quite equal to their desperate attacks on previous occasions. Affecting as it did all sides of the town, the attack of the Boers was most elaborate. The main attack was sustained by a column composed chiefly of Johannesburg volunteers, and a splendid defense was kept up on the British side by the Rifle Brigade and the King's Royal Rifles, which regiment is composed solely of men excelling as marksmen. They repulsed the Boers, who rallied and returned to the attack, but were again forced to retire. As part of their siege works the Boers had made a deep trench in the open in front of the British lines, and at one period they retired with the intention of bringing forward their horses. It was promptly discovered by the British that this important work had been left unguarded, and, seizing the opportunity, the Rifle Brigade advanced at the double and occupied the trench. This smart movement was quite unnoticed by the Boers, who were soon seen returning with their mounts. Carefully reserving their fire, the Rifle Brigade allowed the illated Boer force to advance almost to the edge of the trench and then fired into the astonished Boers volley after volley. Turning and fleeing from the awful hail of bullets the Boers bolted across a piece of open ground, when the artillery of the British poured in a terrible shell fire at this point. Taken by surprise on the ground without any cover and in disordered retreat, the Boers naturally lost very heavily. The Boers had brought into action a mortar, from which they were firing heavy shells. One of the guns of the British concentrated its fire on this dangerous piece of artillery and before long had put it out of action. The Boer artillerymen fled from their dangerous position and, taking advantage of this cessation in their fireproof, the British fifteen-pounders galloped into position and trained their guns on it. At noon the Boers returned in considerable force and put the mortar in working order again. This was the signal for the British guns from their advantageous position to open fire. A couple of shells were thrown into the midst of the advancing Boers and scattered them right and left, quite dispelling any hopes on their part of again using the mortar in the action.

BOERS DRIVEN BACK.

Taking a general view of the action, the Boers were driven back at every point, and while their loss is stated to have been at least 700 men, their shelling did no injury to the British troops.

Apart from some intermittent shelling, Ladysmith was then left severely alone by the Boers. The next important engagement took place after a lapse of five days. A strong force of the British, composed chiefly of cavalry and artillery, went out on reconnoitring duty, and came in contact with the Boers. The British troops drove the Boers back on their main position. The British shell inflicted considerable damage, but only one man was wounded on their side.

The lyddite shells are having a most terrifying effect on the Boers, who have become so demoralized in consequence that it is reported they have to be driven to work their guns with leaded revolvers pointed at their heads. Ladysmith is regarded as perfectly safe, as it is capable of holding out for months, and it is said not only that the Boers are becoming disheartened, but that dysentery is working havoc among them.

A second visit has been paid by United States Consul General Stowe to the Boer prisoners at Simon's Bay. As previously stated, the Consul General, acting on a communication from Washington, has instructed his Consul at Pretoria to watch the interests of the British prisoners and to forward weekly reports. He has also been requested to honor the officers' checks. Col. Stowe is doing a similar work in Cape Town in connection with the Boer prisoners, whose letters have been forwarded by him to the Transvaal, via the Consular agency at Delagoa Bay, all postal and other communication in the ordinary way being, of course, long since cut off. The Boer prisoners on board the Penelope are well treated and exceedingly comfortable, although they are naturally rather cramped on board and would prefer to be on shore. Possibly some such arrangements may be made later on.

On board the Penelope the Consul General had a few minutes' chat with Col. Schiel, (whose wound is rapidly healing,) Capt. von Leggelo, and the other officers, who are very anxious that they should be exchanged, if possible. The prisoners have been provided by their friends with new suits of clothes and quantities of cigars, cigarettes, novels, and other luxuries wherewith to while away the time. Col. Stowe subsequently visited her Majesty's ship Doris, and upon his departure was accorded the usual salute of nine guns. Later the wounded soldiers at Wynberg camp received a visit from Col. Stowe.

NOT A FAIR SAMPLE.

It would appear that the Dutch forces at present occupying Colesberg are by no means a fair sample of the average Boer commando. A colonial farmer had an interview with Commandant Odendaal of the Bethulie (Free State) commando, which had crossed into the colony, it appears, without orders. This commando is composed for the most part of old men and boys, and is a very battered brigade. The Commandant was by no means so sanguine as the majority of his compatriots appear to be. On the contrary, he seemed most depressed, saying that the campaign was going against the Boers. He further stated that the Free State Government was not supplying the commando with provisions, and that the farmers were getting tired of the everlasting commandeering. Measles, too, had broken out among the boys, and the commando presented the appearance more of a hospital than a camp. The Sub-Commandant is a Cape Dutchman named Van Deerden, who is described as a drunken, worthless fellow. He amuses himself by riding to the farms of Englishmen and telling them that all stock belongs to the Free State and forbidding removal on pain of death. Van Deerden got drunk one night at a hotel in the colony, and in the darkness lost his way, spending his time riding up and down the corn lands of a Dutch farmer and finally cutting the fence. The farmer is now seeking Van Deerden with a gun.

Previous to the outbreak of hostilities, and while the negotiations between Sir Alfred Milner and President Krüger were proceeding, the Bond were holding meetings throughout Cape Colony. Worcester is regarded as a stronghold of that political organization, but a Mr. Winterbach, a resident of the town, invited his fellow-townsmen to a meeting for the purpose of expressing sympathy with the Uitlanders and confidence in Sir Alfred Milner. No sooner was the meeting assembled than it was forcibly taken possession of by an organized opposition, which dispersed the meeting and very seriously assaulted its convener. The fine imposed on two of his assailants by the local Magistrate, Mr. Winterbach, regarded as insufficient solace for the suffering and indignity he had met with at their hands. An appeal to the Supreme Court has resulted in the jury's awarding Mr. Winterbach damages to the extent of £500.

EXECUTED FOR TREASON.

Among the many officials who knew him on the midland line of the Cape Government railways, great consternation has been caused by a report from Mafeking to the effect that Mr. Quinlan, station master at that town, has been executed for the crime of high treason. In the several departments in various parts of the colony with which he had been connected, he was always a popular official.

Mr. I. Van der Walt has gone over to the Boers at Colesberg. He states that he has kept his mouth shut long enough. England has not protected them, and now the Free State has shown that it would protect them, so he has joined the Boers.

The Premier of Cape Colony has sent the following telegram to the Civil Commissioners of several country districts: "You should make it known to your district that, notwithstanding any rumors, it is not intended to call out the burgher forces. It is considered that the military forces of the Crown are sufficient to preserve, or, in case of temporary incursion by the enemy, to restore order, and that all that is expected of an ordinary citizen is that he should remain loyal to her Majesty, and give no countenance to her enemies." It would undoubtedly surprise the majority of the residents, at any rate, of the towns of Cape Colony, to learn that the old burgher law of the Dutch still exists there equally with the Transvaal and Orange Free State, and that under it the Government has the power to commandeer as in the case of the republics. In view of the sympathies of the Cape Government there is not the remotest probability of this law's being put in force in any case, nor can there arise any need for the adoption of such a course.

The tonnage taken by the Imperial Government for transport purposes exceeds 150 vessels, aggregating 700,000 tons. This means that an amount of British tonnage has been removed from its regular trade equal to nearly three-fourths of the entire steam tonnage of France.

WITH THE PRISONERS.

One sees and hears much that is strange on board the Penelope at Simon's Bay, where are now incarcerated the prisoners of war taken by the British. Among the visitors was a conspicuous Bondman from Wellington, a thriving Dutch village about thirty miles from Cape Town. He approached the group with the evident intention of greeting the central figure, a prisoner, who, however, on seeing him, exclaimed in loud and stern tones: "You here, too, you traitor! Where are your bondsmen who led Oom Paul to believe you would rush to his assistance? You are a mean, low lot. Away with your Bond! You call yourselves men!"

There was a noticeable change of color in the face of the Bondman, who replied: "Look here, old chap, don't talk so loud; you may be sorry some day for what you have just said."

"What! Me afraid! me sorry!" retorted the prisoner impatiently. "Oh, no; I am colonial born, but as I threw in my lot with the Transvaal, became a burgher, and have all my property there. I fought for Oom Paul, and I am not ashamed of him. But you traitors, I call you cowards."

The Bondman interrupted by saying: "But you are of English descent, and you fight for the Transvaal."

"What!" replied the prisoner. "I am not ashamed of that. You have a free colony under the British flag. No, it's you fellows, you Bond traitors, traitors to your Queen, traitors to Oom Paul, who ought to be ashamed of yourselves."

The Bondman gave an expression of disgust and walked away.

It now appears that the redoubtable Boer leader, Commandant Ben Viljoen, was neither killed at Elandslaagte, as was thought at the Cape, nor taken prisoner by the British, as was thought in the Transvaal.

By virtue of the prominent part which he has recently taken in the affairs of the Transvaal, Commandant Ben Viljoen merits a few words of description. He is a man of violent anti-English sentiments, and not long since was elected a member of the Second Raad for the constituency of Witwatersrand, which includes Johannesburg, Boxburg, and the surrounding district. In spite, however, of his reputation for violence and his newly acquired dignity as a legislator, he is normally a quiet, unassuming man, pleasant spoken and civil, and is not ashamed to go to market to purchase his daily supply of vegetables, which he brings home on his shoulders. Nevertheless, for some fancied slight, he recently unmercifully slamboked a telegraph clerk, and pleaded in court temporary aberration in justification of his conduct. He is credited with force of character and dogged determination.

RAPID RISE TO FAME.

Although he was born in Cape Colony he settled at an early age in the Transvaal. Here he has risen from the position of an ordinary policeman to that of a legislator and special commandant of a post which for various reasons is considered the most important of its kind in the Transvaal. His fortunes have been most associated with the town of Krugersdorp, and he was a leading spirit among that fiery band of Dutchmen chiefly celebrated for their anti-English sentiments—that gained for the town the unenviable name of Devilsdorp. It is not generally known by what means Viljoen acquired the fair amount of education he possesses, and which enabled him to launch into journalism and write vigorous articles in the "vaal" the patois best understood and appreciated by the Boer, and wanting all the complexities of style and grammar involved in the use of "Hoog Hollandsch."

After acting as editor to Das Land, the Dutch organ of Cape Town, he acquired a controlling interest in the Doortrekker, the career of which was greatly marred by the dissensions of the proprietary, in which Viljoen took a prominent part. Viljoen's position on the latter paper was, strangely enough, taken by an ex-Englishman, whose lucubrations were more violently anti-English than those even of Viljoen himself. At the last annual election for the Second Raad, Mr. Viljoen, having quitted journalism, contested the seat for the Witwatersrand, for which he was returned by a large majority of voters, owing to the support of the poverty-stricken class of Boers who have recently been flocking to Johannesberg, and of the liquor interest, he being an ardent advocate of a permissory liquor law, for the supply of liquor to natives. A flaw in the election was, however, discovered by the Progressives, who stated that some of Mr. Viljoen's agents had supplied free drinks to their candidate's supporters on the day of election, and that some ballot boxes were opened at the wrong time. The Second Raad, always favorable to old members irrespective of politics, declared the election null and void, and ordered another to be opened.

MADE ANOTHER FIGHT.

Nothing daunted, Mr. Viljoen, though not a rich man, stood again. Meantime his opponent, Mr. Guildhuis, had fought for the vacancy in the First Raad, had been defeated, and, recognizing another contest would mean defeat, retired in disgust, and Mr. Viljoen was returned without any opposition to speak of. During his short political career Mr. Viljoen did not have much opportunity of distinguishing himself in a legislative capacity. He, however, introduced one or two important measures and succeeded in gaining the favor and confidence of the Government. Although Commandants, being paid officials, are forbidden by law to sit in the Raad, Mr. Viljoen was appointed Special Commandant of Johannesburg under a clause and in terms of laws which provide for the special treatment of the gold fields. As soon as trouble with Great Britain threatened Viljoen set about to organize an Afrikander Corps for the assistance of the Transvaal Government. This corps was the very first in the field to offer its services, establishing branch corps and electing officers, getting everything in readiness, and requesting to be armed. The corps waited in vain for any recognized appreciation or trust, and while waiting saw German and Hollander corps being fully armed and equipped. Mr. Viljoen was exceedingly disgusted at the treatment he and his fellow-Afrikanders had received, and finally the corps broke up and waited for the usual process of commandeering before taking the field. In public he always urged defiance of Great Britain and a prosecution of the Afrikander idea of establishing a great nation under its own flag. As a Second Raad member he could speak only in secret regarding his opinions, for the Second Raad's opinion in the recent negotiations was consulted and given privately. But there can be no doubt as to the direction in which his influence was used.

Among the items of news that find their way from the Transvaal is the information that Mr. B. G. Brecher, member of the Second Raad for Vryheid, has succumbed to wounds received at the battle of Dundee. Mr. Brecher was one of those who "trekked" into Zululand and helped to found the new republic, ultimately absorbed into the republic as the district of Vryheid. Although he took an active part against the British in the war of independence and was present at the battle of Majuba Hill, Mr. Brecher was by no means a typical Boer. There was about him nothing of the intolerent, narrow-mined prejudice so characteristic of the race. He represented Vryheid in the Second Raad from the time of its creation, and was always one of the most progressive of the members of that body. Mr. Brecher was about the only member of the Raad whom President Krüger was unable to silence by a word or a frown, and from his frequent and outspoken opposition to the President was by no means a favorite in high quarters. From long contact with the English, he had developed a strong regard for them, and was perfectly acquainted with their language. In the Raad, where sentiments of hatred toward the British have always been regarded as a virtue, he had never been known to give utterance to a bitter expression against the paramount power.

OPPOSES THE GOVERNMENT.

The acts and policy of the Government frequently filled him with disgust and indignation, which was so strongly expressed that on one occasion he and Dr. Leyds nearly came to blows. Nevertheless, he was a sturdy supporter of the country's independence. Although he frequently predicted that the policy of the Government which he so strongly opposed would ultimately be the ruin of the country, he did not hesitate to take up arms in the present trouble, which he had exerted himself so powerfully to avert, and in the disasters of which he was among the first to suffer.

Cases of scurvy have made their appearance among the English prisoners at Pretoria. The soldiers have now been transferred to Wakwal Farm, and have asked the Government not to give them tinned food, which is most inferior and fit only for cattle.

The Hollander corps, which was thoroughly routed at Elandslaagte, is to be reorganized. The press of Pretoria is urging the Government to commandeer the five stock of butchers who will not continue their business and to commandeer the butchers to assist in the slaughter of cattle and the distribution of meat.

Among the reports which leak through from the Transvaal is one to the effect that some curiosity is expressed as to what has become of the commandeered gold. It does not seem to have found its way into the Pretoria Treasury and considerable portions are missing.

Johannesburg, so far, is quiet and safe. There are now not more than a hundred English there, but plenty of other nationalities. The banks open for a few hours daily, and tennis is played between "the chains" of the Stock Exchange. The Boers from the front occasionally visit their families, who are living in fashionable people's houses and talk of the Boers' victories and heroism and British cowardice and cruelty. Bread was reported bad at the front, and the vrows set to work and commandeered a bakery, and are making the staff of life for the Boers. The women are more enthusiastic than the men, and often send to the front husbands and sons. Two instances are known of men who returned and were sent back by their wives. The English in Johannesburg are said to regard themselves as quite safe. So far, it is stated, there has been no breach of faith on the part of officials in regard to permits. The men really think they are going to win, and say that Kimberley will be handed back to the Free State, and the Transvaal will satisfy itself with Natal. The Boers are not so sure about Mafeking, but say they are bound to take Ladysmith.

PRISONER SEEKS EXTRADITION.

M. J. Sampson of Chicago Does Not Fear Conviction of Embezzlement.

LONDON, Dec. 23.—Michael J. Sampson, who was arrested in Limerick, Ireland, in November last, charged with embezzlement committed in the United States, was brought up for extradition in the Bow Street Police Court to-day. Sampson begged to be repatriated immediately, but the Magistrate declared the fulfillment of his wish depended on his prosecutors.

After having been committed, Sampson, in conversation with a representative of the United States Embassy here, said he had so many friends in Chicago that he was sure everything would be settled satisfactorily. Indeed, he added, it was likely he would be a candidate for the Illinois State Senate at the next election.

DORMAN B. EATON DEAD

Nervous Prostration Kills Civil Service Reform Advocate.

HELPED TO CRUSH BOSS TWEED

Sketch of Mr. Eaton's Career as a Political Reformer—Tribute Paid by Everett P. Wheeler.

Dorman Bridgman Eaton, for many years a prominent advocate of civil service reform, died at his home, 2 East Twenty-ninth Street, yesterday morning from an attack of nervous prostration, from which he had suffered for about a month. Funeral services, conducted by the Rev. Thomas R. Slicer, Mr. Eaton's pastor, and the Rev. Robert Collyer, will be held at the house at 8:30 o'clock to-night, after which the body will be taken to Montpelier, Vt., where the burial will take place on Tuesday morning.

Mr. Eaton was born at Hardwick, Caledonia County, Vt., on June 27, 1823. He was graduated from the University of Vermont in 1848, and took a course in the Harvard Law School, from which he was graduated in 1850. He at once removed to this city and began the practice of his profession in partnership with the late Judge William Kent, the author of "Kent's Commentaries." For a number of years he was the Chairman of the Committee on Political Reform of the Union League Club, and as such left his impress on the legislation of the day.

His first connection with the civil service reform movement followed closely upon a visit which he made in 1868 to Europe, during which he gave considerable study to the development of the civil service in various countries. After his return to this city Mr. Eaton took a prominent part in the movement which resulted in the crushing of the Tweed Ring, and as a consequence of his work in behalf of good government he was assaulted by one of the followers of the Tammany Boss and so seriously injured that for several years he was unable to practice.

During this time, however, Mr. Eaton gave himself up to the betterment of the civil service, and in pursuing his studies in this direction, he made an extended visit to England. Returning home in 1873, he was selected by President Grant as a member of the first National Civil Service Commission. One of his colleagues was George William Curtis. The opposition to the reform was so great that the labors of the commission were almost nullified by the refusal of Congress to appropriate money for carrying on the work, and in 1875 he resigned.

In 1877, at the request of President Hayes, Mr. Eaton again visited England for the purpose of preparing a historical report upon the English civil service. This report was published by order of Congress, and it is regarded as the foundation stone of the present Federal civil service system. Later Mr. Eaton prepared an elaborate report, which was also printed by Congress, upon the administration of the New York Post Office and Custom House, and comparing the results under the spoils system with those attained under the merit system, which was then beginning to be enforced in those offices.

Mr. Eaton took a prominent part in the drafting of the Pendleton act—the first sincere effort to establish a Federal civil service system—and President Arthur appointed him as a member of the first commission. He resigned in 1885, and was reappointed in the same year by President Cleveland. In April, 1890, feeling that he had done his share in the establishment of a permanent merit system, Mr. Eaton handed his resignation to President Cleveland.

Although in private life Mr. Eaton retained his interest in civil service reform, he was frequently called into consultation with those who had charge of legislation looking to that end. In recent years he gave every manifestation of this interest, and despite the fact that he was over seventy years old he was always willing to give his advice and lend his aid to any project which would advance the cause. In the numerous lawsuits which grew out of the application of civil service laws, both Federal and State, he frequently consulted with the attorneys who appeared in behalf of these laws.

Everett P. Wheeler, who was interested with Mr. Eaton in his efforts to secure the merit system as a permanent institution in the Nation and the State, in speaking of Mr. Eaton last night said: "Mr. Eaton was one of the first to take up the study of civil service reform, and his interest in it never flagged up to the day of his death. Realizing that the application of the principle would arouse intense opposition among politicians, who had long looked upon political offices as their legitimate spoils, he was disposed to be conservative. Others who were associated with him wanted the entire Federal service to be placed upon a merit basis at once, but he opposed this policy and advocated the extension of the system slowly.

"In this he showed his wisdom, and his advice, followed out, in a large measure, has contributed greatly to the present status of the merit system. He was easily the pioneer in the application in a systematic fashion of the English civil system. In the movement which resulted in the enactment of the State civil service laws Mr. Eaton took a great deal of interest, and his counsel was eagerly sought by those who advocated the original act."

In addition to his work in behalf of civil service reform, Mr. Eaton was a close student of all municipal problems. In 1866 he drafted the law for creating a metropolitan Board of Health, and that establishing the police courts of this city, and in 1874 and 1875, at the solicitation of a joint committee of the Senate and House of Representatives, he prepared a code of laws for the District of Columbia.

Mr. Eaton was a prominent member of the Unitarian Church, and was one of the organizers of the National Conference of that denomination. At the time of his death he was the Vice President of the National Conference, and was a member of the Conference of the Middle States and of the American Unitarian Association. He was a member of the Church of All Souls', of which the Rev. Thomas R. Slicer is now pastor.

Mr. Eaton was the author of several works on political and municipal subjects. Among them are "The Independent Movement in New York," "Civil Service in Great Britain," and a number of treatises on law. He was also a frequent contributor to the magazines and reviews. He was a member of the Union League, City, and Century Clubs, the Association of the Bar, the Metropolitan Museum of Art, and the New England Society. He married in 1856 Miss Annie S. Foster, who survives him.

CHINA WOULD REWARD MURDER.

Its Offer for the Capture of Kang-Yu-Wei So Regarded.

PEKING, Dec. 23.—An imperial edict just issued offers special rewards for the capture of the Cantonese reformer Kang-Yu-Wei, dead or alive.

As Kang-Yu-Wei is in Hongkong, this is regarded as an incitement to commit murder in a British colony.

VENEZUELAN LEADER KILLED.

Commander of Government Troops the Victim of a Quarrel.

CARACAS, Dec. 23.—It is announced here that Gen. Luciano Mendoza, Commander in Chief of the Government troops operating against the revolutionary leader, Hernandez, has been killed, as a result of a private quarrel, by Celestino Peraza.

FOR SAVING THE CZAR'S LIFE.

Russian Ruler to Present a Yacht to Prince George of Greece.

LONDON, Dec. 23.—The Czar will present to Prince George of Greece a splendid yacht as a New Year's gift.

The vessel has been specially built at Sebastopol, and is intended as a souvenir of Prince George's saving the life of the Czar in Japan, while they were on a tour around the world, a number of years ago.

New German Steamship Lines.

BERLIN, Dec. 23.—During 1900 the North German Lloyd (Bremen) will plan lines to Singapore, Herbertshoehe, Sydney, and Samoa, and to Hongkong, Ponape, Herbertshoehe, Friedrich Wilhelms Hafen, and Sydney, while the Jaluit Company will also start a line making a circuit of the Carolines and Marianas.

Prussia Calls Hunting Immoral.

BERLIN, Dec. 23.—The latest administrative measure against Prussian public teachers is an order forbidding them to go hunting, on the ground that it is an immoral pastime.

THE DISASTER AT AMALFI.

Only Ten Persons Were Killed by the Sliding Into the Sea of the Big Rock.

ROME, Dec. 23.—It now appears that the disaster at Amalfi, on the Gulf of Salerno, yesterday afternoon, caused by the rock on which stood the Capuccini Hotel sliding bodily into the sea, was not so fatal as at first supposed. Only ten persons were killed.

F. MARION CRAWFORD ON AMALFI.

Talks of the Historic Town and the Charms It Has for Him.

F. Marion Crawford, the novelist, who is familiar with every foot of the Italian coast and has slept many nights in an open boat beneath the overhanging cliffs of Amalfi, conversed about the historic town yesterday afternoon to a reporter. "I spent some time there last June," he said, "and as a matter of fact have visited the place every Summer and often during the Winter for the last fifteen years.

"The mountain back of the cliff rises to a height of more than 4,500 feet, and, like the greater part of the shores of Western Italy, is of limestone formation. The Hotel Cappuccini, which slid into the sea, was formerly a convent, and stood on a plateau nearly 300 feet above the sea level, directly under a vast mass of overhanging rock. The scenery is among the wildest and most picturesque on the coast, and the path that leads from the hotel terrace to the top of the mountain is so steep that the greater number of visitors who desire to reach the summit are carried there by the mountaineers. The face of the cliff upon which the hotel was built was almost sheer to the water's edge, near which stood the old Capuchin Monastery in a hollow of the great rock.

"The harbor, although not a good one, is one of the best on the Western Italian shore, and during the past year has been improved greatly. In fact, the harbor improvements were still being carried on so as to improve the place as a seaport, for it must be remembered that except the Bay of Messina there is no natural harbor on the entire coast.

"The natives are among the most industrious in all Italy, and at one time dominated the Mediterranean. They had quarters in every city of importance where their agents carried on business with the residents along the entire length of the sea coast. The city was founded by the Knights of Malta fifty years before the first crusade, and the convent, which was one of the last in Italy, was founded in 1212 by Cardinal Pietro Capuano for the Cistercians.

"A short distance away stands the monastery of La Cava, where the bones of many pilgrims and crusaders have lain for centuries. It is one of the last two monasteries that remain in Italy, and contains a magnificent library. The architecture is of the period of Roger the Norman, and is one of the objects of interest to all travelers in Italy. Another point of interest is the cave, said to be the last hiding place of Masaniello, whose history has been immortalized in the opera of that name.

"The principal industry of the natives is the manufacture of maccaroni, and back of the town are several mills, where the coarse paper used for wrapping that product is manufactured. Other residents follow the sea, and are acknowledged to be the most daring and skilful small-boat sailors in the Mediterranean. During the past few years a railroad has been cut through the mountains so that Amalfi can now be reached from the interior by way of Vietri, which is a station on the main express line. Before this railroad had been cut through communication with the town was obtained exclusively from the sea. A boat drawing ten feet of water can safely anchor fifty yards from the base of the cliffs, and the water deepens rapidly, so that even the largest square-rigged vessels can come well within the harbor.

"The harbor works have doubtless been destroyed, but I trust the reported loss of life is exaggerated. From my own experience these disasters are not uncommon on the Italian coast, and there is generally some warning in the shape of small pieces of rock falling for probably a week before the great mass tumbles down into the sea. I saw the great mass of rock that was displaced on the Naples road in 1865 that destroyed it entirely, and also had a similar accident on my own place at Sorrento three years ago. In each case warning was given before the most important masses crashed downward with the noise of a great earthquake.

"The cause is plain. The entire coast line is limestone, and badly cracked. Rain forms in the strata, and in time the portions must of necessity fall away. The various basins along the shore are all of volcanic formation, and not as stable a foundation for the great cliffs as they might be."

In reply to the query as to what attracted him to Amalfi and the reasons he had for selecting that spot as the scene of one of his novels, he said: "It is a place where every traveler who visits Southern Italy goes, and where one meets people most unexpectedly. The more humble travelers visit it by way of the railroad or in the small coasting vessels, while others sail into the harbor in the most magnificent yachts afloat. I have spent many happy days and nights under the shadow of the great cliffs in my yacht Alda, which you will recall as the New York pilot boat Ezra Nye, and expect to spend part of the coming Summer there. I like the place for the old associations that have clustered around it for centuries, and am genuinely sorry for its disaster."

THE POPE DEFIES DANGER.

Will Officiate at a Service in Spite of Warnings.

ROME, Dec. 23.—On the occasion of the ceremony of the opening of the Holy Door of St. Peter's to-morrow, the Pope has decided to give the Papal blessing on the Altar of Confession. The Pontifical officers urged him to renounce the idea, as endangering his health, but the Pontiff replied:

"Let it be danger; I will fall in the breach, and have the satisfaction of fulfilling to the last my duties as a Catholic and Sovereign Pontiff toward God."

KAISER AND BERLIN AT PEACE.

Copyright, 1899, The Associated Press.

BERLIN, Dec. 23.—At the ceremony of the unveiling of the monument to Elector George William, in the Sieges-Allee, to-day, the Emperor looked hale and hearty. The ceremony was brief. There were no speeches, but the occasion was rendered memorable by his Majesty, at the close, stepping briskly up to Herr Kihschner, the Chief Burgomaster of Berlin, shaking hands with him cordially, and handing him his long-expected confirmation as Chief Burgomaster, consisting of documents with big seals attached. The Emperor congratulated the Burgomaster, and said he wished him many years of successful administration of Berlin, adding, loud enough to be heard some distance:

"A city for which I feel great affection and entertain the highest hopes, which I know you will help me to realize."

Thus ends happily this matter, which for a long time has kept the Emperor and Berlin on a quasi war footing.

Prison for Bismarck's Former Foe.

BERLIN, Dec. 23.—A sensational trial has just been ended by the sentencing of Herr Joachim Gehlsen, editor of a Charlottenburg paper, to eighteen months in jail for systematic blackmailing financially insecure banks and similar institutions. Herr Gehlsen, during Prince Bismarck's time, headed the press campaign against Prince Bismarck, instigated by a number of his Court clique enemies.

BURNED HUNTING SANTA CLAUS.

Brooklyn Girl Locked in a Closet with a Lighted Candle.

Ella Hughes, five years old, the daughter of Robert Hughes, who lives in a flat on the second floor of 178 Eagle Street, Brooklyn, took a lighted candle last night and began to search all the dark corners of the flat to see if Santa Claus had left her anything. In some way she locked herself into a closet, the door of which has a spring lock, and in her fright set fire to her clothing with the candle. Her father and four-year-old brother heard her cries and rushed to her assistance.

When the father opened the door he found his little daughter enveloped in flames. The brother in his eagerness to render some assistance, was burned about the hand. The father's hands were burned and the little girl was probably fatally burned before the flames were extinguished.

Her mother refused to allow the hospital surgeon who attended her to take the child to the hospital, and she is in a critical condition at her home.

TWO SURFACE CAR COLLISIONS.

Smash-Ups in the Bowery Result in Injury to Four Persons—One Man Taken to the Hospital.

A car of the Madison Avenue line, bound south at 7 o'clock last night, crashed into a Spring Street horse car as it crossed the Bowery into Delancey Street, and three persons were injured, the windows of the horse car broken, and many persons panic stricken.

Joseph Morris of 48 Ridge Street, driver of the horse car, suffered a dislocated shoulder; James J. Boodman of 102 Bowery, the conductor, was bruised about the body, and Abraham Manheim of 93 Clinton Street, a passenger, was bruised about the knees and body. Morris was sent to Gouveneur Hospital.

The electric car in charge of Motorman Patrick Woods of 167 East Eighty-seventh Street was going at a rapid rate when the horse car got in its track. The motorman could not bring up his car in time to avoid a collision. He hit the horse-car in the side, knocking it off the track and almost overturning it. The horse car was badly wrecked, every window in it being broken, and the passengers were thrown about. Both conductor and driver of the horse car were thrown off their platforms into the street. The passengers were all able to get out of the car by themselves, except Manheim, who was carried out. The car was hauled off the tracks. The electric car was not injured. Woods, its motorman, was arrested.

Another collision took place at Houston Street and Bowery between a north bound electric car of the Second Avenue line and a west-bound horse car of the Houston Street Railway.

The motorman of the electric car and the driver of the horse car were evidently trying to outjockey each other in order to get across the line first. Both were going full tilt, and a serious collision was averted only by the motorman putting on the brake suddenly. As it was, the bumper of the electric car banged into the side of the horse car, which, however, did not stop, but managed to pass the other.

The front wheels of the horse car were thrown off the track, and its side scratched by the electric car's fender. Isadore Heller, the conductor of the horse car, was thrown off the rear platform. He landed on his face, and was considerably bruised. The electric car was not damaged, and as soon as the horse car was fully out of the way, the motorman, Patrick May, bowled on up the Bowery as merrily as before. None of the passengers was hurt.

"Greek Slave" Goes to Boston.

The "Greek Slave" company closed at the Herald Square Theatre last night, and will open in Boston to-morrow night at the Columbia Theatre, for a three weeks' run, under the management, it is said, of Edward Bloom, to whom the show has been trusteed by Mr. Winterfield. It is reported that Mr. Winterfield has lost $30,000 on the show, and that he owes debts, salaries, &c., which would make it unsafe to take the show to Boston without being trusteed to some one who cannot be attached for the old debts.

DEATH LIST OF A DAY.

John Henry Munn.

John Henry Munn, one of the most prominent Democrats in the Eleventh Ward, died of general debility at his home, 100 Avenue D, on Friday, in his eightieth year. He was born on August 11, 1820, in a house at Bayard and Mott Streets. Mr. Munn in 1838 married Amelia Otis, who died in 1884. Four children survive him, Mrs. Benjamin Boyle, Mrs. R. B. Spencer, Miss Carrie Munn, and George Munn.

For more than thirty years Mr. Munn had kept an undertaker's shop at 100 Avenue D. He once belonged to old 44 Engine, Live Oak. He was a lifelong Democrat, and at the last election cast his sixtieth ballot. He was an intimate friend of United States Senator David Brodrick, who was killed in a duel with Judge Terry in California. He was also a friend of John Morrissey, Dan and Neil Bryant, and Isaiah Rynders. When Rynders was made United States Marshal Mr. Munn was appointed one of his deputies. It was during their term of office that Hicks, the notorious pirate, was publicly executed. Mr. Munn was also messenger to the Board of Aldermen, held offices in the Custom House, and was Inspector of vessels.

It was only a few days previous to his death that he received words of his election as a member of the Tammany Hall General Committee from the Sixteenth Assembly District. He was a prominent Freem

HARE DEFEATS THE FILIPINOS

Insurgent Loss Is 150 in Two Encounters—Hardships of Flight Prove Fatal to Mrs. Aguinaldo.

MANILA, Dec. 23.—A correspondent at Vigan sends, under date of Dec. 15, the announcement that Col. Wilder has telegraphed to Vigan, from Bayonbong, that Aguinaldo, with a number of Igorrote litter bearers, has crossed the mountains, near Bayonbong, going southward, and that his wife died in a village in that vicinity. She had been unwell since the birth of their son, and the hardships of their flight proved fatal.

A report has reached Gen. Young that Cols. Hare and Howze have released twenty-three American prisoners, including Lieut. Gillmore, at Banna, in the Province of North Ilocos. Another report says Gen. Tino has been captured near Lavag.

Col. Hare reports having had two encounters with Gen. Tino, in which 150 Filipinos were killed or wounded and about 250 rifles were captured, without casualties on the American side.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23.—A cablegram from Gen. Otis was received at the War Department to-day giving the first news for some time of the detachments under Cols. Hare and Howze, who are pursuing Aguinaldo. Gen. Otis's advices indicate that they are close up on the insurgent leader, and state that four of the American prisoners have been retaken, though Lieut. Gillmore is still in the hands of the enemy. Gen. Otis's dispatch follows:

"Manila, Dec. 23, 1899.

"Gen Young reports under date of the 21st inst. from Vigan, that Cols. Hare and Howze were heard from Dec. 17, still in pursuit, through the mountains, of the insurgent column having our prisoners, of whom four were captured, Lieut. Gillmore remaining prisoner. The insurgents are one day in advance, and the pursuit is continued. These pursuing troops have encountered great hardships, but will probably strike Aparri. Two hundred and one Spanish prisoners from Aparri received this morning, 200 more in that section, mostly friars, awaiting transportation to Manila.

"Entire Sixteenth Infantry leaves for Aparri to-morrow for stations from that point as far south as Bayonbong. Batchelor's battalion—Twenty-fourth—is now on the Lower Rio Grande, in good condition to return to San José country.

"Forty-fourth Infantry being sent to Hughes at Iloilo, who reports Panay, Negros, and adjacent islands quiet. Arriving troops and supplies being unloaded through service Manila and Dagupan Railway; two trains daily. All ports Northern Luzon open Jan. 1."

TO REIMBURSE THE STATES.

Some Paid Expenses of Rejected Volunteers for the Spanish War.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23.—Gov. Steunenberg and Representative Wilson of Idaho and Representative Hull of Iowa, Chairman of the House Committee on Military Affairs, had a conference with the President to-day as to the reimbursement of States which had paid the expenses of rejected volunteers for the Spanish war.

Many volunteers journeyed to the rendezvous in their States and home again, after being rejected for various reasons by the medical examining boards. Their transportation and subsistence were paid by the States, and it is for these amounts Gov. Steunenberg holds the United States ought to reimburse the States.

It is likely that a bill covering the question will be introduced in Congress.

NATIVE CHIEF DEFIES GEN. BATES.

Refuses to Allow Americans to Land at Puerto Princesa.

MANILA, Dec. 23.—Gen. Bates has returned from the flag-raisings at Cottabatto, Pollok, Parang-Parang, Davao, and Mati. The Sultan and the leading Datohs welcomed the Americans.

The chief of Puerto Princesa refused to permit Gen. Bates to land, announcing his allegiance to Aguinaldo, and the Yorktown, lacking a landing force, withdrew.

The Thomas Arrives at Manila.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23.—Gen. Otis has informed the War Department that the transport Thomas arrived at Manila last evening and had no casualties on the trip. The Thomas left New York Nov. 4 and carried the Forty-seventh Volunteer Infantry.

Charleston Court of Inquiry Reports.

MANILA, Dec. 23.—The report of the Charleston Court of Inquiry, just rendered, is favorable to the officers of the stranded warship. It shows that due vigilance was exercised in the embarkation of the crew into the boats, which were well handled.

Another Transport Released.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23.—The Rio de Janeiro, of the Pacific transport fleet, was to-day released from further service with the Government.

GEN. BROOKE LEAVES CUBA.

Departs for Florida—Consuls Call on the New Governor General.

HAVANA, Dec. 23.—Gen. Brooke left at noon for Florida, receiving a Major General's salute as the steamer left the harbor. A squadron of the Seventh Cavalry and two batteries of artillery escorted the retiring Governor General to the wharf. All the ceremonies were purely military.

The entire Consular body made an official call upon Gov. Gen. Wood this morning.

HAVANA APPRAISERS HELD.

Collector Bliss Believes He Has Sufficient Evidence.

HAVANA, Dec. 23.—Three of the Custom House Appraisers arrested on charges of fraud, have been conditionally set at liberty by order of Collector Bliss. All the others charged with receiving bribes and other fraudulent practices are held at the disposition of the Court.

Collector Bliss believes he has sufficient evidence to warrant the steps he is taking, and expresses the opinion that within the next few days all the guilty persons will be lodged in jail.

MAINE DEAD NOT IDENTIFIED.

Only About Two Dozen Known—Funeral Will Take Place Thursday.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23.—It is said at the Navy Department that only about two dozen of the bodies of the victims of the Maine explosion were identified beyond question when they were buried in the Colon Cemetery at Havana. In response to its offer to transport to the homes of the victims' relatives the remains of such as might be claimed, the department has, so far, received about ten applications.

With good weather, the Texas, bringing the remains, should arrive at Hampton Roads some time to-morrow night or during Christmas Day, and it is believed that the caskets containing the remains can be delivered at Arlington Cemetery next Tuesday. There they will be placed in open hospital tents, under a guard of marines from the Washington Barracks, until Thursday at 11 o'clock, when the funeral ceremonies will take place in the presence of President McKinley, the members of the Cabinet, and a number of other distinguished persons, accompanied by the Marine Band and two companies of bluejackets and a battalion of marines under Gen. Heywood.

Corp. Roberts Dies in Cuba.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23.—Gen. Wood informed the War Department to-day of the death of Corp. Harvey Roberts, Company F, Eighth Cavalry, on Dec. 21, at Columbia Barracks, Quemados, of dysentery.

Democratic Club Entertainments.

The House Committee of the Democratic Club has arranged for a series of entertainments to be given throughout the Winter season, the first being a reception for women, which will take place next Thursday afternoon. This will be followed, on Saturday evening, Dec. 30, by a vaudeville entertainment for members of the club and their friends.

LAWTON FUND GROWS RAPIDLY.

New Yorkers Telegraph Their Subscriptions to Washington — Total Amount Reported Over $10,000.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23.—The Lawton home fund is growing with most gratifying rapidity. The indications are now such as to encourage the committee which has undertaken to collect the fund in the hope that if the contributions continue at the present rate they will be able to carry out the idea of making the fund a Christmas present to Gen. Lawton's family. The total reported this morning was $7,449.55.

Secretary Root and Adjt. Gen. Corbin received a flood of telegrams this afternoon subscribing to the fund. Among the number were the following:

THE NEW YORK CONTRIBUTIONS.

The fund which the Bankers' Trust Company, at 10 Wall Street, is collecting for the benefit of Mrs. Henry W. Lawton, the widow of Major Gen. Lawton, is increasing rapidly, and during the three days that have elapsed since the subscriptions commenced $1,900 has been received.

The subscriptions received yesterday were as follows: Post & Flagg, $100; Price & McCormick, $50; C. Minzesheimer & Co., $50; F. W. Savin & Co., $50; T. L. Manson, Jr., & Co., $50; J. T. Lockman, $25; James Whitely, $25; A. De Cordova, $25; Uhlmann Brothers, $25; W. A. Smith, $25; C. H. Huestis, $25; Rudolph Keppler, $25; J. A. McMicken, $20; B. C. Williams, $5, and G. A. Brown, $5.

Chicago Raises $1,252 the First Day.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Dec. 23.—The Lawton fund today reached $1,252, and as this is the first day, Treasurer Revell feels that Chicago is going to contribute a handsome sum. He wired Gen. Corbin of his success. The Chicago Opera Company will give a concert Jan. 8, the proceeds to go to the fund. The press is lending its aid and business men generally favor raising a substantial sum. Both Secretary Root and Gen. Corbin have wired here asking that Chicago exert itself to swell the fund.

Toledo Pledges $1,500 to the Fund.

TOLEDO, Ohio, Dec. 23.—Gen. John S. Kountz, former Commander in Chief of the Grand Army of the Republic, started a movement in Toledo to-day to aid a fund which Gen. Alger is raising for the relief of the family of Gen. Lawton. At a public meeting to-night $1,500 was pledged and a committee was named to prosecute the work here in the city of Gen. Lawton's nativity and at his early home, Maumee.

Gen. Shafter Invites Contributions.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 23.—Major Gen. Shafter to-day telegraphed a circular to the Presidents of the Chambers of Commerce in the principal cities of Oregon, Washington, Idaho, Arizona, New Mexico, and Texas, inviting contributions to the fund for Gen. Lawton's family. He has already received $600, of which $250 was sent by John Jacob Astor of New York, who was with Gen. Lawton in Cuba.

WORCESTER SPEAKS OF LAWTON.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23.—Prof. Dean C. Worcester, a member of the Philippine Commission, who was very near to Gen. Lawton, made the following statement to-day of the last conversation he had with the General before his return to this country:

"Nothing that could possibly be done would please Gen. Lawton more than the prompt response that is being made to the appeal for funds to put his wife and children beyond the reach of need.

"His bravery was something more than mere fearlessness. The night before I left Manila I was with him until 12 o'clock, and just before bidding them good-bye I begged him, as his friends had begged of him hundreds of times before, to be more careful about exposing himself to the fire of the enemy. At that time he had been seriously exposed on twenty-eight different occasions since his arrival in the Philippines, and I told him he ought not to do it. He replied that he knew perfectly the risk he was running, but that it was simply a matter of business with him—that with the force at his disposal and the work that he was called upon to do he felt it necessary that he should personally direct every movement. The loss of a little time or an error of judgment on the part of a subordinate might result in defeat, and we could not afford to be defeated.

"Furthermore he knew that so long as he was with them his men would never fail to respond to any request or call that might be made upon them, and his personal bravery was an inspiration to every soldier in his command.

"He told me that he had not an anxious thought for himself; that he had been a soldier all his life and would gladly die a soldier's death, but he thought of what might be in strore for his wife and children if he should be taken, and this weighed heavily upon him.

"No man ever deserved better of his country, and Gen. Lawton's countrymen will see to it that his wife and children are put beyond the fear of want."

MONUMENT TO GOOD INDIANS.

Special to The New York Times.

STOCKBRIDGE, Mass., Dec. 23.—A new Indian monument has recently been erected in the cemetery at Stockbridge, Mass., where many Indians connected with the old Congregational Church and with town affairs, are buried. This is the inscription upon it: "In memory of good Capt. Konkapot, Peter Pau-Quau-nau-peet, and many of the Housatonic Indians, 1734-1900." Konkapot was one of the three distinguished sachems of the Stockbridge Indians who signed the treaty made under the superintendence of Sir William Johnson, his Majesty's Superintendent of Indian affairs in America at Fort Stanwix, now Rome, N. Y., on Sept. 30, 1768. By this compact all title to lands lying east of the Hudson River, Wood Creek, and Lake Champlain as far north at Otter Creek, excepting some land already sold to the Mohawks, was released to the Stockbridge Indians. The aboriginal surnames of those who signed the contract were beside Konkapot, Naunaumphtanuc and Unhaunaunwaunut.

Konkapot was the leading Indian of the Stockbridge tribe. His cabin stood on a knoll, on the east side of the road, a few rods from the brook which still bears his name. He received his commission as Captain from Gov. Belcher, and it was his desire to be instructed in Christianity which led to the establishment of the famous Indian mission. His wife and daughter were members of the church organized by John Sergeant, the missionary to the Indians, to whose work the mission chimes given to Stockbridge by David Dudley Field are memorial, Mr. Field's grandchildren being lineal descendants of Sergeant. Fifty-two Indians united with the Congregational Church between the years 1734 and 1789, the last to join being Capt. Yokun. When the first sacramental supper was celebrated in Stockbridge June 4, 1735, the Indians and Americans partook of the communion together, it being, so far as known, the first occasion when such an event occurred.

Peter Pauquaunaupeet, the other Indian whose name appears on the new monument, was a famous character, and familiarly known as "Sir Peter." He was a deacon in the Congregational Church with Timothy Woodbridge from 1738 to 1770, during the pastorates of the Rev. John Sergeant, the Rev. Jonathan Edwards, and the Rev. Stephen West. "Sir Peter" was a man of great intellectual ability and a graduate of Hanover College, New Hampshire. He, together with Konkapot, Quanaukaunt, and Autaumut governed the tribe of Stockbridge Indians for many years.

The Stockbridge people are much interested even now in the history and traditions connected with the tribe of Stockbridge Indians. It would seem that from the time John Sergeant came among them, in 1734, they progressed more rapidly toward civilization than any other tribe in the country. They were industrious farmers, frugal and temperate, and examples to their white brethren in piety. The members of the Field family were deeply interested in them.

LIFE IN SOUTH CAROLINA

Scandals and Shootings Add to the General Gayety.

SENATOR TILLMAN IN A ROW

Falls Out with a Hotelkeeper and Two Country Editors, and Now Bitter Things Are Being Said.

Special to The New York Times.

GREENVILLE, S. C., Dec. 23.—The people of South Carolina have been divided of late in their interest into three factions, and the newspapers have been assigning space in equal proportions to the dispensary row, the trouble Senator Tillman had with two editors and a North Carolina hotelkeeper, and the battle in this city between the Howard clan and the dispensary authorities.

The dispensary complication began with the the removal by the State Board of Control of Commissioner Douthit, since exonerated. The charge against him was that he had filled XXX bottles with X liquor. Under the dispensary law, which limits the sale of liquor to the State, all alcoholic beverages are supposed to be chemically pure, but corn whisky, the popular beverage, is divided into three grades—X at 20 cents a pint, XX at 25 cents, and XXX at 30 cents. Mr. Douthitt was accused of having hit upon the simple scheme of buying only X liquor—at a dollar a gallon wholesale—and sending it out in three brands of bottles. Bought for a dollar, so it was alleged, it was retailed to the confiding South Carolina investors at $1.60, $2, and $2.40. Consequently, the man who developed affluence and finer tastes as he rose in his demands from the lowest to the highest quality found himself absorbing the same liquor, with no difference except in the price.

These remarkable charges developed murmurings which brought about the deposition of Mr. Douthit and his friend and associate, D. A. G. Outzs, shipping clerk at the Central Dispensary at Columbia. These depositions produced acrimony. Mr. Outzs made in the newspapers a series of bitter personal attacks on the three members of the Board of Control who had brought about his downfall. Replies followed, and exchanges of epithets and side issues, the most interesting of which was a dispute as to whether Mr. Miles of the board had actually "rubbed his fist" under Mr. Outzs's nose, and called him a liar, or had only drawn a pistol on him and defied him to immediate mortal combat. Attention was quickly diverted from this question by the next development, which resulted from Ben Sellers of Sellers's Station, S. C., printing in the newspapers that J. Dudley Haselden, one of the triumphant triumvirate and Chairman of the State Board of Control, conducted at his own residence, near Sellers's, a private barroom stocked with samples bestowed by "drummers" for whisky dealers. Chairman Haselden lives near Sellers's, and a few days after the publication of the aspersion on his Christian character drove into that town with two friends.

Mr. Sellers with a few relatives was waiting to receive him. The net result was that Chairman Haselden returned home with a Winchester rifle bullet in one leg, while one of his friends, the neighborhood physician, was decorated about the back and chest with buckshot. On the other hand, Ben Sellers was hit in the stomach by a pistol bullet, and his father had an arm broken by another revolver missle. Uncommon interest was given this affair by the discovery duly announced in the newspapers that Mr. Haselden had prepared himself by having himself fitted with a breastplate of steel a quarter of an inch thick. This modified the grief and self-reproach and mortification of the Sellers family, members of which had wandered wanly about their native town, sadly convinced that they had overrated their own shooting abilities, and stamped Mr. Haselden as an unworthy person. The press of the State is unanimous in demanding that he resign and leave as soon as his leg will permit him to travel.

On the heels of this Senator B. R. Tillman was invited to the Park and Forestry Convention at Asheville, N. C., the manager of a local hoted adding a special invitation to the Senator to attend and be his guest. Senator Tillman misunderstood and, in his reply, said he would be glad to visit the hotel man at a later and more convenient time, taking the invitation to be a general one. The editors of The Spartansburg (S. C.) Herald and the Columbia (S. C.) State, who attended the convention, proceeded to make merry over the Senator's error. In response he has written the hotel manager a personal letter abusing him bitterly and denouncing the two editors as "low-down whelps" and otherwise. The hotel man in North Carolina and the two editors in South Carolina have exercised their ingenuity in personal letters in reply, which will probably reach the Senator at Washington to-day and make a pleasant mail for him. The facts of this controversy have also been made public and were in their turn engaging public attention until yesterday, when two dispensary constables found "Little George" Howard in the woods near here with some kegs of moonshine whisky.

The Howards are scattered in the mountains of this county, where they have been for 150 years. They are descended from people who came from Virginia, and have the same general characteristics—clear blue eyes and clear fair skins, sturdy frames, and absolute absence of the sensation of fear. They are somewhat deficient in the acquired arts of reading and writing, but are strong in the inherited instincts of personal fights. Therefore when Constable Cornwell of the Dispensary Constabulary, having found "Little George" in a bit of woodland in suspicious proximity to fifteen gallons of obvously moonshine whisky, and proceeded to "gather" him by the coat collar the interview was brief.

"You turn me loose," said "Little George."

"You come with me," said Constable Cornwell.

Thereupon "Little George" produced from his pocket a five-barreled self-cocking revolver and fired it into the constable's body. He had met a man as desperate and resolute as himself.

"Of course, I killed him," said Cornwell afterward. "I knew I was a dead man, and I went in to kill him."

The two struggled hand to hand, pouring bullets into each other. Howard turned away a moment to lodge two of his shots in State Constable Cooley, who was shooting at him ten steps away, and annoying him. When all their weapons were emptied they separated. Cornwell twisted the useless revolver from the hand of his antagonist, a smaller man, who staggered away with the threat that he had another pistol near by. Howard was shot five times, Cornwell three times, and Cooley twice. Howard and Cornwell, each with a death wound, walked through the woods almost side by side, found a path, and started toward town sprinkling the brown leaves and sand with their blood as they walked.

Cornwell fell after he had walked fifty yards; Howard reached the side of the road a hundred yards further and tumbled over, wrapping himself in his overcoat. When somebody drove by a little while after and asked him what the trouble was, he drawled out:

"Jest had a little shootin' scrape; that's all."

Having on hand these three interesting events—the dispensary and breastplate affair, the controversy between Senator Tillman, the hotel man, and the editors, and the "Little George" Howard and State Constable dispute, the people of the State feel that they have home interests, excitements and occupations regardless of the outside world, and are awaiting further developments.

OLD BEGGAR'S NOVEL APPEAL.

Wanted $10 with Which to Set Himself Up in the Cough Drop Business.

"For the Lord's sake, give me one cent. The money on this board is all the money I have in this world. My plan is to stand on the sidewalk this way until I get $10, and then I will sell cough drops and make $10 clear profit.

"W. STOBAG, age seventy-three."

These three sentences, charcoaled on as many pieces of paper, were weighted down by fragments of brick on the sidewalk in front of Trinity Church the other day. Beside them was a long tin tray on which, arranged in rows, according to the denomination, was a collection of coins ranging from a cent to a quarter. Over the whole outfit wavered a gray-bearded man, with a threadbare coat and frayed shirt.

"Now, gentlemen," he cried, "who'll give a cent? There's now $3.50 on the tray. Three gents gave me quarters, fifteen gave dimes, and twelve, nickels. When I get $10, I'm going to set up in the cough drop business, at which I can easily clear $12 a week. Now, who's the next to help along an old man, seventy-three years old?" This refrain he chanted over and over, varied only to agree with the gradually increasing outlay of specie.

A crowd of curious persons continually surrounded the old man, and hid him and his placards from the view of the passers-by, who, attracted by the group, would, in turn, elbow themselves close enough to see what was going on. Then, smiling over the naïveté of a written declaration that the "world owes me a living," many of them tossed a coin to the old man.

The next day Mr. Stobag's place was vacant.

AGED TEACHERS ANXIOUS.

Twenty-nine About to Retire Await Adjustment of School Muddle.

Twenty-nine school teachers who, after long years of service have been recommended for retirement by City Superintendent Maxwell on account of physical disability, are anxiously awaiting the outcome of the controversy between Controller Coler and Corporation Counsel Whalen on the one hand and the School Board for Manhattan and the Bronx on the other, as to the legality of the board's schedule equalizing salaries, adopted May 17 last. If the contention of the board be correct that its schedule was legal, the twenty-nine teachers, retiring on half pay, will receive a snug competence for the remainder of their days. If, however, the courts should sustain the opinions of the Controller and the Corporation Counsel the money received by the teachers will be far less than under the other plan.

The recommendation of the City Superintendent retiring these twenty-nine teachers has been approved by the Board of Education's Committee on School System, but, owing to the uncertainty as to the salary question, the board itself, out of consideration for these faithful public servants, has deferred acting on the matter until its next meeting, in the hope that, in the meanwhile, the disputed question will be settled in a manner satisfactory to the teachers.

The oldest of these teachers are Sarah F. Miller of 162 West One Hundred and Twenty-ninth Street, who is employed in the girls' department of Public School 44, in North Moore Street, and Caroline Hopkins of 531 Quincy Street, Brooklyn, employed in the mixed grammar department of Public School 21, in Marion Street. Both have been public school teachers for a half century, their appointments dating back to 1849.

The others, in the order of appointment, are as follows: Mrs. Mary H. Brandon of 1,812 Lexington Avenue, employed in Public School 100, Second Avenue and Ninety-ninth Street, appointed in February, 1853; Dorothea Dixon of 202 West Ninety-eighth Street, employed in the primary department of Public School 33, West Twenty-eighth Street, appointed Oct. 9, 1855; Charlotte Pollock of 200 West One Hundred and Thirty-third Street, employed in the same department of the same school, appointed in March, 1856; Irene M. Gahagan of 202 West Ninenty-eighth Street, and Josephine Walker of 326 West Thirty-third Street, both employed in the same department of the same school, and appointed, respectively, in May and October, 1858; E. Isabelle Youngs of Stamford, Conn., employed in Public School 50, in East Twentieth Street, appointed in January, 1861; Ismena Z. Brown of 681 Decatur Street, Brooklyn, employed in the girls' department of Public School 20, Rivington and Forsyth Streets, appointed in September, 1861; Adelaide M. Tuers of 70 South Ninth Street, Brooklyn, employed in Public School 31, Monroe Street, and M. Louise Waring of 36 East Twenty-first Street, Principal of Public School 104, East Sixteenth Street, both appointed in October, 1861; Bridget F. McCullow of 371 Third Street, Brooklyn, employed in Public School 12, Madison Street, appointed in April, 1863; Sarah Armstrong of 152 East Thirty-third Street, employed in the primary department of Public School 49, East Thirty-seventh Street, and Clarine I. Hoyt of 364 Gates Avenue, Brooklyn, employed in the primary department of Public School 53, East Seventy-ninth Street, both appointed in May, 1863; Josephine Chinn of 234 South Ninth Street, Brooklyn, employed in Public School 110, Cannon Street, appointed Nov. 19, 1863; Sarah J. Tooker of 302 Greene Avenue, Brooklyn, employed in primary department of Public School 7, Chrystie Street, appointed February, 1864; Louisa Vandervoort of 348 West Nineteenth Street, employed in primary department of Public School 56, West Eighteenth Street, appointed March, 1864; Eugenia Mayereau of 121 West Thirteenth Street, employed in the girls' department of Public School 3, Hudson Street, appointed June, 1864; Mary L. Parsells of 324 West Thirtieth Street, employed in primary department of Public School 28, West Fortieth Street, appointed July, 1864. The following teachers were appointed in 1865; Rebecca M. Nichols of 553 Berry Street, employed in the girls' department of Public School 36, East Ninth Street; Sarah Durell of Lawrence Park, Bronxville, employed in the grammar department of Public School 85, East One Hundred and Thirty-eighth Street; Jennie G. Cunningham of 4 East One Hundred and Thirtieth Street, employed in Public School 126, East Twelfth Street, and Anna M. Cullen of 631 Lexington Avenue, employed in the girls' department of Public School 20, Broome Street. Lucy Gamble of 476 Waverley Avenue, Brooklyn, employed in the girls' department of Public School 13, East Houston Street, appointed Oct. 1, 1866; Elizabeth Commerford of 552 West Forty-sixth Street, employed in the primary department of Public School 17, West Forty-seventh Street, and Margaret Hosford of 238 West Forty-eighth Street, employed in the primary department of Public School 51, West Forty-fourth Street, both appointed in 1867. The following were appointed in 1868: Sarah E. Baker of 270 South Fifth Street, Brooklyn, employed in primary department of Public School 15, Fifth Street, and Margaret E. Dodd of 184 Lee Avenue, Brooklyn, employed in the girls' department of Public School 36, East Ninth Street, and, lastly, Margaret Reilly of 243 North Sixth Street, Brooklyn, employed in Public School 137, Grand and Ludlow Streets, appointed May 31, 1869.

PRISON-MADE GOODS INFERIOR.

Board of Education Committee Opposed to Their Use in Schools.

The prisons of the State supply the schools of this city with various articles, and the Board of Education has for some time been dissatisfied with the quality of these convict-made goods. Its Committee on Supplies was asked recently to submit a statement showing the condition in which the various articles furnished by the State Commission of Prisons is received, and giving a comparison between these articles and those which can be obtained in the open market as regards price and the general character of workmanship.

The committee's report has just been made public. It states that the floor brooms, dust brushes, "Pope's head" brushes, and long-handle window brushes, or what are known as hair goods, all convict-made, are very inferior in quality to what can be obtained in the open market. The paper basket and book baskets are also of inferior quality. Ash cans and dust pans furnished by the prisons are of good quality, but the coal hods are poor.

During the past two years, the committee further reports, the working of the Board of Education's supply department has been considerably hampered because of the poor facilities given by the State prison authorities. In many instances three deliveries have been made necessary where one would have sufficed. The quality of the convict-made goods is not in any way equal to that of goods which can be furnished by local contractors even at a lower price.

Under ordinary circumstances, a very large quantity of all kinds of brushes and other articles is used, but because of the poor material and workmanship furnished by the State Prison authorities, it is necessary to use nearly double the quantity. Thus during 1897 the amount spent for supplies similar to those furnished by the State Prison Commission for Manhattan and the Bronx was $6,908.59, while during 1898 the amount was $12,495.22, showing conclusively, the committee says, that the purchasing of material from the State Prison people is detrimental to the best interests of the department.

Exhibition of Washington Portraits.

The centennial of the death of Gen. Washington is being commemorated by an exhibition of engraved portraits of him at the Grolier Club, 29 East Thirty-second Street. The prints, many of which are rare, number about 300. The catalogue of the exhibition states that the aim of the committee has been to place on view a number of the rarer prints with a selection of others sufficient to give the spectator a broad conception of the manner in which the illustrious subject has been treated by successive generations of engravers." Ordinarily only members of the Grolier Club are admitted to its exhibitions, but in this instance anybody will be admitted by presentation of his personal card. The exhibition will be open daily, except Sunday, from 10 A. M. to 6 P. M.

ODDITIES OF WASHINGTON

Peculiarities of the Capital City Shown in Advertising.

PAY OFFERED FOR POSITIONS

Rooms for Rent "Especially Suited to Congressmen"—Few Personals, but Many Things Lost and Found.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23.—Nothing gives the stranger in Washington a better idea of the essential difference between the capital and all other cities of the United States than a study of the "want" advertisements in the daily papers. Surely, one would think the "wants" of people in any large city are pretty much the same as in any other, but a blindfolded man, hearing some Washington "ads." read in any city of the Union would be able to tell instantly in what city they were published.

The trail of the Government is over all in this city. When you go to a stationery store to buy note paper, you can choose between brands bearing such names as "Congressional" or "Capitol." When you look in at the show window of a bookstore the books most prominently displayed are books on politics and public events, and it takes a second glance to find the novels. So with the "ads." For instance, the "Situations Wanted" column in New York is confined to announcing the availability of bookkeepers, clerks, stenographers, cooks, coachmen, and other prosaic persons. Here is the sort of "ad." that seems to be most common in the "Situation Wanted" column of the Washington papers:

WANTED—I WILL GIVE ANYBODY THE first month's salary to find me a Government position paying $50 per mo. or more. Address A. E. H.

This is repeated over and over again every day, in all sorts of forms. Here is another version:

WANTED—HUNDRED DOLLARS CASH AND twenty-five per cent. for securing me any Government position to enable me to finish my course. Address MEDICAL STUDENT.

There does not seem to be any fixed rate of remuneration for people engaged in this peculiar business, as witness the wide difference in the following offers:

WANTED—$100 FOR POSITION OF ANY KIND (not requiring an examination) in the Government; references exchanged. Address STRICTLY CONFIDENTIAL.

WANTED—I WILL GIVE $50 CASH TO ANY one securing me a Gov't position paying $60 or more per month. P. C. Q.

WANTED—FIFTY DOLLARS WILL BE PAID any one securing me Government position—census preferred—paying forty dollars per month. Address Miss A. B.

Here is one person who is willing to pay $100 for a position "of any kind"; another will give $50 for a $60 position, and a third will give the same amount for one paying only $40. All these were taken from a single issue of one paper, and there were many others.

When there is an application for a position as stenographer or clerk, the advertisement is worded differently from what it would be in New York or any other city, and bears the capital water-mark as plain as day:

WANTED—CONGRESSMAN OR SENATOR CAN secure services, as clerk or secretary, of bright, educated, intelligent young lady; experienced typewriter and correspondent.

It may seem that this "educated, intelligent young lady" is particular in her tastes, since she announces that she will play the typewriter keys for nobody of less importance than a "Congressman or Senator"; but this would be doing her an injustice, for she is using the customary formula in advertising for such a position. When a stenographer is so careless about the sort of employer he gets that he is willing to work for people who have never been elevated to the Congressional dignity, he specifies it in his advertisement, thus:

WANTED—EXPERT STENOGRAPHER DESires Congressional or other work after 4 P. M.; speedy and accurate; terms very reasonable. T. J. LONGLEY.

Of course this sort of advertisement is not peculiar to stenographers. Here is a specimen advertisement of a servant girl who is not particular about the official position of her employer:

WANTED—BY NICE-LOOKING COLORED girl, place to wait on Congressman or any other gentleman. Address M. M. M.

The "Help Wanted" column is similar. When a clerk is asked for he must understand the pension business, or the patent business, or some busines which he would not be expected to know outside of Washington. The influence of the capital is extended even over the book agent business, as is shown in the following:

WANTED—GENTLEMEN AND LADIES TO sell "Autobiographies and Portraits of the President, Cabinet, Supreme Court, and Congress." Contains a biography and full-page portrait of every member of the Senate and House of Representatives. Sells to them on sight. THE NEALE CO.

This advertiser is willing to make known his confidence in the vanity and human frailty of Senators and Representatives. Another advertiser wants "Confederate veterans" as book agents, and assures them that they can make $100 per month.

When the real estate man wishes to make known the attractions of his suburban lots, he dangles the United States Government before the eyes of possible purchasers:

THE PRESIDENT'S MESSAGE TO CONGRESS will urge the construction of the Memorial bridge. Lots across the river are selling briskly. Drop postal for new 16-page pictorial "booklet," illustrating Fort Meyer Heights and "How to be your own landlord on $10 a month." Carriages will call at your door to show the property, free of charge.

FULTON R. GORDON.

This kind of advertisement goes under the head of "Business Chances."

The "For Rent" column is equally redolent of the Government. This is the way the "Rooms" section of this column appeals to the reader:

FOR RENT—2 COMMUNICATING ROOMS ON 1st floor; pleasant location; well heated; suitable for M. C. or Senator. 809 K. St., n. w., opp. Mt. Vernon Square.

The tastes of Congressmen are consulted in these "ads," and this experienced advertiser has evidently studied them to some purpose, for he knows that they object to children and the smell of cooking:

The "Personal" column in Washington is made up of advertisements such as the following:

A CLERK, (CLASS E,) P. O. DEPT., WISHES transfer with clerk in same or some other dept. Address J. I.

All this is easy to understand, but a more perplexing question is why people should lose so many things in Washington. In New York the "Lost and Found" column has a modest place among advertisements, but in Washington it is plethoric and obtrusive. Washington people are evidently careless. A still more curious thing is that there are fashions in losses. This has been a great week for lost collarettes. In a single issue of one newspaper there were advertisements for two lost collarettes.

Washington people are also careless about their dogs. They seem to be always losing dogs. The "Lost and Found" columns are largely made up of requests for the return of these animals. Not infrequently an advertiser loses two or three dogs at once. One man has announced three times this week that he has found a black and white calf and a white cow, and that the owner can have them if he will take them away.

Frequently the age of the careless person is mentioned or hinted at, if the person son is mentioned or hinted art, if the person is young. "A small boy" has just announced that he has lost a twenty-four dollar gold piece. This, of course, is an appeal to the sympathies of the finder, who might be tempted to keep it if he did not know that he would get the child in trouble by doing so. In the same issue it is made known that "a schoolgirl" has lost a jewel in the Congressional Library. It is also mentioned that she is the daughter of a naval officer.

Jewish Historical Society.

The eighth annual meeting of the American Jewish Historical Society begins Tuesday morning, Dec. 26, at 10:30, in the Hebrew Charities Building, Second Avenue and Twenty-first Street. There will be also an afternoon session at 3 o'clock. In the evening Mr. and Mrs. Isidor Straus entertain the society members at their home, One Hundred and Fifth Street and Boulevard West. Both sessions of the society are public. Among the papers to be read are: "Further Documents Relating to the Inquisition in Mexico," Dr. Cyrus Adler, Smithsonian Institution, Washington; "The Early Settlement of the Jews in the Island of Barbados," Prof. Richard Gotthell, Columbia University, and "Jewish Topography of New York," Miss Annette Kohn, New York.

VOTING BY MACHINERY

Rochester Man Would Introduce the Contrivance Here.

CONFERS WITH POLICE BOARD

Several Machines to be Placed in Various Parts of the City for Inspection.

Arthur S. Hamilton of Rochester has come to this city in order to teach New Yorkers to vote by machinery according to the system employed for the last two years in his city, and at the last election in Buffalo, Utica, Ithaca, Albion, Canisteo, and Winfield as well. So successful were the machines that the accurate result of the election in those towns was known to the world at large almost as soon as the metropolitan ballot boxes had been opened. Mr. Hamilton's mission is not entirely unselfish, for he hopes to secure an order for machines which will not fall very far short of $1,000,000, and which will come if the city authorities decide to follow the example of the interior towns.

One machine he has already placed on exhibition at 170 Fifth Avenue, and within a week ten more will be distributed around various public and political centres in the Greater New York. The City Club will have one on Tuesday, and about the same time another will be placed in the Republican County Committee headquarters, in Twenty-third Street. In order to prove the simplicity and infrangibility of the machines, it is Mr. Hamilton's intention to send with them no operator, mechanic, or Inspector such as a voter would meet on election day, for he says anybody is able to register his vote with them with absolute secrecy and accuracy after a few minutes' study of the machine itself and a little printed card of instructions affixed to it.

Police Commissioner Abell, who is Chairman of the Committee on Elections, had a long talk with Mr. Hamilton about the machines yesterday, and he and President York both expressed considerable interest in the subject. Mr. York said, however, that he had never seen a voting machine except one that was shown in Brooklyn several years ago, but he remembered that the returns from Rochester came in very r

FIFTH AVENUE DANGER SPOT.

Capt. Price Recommends that an Additional Policeman Be Stationed at Thirty-fourth Street Crossing.

Moved by appeals from George C. Boldt, proprietor of the Waldorf-Astoria Hotel, for police protection at the Thirty-fourth Street and Fifth Avenue crossing, a patrolman will be placed there within the next few days if the police authorities so elect. This crossing is considered by many people as not only one of the busiest, but also one of the most dangerous in the city, largely from the immense amount of traffic to and from the hotel, and the continuous stream of carriages up and down the avenue and east and west in Thirty-fourth Street. The accident by which a young woman was killed there a few weeks ago, and the narrow escape from death of Miss Florence Di Zerega on Saturday, together with many narrow escapes of women who try to make the crossing in safety, and which are never reported to the police, serve, as Mr. Boldt says, to show the immediate necessity for a detail to prevent further accidents.

The recommendation for an aditional detail was made a day or two ago to the Police Commissioners by Capt. Price, to whom a letter to the Commissioners from Mr. Boldt had been turned over for investigation. Manager Thomas of the hotel, in speaking yesterday for Mr. Boldt, said that Mr. Boldt's action in making the request had been prompted by the great number of complaints he had received from out-of-town women patrons of the hotel, who had told him that they were afraid to try either that crossing or the one at Thirty-third Street, a block below. The first letter written to the Commissioners, Mr. Thomas said, had apparently been ignored. Mr. Boldt waited for some time, but complaints continuing to come in, he made a second request, with the result of the recommendation made by Capt. Price.

At present two policemen are stationed at the Thirty-fourth and Thirty-third Street entrances to the hotel, their principal duties being to keep order among the cabmen and delivery wagons who go to and depart from the hotel by hundreds daily. In addition to these, two bicycle policemen and other men on post are in sufficient numbers, according to Capt. Price, to police the district thoroughly.

"Both Mr. Boldt and myself," said Mr. Thomas last night, "consider the Thirty-fourth Street crossing as the most dangerous one in the city. The traffic up and down Fifth Avenue past this hotel is continuous, and at the busy times of the day amounts to a veritable crush. The daily traffic to and from the Waldorf adds to the difficulties. It can be understood better when I say that fully 475 people come and go from here every day, and nearly all of these arrive and depart in cabs. Then, in addition, there are the baggage and delivery wagons to add to the confusion and crush. Furthermore, Fifth Avenue at this point is on a slope, and drivers come down the avenue and whirl into Thirty-fourth Street with great recklessness."

"With the exception of the Thirty-fourth Street crossing," said Capt. Price, "the district is thoroughly policed. There is certainly need for a patrolman at that corner, and it is likely that a man will be placed there now most any day."

MARTHA WASHINGTON'S LETTER.

Thanks Gov. Trumbull for His Sympathy on the Death of Her Husband.

The following text of a letter written by Mrs. George Washington to Gov. Trumbull of Connecticut, in reply to his letter of condolence upon the death of her husband, is of interest in connection with the recent observance of the one hundredth anniversary of the historical event. The original letter is in the collection of J. S. Bradley of this city:

Mount Vernon, Jan. 15, 1800.

Dear Sir: When the mind is deeply affected by those irreparable losses which are incident to humanity, the good Christian will submit without repining to the dispensations of Divine Providence, and look for consolation to that Being who alone can pour balm into the bleeding Heart, and who has promised to be the widow's God. But in the severest trials we find some alleviation to our grief in the sympathy of sincere friends, and I should not do justice to my sensibilities was I not to acknowledge that your kind letter of condolence of the 30th of December was grateful to my feelings.

I well knew the affectionate regard which my Dear Deceased husband always entertained for you, and therefore conceive how afflicting his Death must have been to you; the quotation which you have given of what was written to you on a former melancholy occasion is truly applicable to this—the loss is ours, the gain is his.

For myself I have only to bow with humble submission to the will of that God who giveth and taketh away, looking forward with faith and hope to the moment when I shall be again united with the Partner of my life. But while I continue on Earth my prayers will be offered up for the welfare and happiness of my Friends, among whom you will always be numbered. Being, dear Sir, your sincere and afflicted friend,

MARTHA WASHINGTON.

REGENTS CLOSE A SCHOOL.

Suspend the Charter of the New York Preparatory School.

ALBANY, Dec. 23.—The charter of the New York Preparatory School of New York City has been suspended by the State Board of Regents. The charter has also been revoked of a branch of that institution situated in Brooklyn. Asa O. Gallup is the founder and Principal of these institutions. Mr. Gallup is married to a niece of Dr. Dewey, who has resigned from the Secretaryship of the Board of Regents. Up to three years ago Mr. Gallup was Chief Clerk and Director of the Department of Higher Education under the State Board of Regents. He left the service of the Regents to open the preparatory school.

The object of this school was to fit candidates on short notice to take examinations for the professions and for entrance to colleges. The authorities of similar schools in New York City complained to the Board of Regents that Mr. Gallup was making statements in his advertising circulars which were unwarranted and exaggerated the powers conferred upon his school by the Regents. Letters were written to these parties by Dr. Dewey, which they presented to the board, together with complaint that they had received no satisfaction.

A committee of the board, of which St. Clair McKelway of Brooklyn was a member, was appointed to make an investigation, and yesterday reported a set of resolutions condemning the methods pursued by Mr. Gallup, revoking the charter of the branch school in Brooklyn, and suspending the charter of the New York City school until a compliance with the rules of the board be had. These resolutions were adopted by the board.

DEWEY INTENDED TO RESIGN.

Mr. Skinner Says the Action Was Not Caused by His Remarks.

ALBANY, Dec. 23.—State Superintendent of Public Instruction Skinner issued a statement to-day in which he denies that certain remarks made by him at the meeting of the Board of Regents yesterday precipitated the action of Secretary Dewey in offering his resignation. He says:

"The resignation of Mr. Dewey as Secretary of the Board of Regents had no relation whatever to the question of unification or to the discussion concerning that measure. His resignation was not unexpected. Many of the Regents had knowledge of his intended action before the board assembled on Friday morning. The board was engaged in discussing a resolution requesting the special commission on unification to change the proposition last presented so as to give the Board of Regents the appointment of the first chief officer under the proposed law. Mr. Dewey's resignation was presented by unanimous consent during the discussion. It had evidently been prepared some hours before the meeting, and he read it to the board."

After Jan. 1, 1900, Mr. Dewey will be State Librarian, Director of Home Education, and Director of the Library School, at a salary of $5,750 per annum.

YAQUIS HARASS THE MEXICANS.

Latter Forced to Retire and Wait for Reinforcements.

CHICAGO, Dec. 23.—A special to The Record from Austin, Texas, says:

"A dispatch from Ortiz, State of Sonora, Mexico, says that Gen. Torres's force of troops has retired to Potam to await the arrival of the Twentieth Infantry Regiment and other reinforcements. The large force of Yaquis who resisted the advance of the Government troops so strongly and successfully, followed the retiring command all the way to Potam and picked off a number of men. The Yaquis have again withdrawn to the mountains, and the only fighting that has taken place during the last few days is between marauding bands of Indians and scouting parties of Government soldiers. The telegraph wires have again been cut, and official dispatches which have reached Ortiz from the War Department for Gen. Torres have to be forwarded to Potam by mounted courier.

"Nothing has yet been heard from the Twentieth Infantry, but military men who are acquainted with the make-up of the regiment and its fighting qualities scout the idea that it has been attacked and vanquished by the Yaquis. It is claimed that the regiment has hardly had time to reach Gen. Torres's rendezvous, as the march from the mouth of the Yaqui River is long and difficult."

Woman School Commissioner Sworn.

WHITE PLAINS, N. Y., Dec. 23.—The chief attraction at the Westchester County Clerk's office to-day was the appearance there of Miss Bertha E. H. Berbert, the newly elected School Commissioner, for the purpose of taking the oath of office. The oath was administered by County Clerk L. F. Orumb.

PITTSBURG LOSES ITS SUIT.

No Corruption Is Found in Loans to State Senator Flinn.

PITTSBURG, Dec 23.—The decision in the case of the City of Pittsburg against State Senator William Flinn and others for $200,000, damages was handed down to-day by Judge White. The defendants won. The suit was based on the allegation that W. H. House, a former city official, had loaned city money to Senator Flinn.

In his decision the Judge found that the city had no claim against Senator Flinn and his firm, as there was no corrupt bargain made. It was not shown, he held, that House loaned city money, and if he did so loan it, Flinn was ignorant of the ownership, and all sums borrowed were repaid with interest.

CHILCOOT INDIANS REVOLT.

Attack Settlers, Who Wound Several of Their Assailants.

TACOMA, Washington, Dec. 23.—Settlers living around Lalla Lake, in Chilcoot, B. C., have been attacked by Indians, who object to white settlers. Two weeks ago they surrounded Rancher Franklin and his neighbors and threatened to murder them if they did not leave the country. In a fight which followed several redskins were wounded.

Becoming alarmed, eight families started for Alexis Creek, but when three miles from home they were surrounded and captured, and feared they would be shot. They were saved through the intervention of friendly Indians, who pointed out that the tribe would be annihilated if they injured the settlers. Officers are after the Indian ringleaders.

TWO COLLISIONS IN CHICAGO.

Second One, Between Elevated Trains, Nearly Disastrous.

CHICAGO, Dec. 23.—A Chicago and Northwestern suburban train and the second section of an eastbound Omaha passenger train collided at West Fortieth Street today. The suburban coaches were badly damaged, but only one passenger was hurt and he not seriously.

A rear-end collision occurred to-day between two trains on the South Side elevated heavily laden with passengers bound down town to make Christmas purchases. The accident is attributed to the dense fog which hung over the city this morning. The second train was running at a high rate of speed and the second car was badly telescoped and narrowly missed falling from the elevated structure.

One passenger was injured and several severely shaken up.

ROCHESTER OFFICIAL SCANDAL.

Health Board Secretary Dismissed on Account of a Shortage.

RORCHESTER, N. Y., Dec. 23.—A shortage amounting to about $1,000 in the accounts of George Belknap, Secretary of the Board of Health, has been reported as the result of an investigation. Belknap, being unable to explain the matter satisfactorily to the board, was dismissed, and Mayor Warner, as Chairman of the Board of Health, directed that the attorney of the board, Frank J. Hone, commence a civil action against Belknap and present the facts in the case for the consideration of the District Attorney.

Belknap has made counter charges against Attorney Hone, in which it is alleged that Mr. Hone has received city money and is retaining it. Mayor Warner has appointed a committee to make an investigation and report to the board before Jan. 1.

KNOW HOW TO PLANT PEOPLE.

New York Politicians, However, May be Ignorant About Agriculture.

A party of politicians prominent in Republican circles was seated last night in the rooms of the Republican State Committee at the Fifth Avenue Hotel. In the group were Chairman B. B. Odell, Louis F. Payn, State Superintendent of Insurance; Abraham Gruber, and Reuben L. Fox. The talk turned on the National Administration and Mr. Gruber remarked:

"I see that an announcement has been made that Secretary Wilson of the Department of Agriculture has resigned as a member of the Cabinet."

"Well," suggested a listener, "no one in New York knows anything about agriculture, so I suppose the organization will not make any recommendations."

"They may not know anything about agriculture," retorted the Twenty-first District leader, "but they know a good deal about planting people."

This reference to some recent happenings in this State and city was received with loud laughter by those who were in the room.

WYOMING COAL AND COKE PLAN.

Branton R. Wells of Chicago Heads a Mining Enterprise.

CHEYENNE, Wyo., Dec. 23.—Preliminary steps looking to the establishment of a gigantic coal and coke business have been taken here. Branton R. Wells, senior member of the shoe manufacturing firm of A. D. Wells & Co. of Chicago, has filed incorporation papers of the Excelsior Rock Spring Coal Company and the Monarch Supply Company, with a combined capital of $5,000,000.

Wealthy residents of Wyoming have associated themselves with Mr. Wells, who has acquired the title of a large and valuable tract in Sweetwater County, Wyo. There are seven distinct veins of high-grade coal in the tract, and it is the intention not only to mine coal on a large scale, but also to manufacture coke by the Hemingway process. The mines will be reached by a railroad five miles in length, connecting with the Union Pacific at Rock Spring. Large buildings for power plants, company stores, and cottages for the employes are in process of erection.

West Virginia Coal Mining Record.

WHEELING, West Va., Dec. 23.—Chief Mine Inspector J. W. Paul reports for the year ended June 30, 1899, that in point of production of coal and coke, men employed, days worked and general activity of the mining industry of the State, the record exceeds those of all past year. The year's production was over 18,000,000 tons of coal and 2,000,000 tons of coke. Nearly 25,000 men were employed an average of 240 days. Machine production is increasing.

Strike Cuts Arkansas Coal Output.

CHICAGO, Dec. 23.—A dispatch from Little Rock, Ark., says State Mine Inspector Robert Boyd of Huntington has submitted to Gov. Jones his annual report, showing the total coal output of the State for the year to have been 943,743 tons. The output, he says, is smaller than last year, the difference being 260,061 tons. This shortage in production has been largely due to the miners' strike, which has prevailed since Feb. 28, 1899.

AGAINST WAR SUCCESSION TAX.

Objections Filed by Counsel for a Kingston Estate.

KINGSTON, N. Y., Dec. 23.—Judge Alphonse T. Clearwater of this city, as counsel for James E. Phinney and Walter Tompkins, executors and trustees of the estate of James G. Lindsley, has filed with the Treasury Department at Washington written objections to the payment of the war succession tax upon Mr. Lindley's estate.

He specifies among other grounds that the act of Congress imposing the tax is unconstitutional, invalid, and void, in that it imposes a tax not apportioned according to the census as provided by the Constitution; that the assessment of the tax as directed by Congress is not uniform; that the State of New York has the right to prescribe the conditions and methods of the transfer of property from the estate of a decedent, who was a resident of the State at the time of his death to a beneficiary, and that the act of Congress is an attempt to control the transfer of the estate of the decedent, and therefore interferes with the rights reserved to the State of New York under the Federal Constitution and its amendments.

HELD ON A BOSTON CHARGE.

Former Virginia Prisoner Arrested After a Business Career.

RICHMOND, Va., Dec. 23.—Burnley Taylor was arrested here to-day as a fugitive from justice from Massachusetts. In 1895 Taylor was arrested in this city for obtaining money on forged lunacy warrants, and when the case came to trial he was sentenced to two years in the penitentiary. He was a model prisoner, and when his time expired he went to Boston, in the employ of the Davis Shoe Company. Taylor worked for some time with the concern, and then obtained a position in the storage warehouse of Tarrant P. King of Boston, for whom he worked about a month. Then he went back to work for the Davis Company, and lately he returned to Virginia and obtained employment at Toano.

It seems that $2,000 worth of coffee was removed from the Boston warehouse, where he was employed, on a bogus order. Taylor learned from relatives that his name had been used in connection with the affair, and went back to Boston, offering to stand trial, but nothing came of it at that time. Afterward a detective learned of the case and wrote to the Boston police for information. He received a letter to the effect that Taylor was wanted on an indictment warrant charging him with the larceny of $2,000 worth of property. The arrest of to-day followed.

Taylor asserts that he is innocent of any wrongdoing. He says that he is perfectly willing to go to Boston without requisition papers and stand trial.

PARAGUAY PLAGUE MEASURES.

United States Consul Swalm Reports the Precautions to Prevent the Spread of Infection.

The alleged outbreak of bubonic plague in Paraguay is the subject of a report to the State Department by Albert W. Swalm, United States Consul at Montevideo. "Business in Paraguay is paralyzed by the prevalence of what is supposed to be the bubonic plague," says Consul Ruffin, writing from Asuncion, the capital of Paraguay, in a note appended to Mr. Swalm's report. "Argentine and Brazilian ports are shut against the country. Nothing in the form of hides, tea, fruits, or eatables can go out. The banks here will not sell gold under any circumstances."

As precautionary measures, Mr. Swalm says the Argentine and Brazilian authorities have interdicted all commerce from Paraguay. The Matto Grosso outlet has been closed absolutely by the Brazilian Government, and cargoes for Buenos Ayres or Montevideo are turned back to the Paraguayan River ports, there to be discharged and their vessels and crews fumigated. The Argentine authorities have made the amplest sanitary preparation for the work, and have established a sanitary cordon covering the entire river front on the Parana, the Upper Parana, and the Paraguay Rivers, using a number of torpedo boats for the purpose. As the Paraguayan hides, which are sent down the rivers for export by way of Brazilian and Argentine ports in large quantities, are particularly dangerous agents for carrying infection, the measures against this branch of trade are unusually stringent.

The outbreak of the alleged bubonic pest in Paraguay has been traced to the death in Asuncion of two Portuguese women, who came direct from Portugal last Summer. The death of the two men was out of the usual order, but no post-mortem examination was made, and the deaths were reported as of the usual type of typhus, heretofore met and successfully dealt with. Late in August, however, the disease appeared among a company of troops in the barracks at Asuncion in such a way as to create doubt as to its character. The Paraguayan officials acted frankly and promptly, calling a conference of the local medical men, which included French, German, Spanish, English, and American physicians. It was found that the pathological conditions corresponded quite closely with those of the bubonic plague, and it was deemed wise to adopt the theory that it might be the dreaded pest.

"Paraguay is such a healthful land, and fevers and infectious diseases are so little known there," says Mr. Swalm in conclusion, "that it is hoped that even should this be the real East Indian plague, it will appear in a mild and less contagious form. At all events, the Paraguayan authorities are to be commended for the thoroughness with which they acted. It is a calamity to their business interests, and they are richly entitled to the sympathy of the friendly world."

GOLD AND SILVER OUTPUT.

Statement that the Transvaal War Will Cause a Scarcity.

In a note to the State Department reviewing the report recently issued by the Director of the French Mint, the United States Consul at Lyons, John C. Covert, says, in reference to the world's output of gold and silver:

"The quantity of gold produced during the last fifteen years is placed at 13,000,000,000f., or, in round numbers, $2,500,000,000, of which amount the Transvaal is credited with a production of 2,000,000,000f., ($386,000,000.) It is believed that not less than 200,000 pounds have been used in the arts. The weight of new gold struck annually into coins varies between 660,000 and 1,320,000 pounds. But in spite of the increase in the

With the Sportsmen on Land and Water.

The game laws of the State of New York say "no salt, water striped bass less than eight inches in length shall be intentionally taken from any of the waters of this State nor possessed," yet a tour along the Hudson River front, from West Eighty-sixth Street to the city boundary line at Mount St. Vincent, will show hundreds of fishermen whose strings of consumptive fingerlings contain many striped bass whose youth and innocence entitle them to a return to the moist element whence they have been unceremoniously yanked.

They are entirely too small for the table, and the only purpose for which their proud possessor can take them home is to feed the cat. This is a good thing for the feline in question, but it is a pretty expensive cat's meat and rather hard lines for the sportsmanlike fisherman who throws back all of his catch not coming up to legal requirements. Five or six hundred of these fingerlings per diem during the bass season are a very conservative estimate of the number of this game fish thus wantonly destroyed, and which would otherwise grow to furnish sport and food for local fishermen.

It is a crying evil, and one which should be suppressed by a rigid enforcement of the law, and the official who received, as is customary, 50 per cent. of the fines imposed on his prisoners, would make a good thing of it—so good, in fact, that it is a wonder that no politician, anxious to serve his city and himself, has applied for the position of Fish Warden of this city.

Bass fishing in the Hudson, is, of course, not what it was a few years back, still some fish of pretty good size are occasionally taken within the city limit, and Mr. Morisini, who spends considerable time on the dock at Riverdale, usually gets a few large ones each season.

At Croton Point, one is generally pretty certain of catching a fair number, running from one to one and a half pounds, with enough of a chance of something larger to make it interesting. There are two good places at Croton Point—one just at the edge of the tide rip, off the southern end of the Point; the other just inside the rocky shore of the Point, northern projection.

This latter place is so good that fishermen from Haverstraw cross the river, racing all the way for the purpose of securing choice position. The first-named fishing ground is best reached from Sing Sing, where boats may be procured, the second from Croton Landing. It is best to take one's own bait, as that procured in Sing Sing is usually pretty dead, and it is almost impossible to procure any at all in Croton.

From Muncie, Ind., comes a story of a game warden who offered his assistance as guide to two gunners who did not know of his official status and went out for a Sunday shooting trip. They gladly accepted his aid, and everything was looking lovely until a covey of quail were flushed, when their new friend calmly proceeded to arrest them for violation of the game laws relating to Sunday shooting. This shows to what length a well-meaning and energetic game warden will go in order to make the honest dollar represented by his share of the fine imposed on game law violators. That official should come East and apply for a position as game warden for New York City, where he could make a very comfortable living without the use of so much diplomacy.

"The present fashion for small bore rifles of high power for large game shooting is being carried to extremes," said a noted gun man the other day, "and I predict that there will be a return to larger calibre and lower power before long."

This really appears to be the case. Last year it was at the risk of bing punctured by a marksman in the next township that one went down after deer on Long Island. Word had gone abroad that deer were plentiful; it was allowable to hunt them only on a few set days, and the result was that the island was overrun with riflemen, a large proportion of whom were armed with the very latest agony, weapons carrying the 6 MM. Navy, 30 United States Army, 303 Savage, or 30 Winchester or Marlin cartridges, many with full mantled bullets which would go through a deer, a couple of fences, and have enough energy left to make things decidedly interesting for any luckless individual chancing to be in their line of flight, although far beyond sight or sound of the man who started the projectile on its journey.

These arms would have been all right for shooting goats in the Rockies, antelope on the plains, or the veldts of South Africa, or taking a pot shot at a Filipino behind a tree, but for hunting deer in the brushwood, where the average shot when offered was at about sixty yards, a 41-40 would have been amply powerful and a great deal safer.

For hunting at long distances in the open, where a flat trajectory saves the necessity of estimating the range accurately, the small calibre, high power rifle is all right, and with the soft nose bullet it makes a good hunting arm. It is all right as a military arm, also, for the light weight and small bulk of its cartridges enables the soldier to carry about double the ammunition that was heretofore possible, and the full mantled projectile makes a tree or a log breastwork a mighty poor protection, but for shooting moderate sized game at short distances, in a thickly populated section of country, the old-fashioned large calibre, low powered ammunition is just as effective and a good deal safer.

You don't care much about trajectory at short ranges; what you want is something that will knock your game down and make a good trail of blood if it gets up again, and the shorter distance that your bullet travels after coming out on the further side of your mark, the less chance is there of something happening, for which you will be everlastingly sorry.

The sportsman tourist has now a new problem with which to occupy himself. After deciding upon how long he can leave his business, where he will go, and in quest of what game, he can sit down and try to figure out what his hunting license or licenses will cost him in States of which he is not a resident.

He can hunt in Minnesota, North Dakota, or South Carolina for $25 per annum. Wisconsin will charge him the same amount if he includes deer in his pursuit. He can have any of the rest of the fauna of that obliging State for the small sum of $10 per annum.

It costs him $50 for a season's deer hunting in Michigan, and he may only shoot five at that, and must not ship them out of the State. South Dakota is content with charging him $10 per annum. Wyoming charges him $40, while Arkansas and Florida charge him $10 per county. Illinois also charges $10 per county, and a registering fee of 50 cents addition. West Virginia asks $25 per county, with $1 registration fee tacked on. Hunting in this State is apt to prove expensive when the game becomes educated to the point of stepping across the county lines at critical moments. Delaware is a comparative bargain at $5 for the first year's license and $2 for each subsequent renewal, but Missouri will not allow non-residents to hunt at any price.

These laws in regard to shooting by non-residents have in most cases been passed at the demand of the farming population, as the business and professional men of the towns and cities hardly feel the sense of personal ownership of the game sufficiently to induce them to cause such legislation to be adopted. But whoever is responsible for this state of affairs has apparently made a mistake, the gravity of which will become more and more apparent with the lapse of time.

The licensing of non-residents does not protect the game, which is in less danger from the visiting sportsmen than from the local gunner, who spends the close season in locating the different coveys, and, knowing almost to a brace the number of each, starts out on the morning of the first day of the open season, armed with this knowledge and his shotgun, and proceeds to try just how nearly he can wipe them out before the visitor from afar arrives.

If the measures are intended to raise money for the maintenance of game and fish protection in the States named, they will be found to furnish a smaller and much more uncertain income than a moderate gun tax levied on the resident shooters. The non-resident, who spends many times the market price per pound on every head of game or brace of birds which he secures, leaves enough money in the State to entitle him to exemption from such tax. The farmers who have been making a good thing out of the livery, guide hire, and board bills of the non-resident shooters will find in course of time that the market value of their game is very small in proportion to what the strangers left among them.

If it was figured that a man who would spend some hundreds on a fortnight's shooting trip would not balk at a $10 or $25 license the figuring was incorrect. Most men who would decline to make a small loan to an acquaintance, would willingly spend twice the amount refused in treating the same man to drinks, and the license hold-up will strike them in about the same manner.

One of the most enjoyable sports, within the means of people of moderate incomes, is small bore rifle shooting. It is inexpensive and fascinating, trains the eye, steadies the nerves, and the more proficient the devotee becomes the greater grows his or her interest in the pastime. Contrary to general belief it need not be confined to residents of the county and suburbs, but may be practiced by any one who has the use of a cellar forty feet in length.

The two calibres best adapted to target and small game shooting at short ranges, say up to two hundred yards, are the .22 and .25. The decision as to which of these shall be chosen depends somewhat as to just how thoroughly one proposes to enter into the enjoyment of the sport. The shooter who proposes to purchase ammunition ready loaded will decide upon an arm taking the .22 calibre rim fire ammunition, and for practice, up to one hundred yards will use the .22 short cartridge, which, for indoor practice, may be had loaded with smokeless powder, giving very little report. If, when selecting a rifle of this calibre, the purchaser chooses one chambered and bored to take the long rifle cartridge, the short above mentioned, will work equally well in it, while for longer range work, up to two hundred yards, or for small game shooting he has a weapon which will take the long rifle cartridge, which contains a larger charge of powder and a heavier bullet.

For small game shooting at short range the short cartridge is also made, loaded with smokeless powder and a hollow, pointed bullet, which, upon impact, mushrooms, or opens, and creates a wound equal to that of the solid ball of larger calibre.

So much for the sportsman who wishes simply for the enjoyment of shooting. But those who wish to gain the greatest amount of pleasure from their practice will prefer to load and reload their own ammunition. The ready-made and the hand-loaded cartridge never occupy the same relative position in rifledom as do the button power and the amateur who does his own printing and developing in the world of photography. Those preferring to join this latter class will choose the .25-calibre rifle, and, besides the pleasure mentioned above, will have also a rifle better adapted to hunting purposes.

In addition to the choice of calibre, one must also decide as to whether a single shot or a repeater is desired. A few years ago the repeater was considered less accurate than the single-shot rifle, but the former are now made with such care and have been so improved that there is practically no difference between them for target work. The repeater, however, owing to the rapidity with which a number of shots may be fired, has considerably the advantage as a hunting arm.

In twenty-two either a single shot or a repeater may be procured which will take any or all of the rim-fire cartridges made in that calibre. In the twenty-five the best ammunition for the repeater is the 25-20, and for the single shot the 25-25 cartridge. The former is what is termed a "bottle-neck" shell; that is, the mouth where the bullet is seated is of smaller diameter than the shell at its base. It may be loaded with varying charges of powder up to eighteen grains, and with various weight bullets, with the full charge of powder. It is at its best with a 77-grain bullet.

The 25-25 cartridge is preferred by some shooters, as it can contain seven grains of powder more than the 25-20, and, being a straight shell, is rather easier to load. It cannot be used, however, in repeaters of this calibre, and its greater capacity would be of no benefit to shooters on indoor ranges, as for such use a reduced charge of about seven grains with a bullet of forty-six weight should be used, on account of the noise and penetration of the full charges.

Tools are made by means of which the rifleman may load with precision any number of cartridges with such charges as he may desire, and when he once has adjusted and set for a different combination. Many shooters use a light charge of powder and a 46-grain bullet for indoor practice, a full charge or medium charge, with a 52 to an 84-grain sharp-pointed bullet, for small game, and a full charge and a hollow-pointed expanding bullet of seventy-five grains for game up to deer. The sharp-pointed bullet makes a small, clean hole and avoids mutilating small animals, such as squirrels, while the hollow-pointed bullet, expanding on impact, gives a terrific smashing force for so small a calibre.

As regards the cost of ammunition and appurtenances required, 22-calibre rim fire cartridges cost about as follows: The short, loaded with black powder, $2.61; loaded with smokeless powder, $3.31; with smokeless powder and hollow pointed ball, for game shooting, $3.51 per thousand; the long rifle, loaded with black powder, $3.16 per thousand; 25-20 cartridge, ready loaded with full charges of black powder as supplied by the factories, $1.40 per hundred; 25-25, loaded with full charges of black powder, $2.10 per hundred. It is, however, much more economical to buy empty primed shells at 90 cents for the former and $1.70 for the latter and reload them for one's self. In estimating cost of shells, the fact that these may be reloaded a couple of dozen times should be considered.

Primers cost $1.20 per thousand, black powder about 30 cents per pound, and a quantity of smokeless powder equal to one pound of black costs 54 cents. One pound of powder will load 350 cartridges with 20 grains each. The cost of bullets will depend upon the weight of projectile used and the market price of lead.

A single-shot rifle of standard make may be bought in either calibre for from $5 to $10, or a repeater for from $10.25 to $12.50. These prices are for plainly finished arms. The same rifles, fancifully ornamented and checkered, but no better as regards shooting, can be made to cost up into the hundreds.

A reloading tool that will enable the shooter to use various charges at his own sweet will can be purchased for $3, while bullet molds are worth about 75 cents each.

A good arrangement for a bullet stopper for an indoor range is to mount the target on a wooden backing 4 by 4 feet, composed of two thicknesses of two-inch plank with a sheet of Russian iron between them, and at back of outside layer. This arrangement will stop a bullet from any cartridge that should be used indoors.

On account of its light report and freedom from smoke, smokeless or nitro powder is generally preferred to black powder, especially for indoor work, but in loading 25-20 or 25-25 ammunition, care should be taken to use what is called the low power smokeless powder, that is, one whose charge will exert the same pressure as the equivalent load of black powder. High power nitros, such as are used in modern small calibre military rifles, create a most tremendous pressure in the barrel, and one which 25-20 and 25-25 rifles made for low pressure are unable to withstand. Nitro powder also requires a stronger primer than black powder, and "nitro primers" should always be demanded when purchasing materials for reloading the shells.

Never use a shotgun powder in a rifle cartridge. The charge of a shotgun slips easily through the smooth barrel of a shotgun, but the rifle bullet, expanding from the shock of an explosion, fits tightly in the rifle grooves, and offers considerable resistance. Rifle powder, which burns with comparative slowness, gradually overcomes this resistance before exerting its full force, but the quick-burning shotgun powder makes no allowance for this.

BIG TRAP SHOOTING TOURNEY.

Plan for a New York Championship on the New Interstate Grounds.

Several prominent trap shooters are at work on the preliminary arrangements for a big trap shooting carnaval that will be inferior in importance only to the Grand American Handicap and the Annual Amateur Championship of America. The plan is to hold a tournament for the championship of Greater New York, the competition to be open to all shooters within a radius of fifty miles of this city.

Should the plans be perfected the event will be decided at the new Interstate Park at Queens, which will be the most complete trap shooting grounds in the world when they are finished, and the tournament conducted by the Interstate Association. A committee will convene in a few days for the purpose of formulating definite plans and restrictions to govern the competition. The present scheme is to have a handsome trophy indicative of the championship, which will be a challenge cup, upon whose sides shall be engraved the names of the winners each year, and, in addition, present a smaller cup each year as the permanent property of the victor. It is expected that Edward Banks, Capt. Dressel, Capt. Money, J. S. Remsen, Dr. A. A. Webber, and the other well-known experts will be the moving spirits in the scheme, which has already met with a goodly amount of favor among gunners.

The trap shooting grounds of the Interstate Park Association, where it is designed to hold the shoot, will be equipped with four sets of traps. It will be opened on March 10, 1900, by the Brooklyn Gun Club. The Grand American Handicap for 1900 will also be decided on these grounds.

FIELD AND TRAP SHOOTING.

The Rev. Dr. Rainsford of St. George's Episcopal Church in this city is an enthusiastic sportsman, and one who respects every game law to the letter. He recently returned from a hunting trip in the valley of the Metapedia, in the Province of Quebec, where he shot some big game. Before his return he forwarded to the Canadian Government a vigorous complaint of the wholesale slaughter of game carried on by poachers in that part of the country. He stated that he had seen in the woods the skinned carcasses of fourteen moose and caribou that had been slain out of season for their heads and skins.

The deer hunting season, which closed in the Adirondack region Nov. 15, was remarkable not only for the large number of deer killed but also for the unprecedented number of shooting accidents. Reports from Lake Placid, Saranac Lake, St. Regis' Lake, Long Pond, and other points show that a greater number of deer were killed this year than in any year since hounding was abolished. One reason advanced for this is that the big forest fires that prevailed drove the deer from their shelter out into the open timber and at times even into the clearings. The number of fatal shooting accidents reported so far this season is twenty-three.

Notwithstanding the presence in this city of J. A. R. Elliott and other experts with the gun, the most important trap shooting events still continue to be held at Western traps. With the exception of the tournaments of the Brooklyn Gun Club for the Francotte Gun, and the free entrance to the Grand American Handicap, club shoots are the only attraction for the trap shooter.

Dr. A. A. Webber, of Brooklyn, the expert revolver and pistol shot, recently took up shotgun work and in a very short space of time developed into a first class shot. His hand and eye are perfectly trained and he handles a shotgun in a very rapid manner.

"Ed" Panks is the scratch man in the trap shooting events of the Crescent Athletic Club. His average thus far over the Magantrap expert rules and known angles is the best of the season.

An all day shoot at live birds will be held on the grounds of the League Island Gun Club, Island Road, west of Broad Street, Philadelphia, to-morrow. Shooting in the principal event, in which several New Yorkers have entered, will begin at 2 o'clock in the afternoon.

The Columbia University Gun Club held its annual meeting last week and, after reorganizing for the season, elected its new official board as follows: President, F. Gallatin, class of 1901; Vice President, R. S. Willis, 1902; Secretary-Treasurer, L. C. Fuller, 1901; Manager, T. F. Hildreth, 1901. It was decided that the annual contest for the university championship would be held at Columbia Oval, and a committee will endeavor to arrange matches with Yale, Princeton, and Pennsylvania Universities for trap shooting honors.

The University of Pennsylvania Gun Club Team defeated the Clearview Gun Club in a match on the University of Pennsylvania grounds Dec. 9, by the score of 134 to 131 out of a possible 225 blue rocks. Nine men shot on each team at twenty-five targets each.

A good story is told about a member of the Brooklyn Gun Club. His wife, in commenting upon his prowess, remarked that when her husband went out gunning he never brought home any game, but when he went out on his bicycle he always brought home a duck or hen which he had killed by running over it.

The big game season in Maine closed on Dec. 15, three weeks earlier than in 1898. It will be found that the total kill of deer for the State this season will be rising 15,000 deer. Game Warden Pollard says there are just as many bull moose in the Northern Maine woods as ever before, but they are young ones, and their antlers have not developed. The number of bears shot this season in Maine is 15, which is somewhat smaller than for the same time last year. While less in point of numbers, the quality of fur has been much better and the animals have been larger.

Many New York trap shooters will avail themselves of the invitation extended by the New York Gun Club for their holiday shoot on Jan. 1. The programme is made up of ten events, and shooting will be begun at 9:30 in the morning.

The date of the beginning of the Grand American Handicap has been fixed for April 2, 1900, and will continue for some days. Other events will extend the meeting over an entire week.

There is quite a number of the stars of the shooting world in town this week, among them Messrs. W. L. Colville, Irby Bennett, J. Hildreth, J. J. Hallowell, B. Leroy Woodward, E. D. Fulford, and E. C. Meyer, President of the Rochester Rod and Gun Club.

The South Side Gun Club of Newark, N. J., will hold its twenty-first annual all-day shoot on Jan. 1. The sport will be confined to targets, and C. W. Feigenspan will manage the affair.

SHOOTING ON LONG ISLAND.

Weather Much Too Mild for Duck Baggers—Dangers of Deer Hunting.

"The duck shooting season on Long Island has not been especially good as yet," writes a prominent wing shot, "for the reason that the weather is too mild and quiet by far for the sport."

It is a fact, however, that occasional good days have been had. Duck shooting demands cold, stormy weather, conditions, in fact, that would keep any other sportsman but a duck shooter indoors. Broadbills have been exceptionally wary in the vicinity of Great South Bay and a recent letter from Bay Shore states that the best bag so far for a single gun has been forty birds in one day, although men in a battery have returned with larger bags to their credit.

With the approach of cold weather the birds are getting more and more wary, and from present appearances it looks as though a goodly proportion of ducks that have visited Long Island will reach the South this season despite the efforts of the shooters to stop them.

Owing to the several fatal accidents on the deer shooting ground of Suffolk County during the open season this year, a movement has been started among the most influential sportsmen of that district to further restrict the shooting of deer. During former seasons several persons have been seriously wounded by the carelessness of gunners, and during the present year one man was killed outright and two others badly wounded.

The opinion of the better class of sportsmen appears to be that the open season for deer should be limited to four consecutive days in November and that strict penalties should be imposed for shooting out of season and for fire lighting. It is a well-known fact that shooting deer on Long Island is dangerous work, much more so than in the Adirondacks, where gunners have a larger territory for their sport.

It may be stated that the casualties that have occurred are not the fault of experienced gunners, but of men who, never before having seen how deer were shot, blazed away at any point where they heard a twig snap or a rustling in the underbrush. It is probable that some legislative action will be taken at Albany either to restrict the open days as suggested, or to make it a misdemeanor for an inexperienced person to frequent the grounds during the open season.

ECHOES FROM THE LINKS

New York Soon to Have Two Public Golf Courses.

WILL BE ON HUNTER'S ISLAND

Van Cortlandt Links a Great Success—Several Games for Christmas—News from Various Clubs.

Public golf in New York City has demonstrated its success far more than the most sanguine expected last Spring, when it was decided to increase the playing facilities of the Van Cortlandt links from nine to eighteen holes. This unlooked-for success and the increasing number of players will undoubtedly lead to the laying out of another public course before another season's golf begins. This new course will be on the opposite side of the city from Van Cortlandt Park, in the vicinity of Travers Island.

For over a year the members of the New York Athletic Club who play golf, and there are said to be over 300 admirers of the game in the club, have yearned for a course near their Summer home. Many and many a day have these enthusiasts looked across the narrow stretch of water to the inviting meadows of Pelham Bay Park and longed for an opportunity to put and drive and yell "fore" over its undulating sweeps of turf. One section of Pelham Bay Park, bordering the water, seemed to be particularly adapted to golf, and so earnest were the clubmen about the matter that, with the approval of Park Commissioner Moebus of the Bronx Borough, they had a careful survey made of the property for a nine and an eighteen hole course. Lawrence E. Van Etten, who laid out the Knollwood Country Club links, near White Plains, and other courses, made the survey, and his map is now in Commissioner Moebus's office.

The work of improving the Van Cortlandt links was considered all that the Bronx Park Department could do at that time, but the advocates of a second public course kept their eyes open, and now that the Van Cortlandt course is finished, they have renewed their petitions to Commissioner Moebus. The result was that a few days ago the Commissioner, with Mr. Van Etten and J. D. Foot, F. M. Hausling, P. A. Curtis, George F. Scannell, E. K. Hunter, and J. H. Stead of the New York Athletic Club, went over the ground in the immediate locality and decided upon a little change from the original plan. This was that Hunter's Island offered a more satisfactory spot for the new course than Pelham Bay Park, and it was practically determined to begin work on a nine-hole course, so that it might be ready for use early in the Spring.

The first hole will be near the old Hunter residence, and the natural facilities of the land, combined with several stone walls, offer good opportunities for bunkers and other features for a sporty course. Mr. Foot, who is one of the Athletic Club Governors, and was among the earliest advocates for a course in that locality, was exceedingly pleased with the land.

"It will make a splendid golf course, without a question," he said; "the turf is excellent, the picturesque features are attractive to the mind and the eye, it is comparatively easy of access, and I am sure that hundreds of golfers will use the new links as soon as they are ready."

With its second public links New York will be far ahead of all other cities in the country. Indeed, it is now, for that matter, since New York is the only city that has an eighteen-hole public golf course and employs a regular professional to keep the links in first-class order and give instruction whenever necessary. Thomas Bendelow fills that position, and his knowledge of all the intricacies of the game has contributed to the great success of golf at Van Cortlandt this season. A regular system of rules conducive to order and the convenience of players went into effect early in the year. The caddies were forced to obey some reasonable demands of law and decorum and the whole tone of the Van Cortlandt golf course was raised to a higher level.

The links have been used as never before. Several public tournaments have been held, and on many Saturdays the throng of players has been so great that many players had long waits before they could drive off. The course is open on Sundays, and that has also been a crowded day. The links will not be closed during the Winter, but will be ready for play every day in the year, temporary greens, of course, being provided.

New York golfers who are not club members could hardly want more freedom than this. The only charge is the caddy fee, but if a player prefers to carry his own clubs, he can play all day for nothing. Boston prides herself, and justly, too, on her public links in Franklin Park, but those who use it have to pay a fee of 25 cents for each round, and in that way the professional secures his remuneration, as he is not paid by the city. The course is closed during the Winter, and the Boston golfers have just been raising a great howl for a suitable house for dressing rooms and the storing of clubs, as it seems they have practically nothing at present but a shanty somewhat limited in size.

The advocates of public golf in Chicago have been watching the success of our Van Cortlandt links with considerable interest, and efforts will be made this coming year to do more for public golf in that city than has hitherto been accomplished. A course for the public was laid out in Jackson Park, and was opened with considerable éclat, a silver-handled club being presented to one of the Commissioners as a memento of the occasion. Its career throughout the season has not been fraught with success. It was a short course, and as a novice began to know the game he longed for something better, and either joined or was "put up" temporarily at one of the clubs.

The management seems to have been anything but conducive to the public interest. It is claimed that the students of the University of Chicago tried to run the links, and in a few tournaments which they arranged took special pains to let outsiders know that they were not welcome as competitors. Some of the non-collegiate patrons of the links formed the idea of organizing a public golf club as a means of increasing interest in the course, but when the plan was broached to the students, it is claimed they turned a cold shoulder to the proposition. A. A. Stagg, the well-known athletic director of the university, has become an enthusiastic golfer, and holds the record for the nine holes at Jackson Park—36 strokes. A Chicago paper, in discussing the situation, concludes with the following tribute to New York:

"With the coming of next season it is hoped that peace will be restored among the opposing factions, and that ere Summer begins Chicago, like New York, will boast of a golf club in Jackson Park and all the pleasures and conveniences to players it affords, which will be open to the public."

Baltimore laid out a public course in one of its parks last year. St. Louis has one, and a few other cities have met the demand for public golf, but apart from New York and Boston, very little care is expended on the links, and most of them are used in a desultory way. The start, however, is a good one, and all these public courses aid the progress of golf throughout the country.

The public courses, besides giving an opportunity to many non-club members to learn and enjoy the game, contribute their share in improving the standard of play. Many good golfers, who would not have taken up the game unless it were for the public links, owe their start to that method, and from municipal links they have entered the portals of prominent clubs and added to the latter's golfing fame and their own individual glory. Walter J. Travis was one of the original players on the Van Courtlandt course. The method of giving a few tournaments acts also as an additional spur to the regular players to do their best when matched as competitors with their daily companions. The presence of an instructor on the links is a helpful feature, and Bendelow has often had nearly every hour of the day occupied with lessons during the past Summer at Van Cortlandt.

The unusually mild weather that has prevailed since Thanksgiving has been a veritable boon to the golfing fraternity, and the open links in local circles have kept them fairly alive with players every week. These mild climatic conditions have called out the announcements of more Christmas and New Year's tournaments than has formerly been the case. The Lakewood Club will hold a handicap to-morrow for its members and guests, and the schoolboys of the town will play the second of their series of games at the Country Club for the Dwight M. Harris Cup. The Richmond County Country Club of Staten Island announces a members' handicap for Christmas, and informal play will be the order at Harbor Hill. Prizes have been offered for a special match at the Crescent Athletic Club, Bay Ridge, and the Nassau Country Club at Glen Cove will give handicaps for its three classes of players. Impromptu games will also be played on many other courses.

The enthusiasm of both college and school lads for golf has been one of the notable features during the past season, but the influence of the game upon the younger element is said to have been revealed in a novel manner among some grammar school boys in a Boston suburb. Choosing a vacant field, they laid out six holes, using tin milk cans sunk into the ground to keep the holes in perfect shape. Of course, these made pretty large holes, but not for their utensils, for they began the game with baseballs and bats. It was great sport knocking the big balls over the field, and afforded much amusement to the spectators, who often gathered in large numbers to watch the novel golf game. Finally a kind-hearted woman gave the boys a real golf ball and that changed the whole tenor of their sport. They could not knock the little ball from hole to hole with the clumsy bat, and hooked sticks were accordingly cut from neighboring trees.

Some of the lads showed great ingenuity in making their collection of natural clubs and they would make an interesting addition to some of the collections in England and Scotland of old-style clubs and balls. The lads are developing accuracy of the eye in placing the ball near the hole. In a few years some of them will doubtless be winning championships and silver cups in many of the Boston clubs, but it is safe to say they will never forget the genuine enjoyment of their early contests, dependent upon their own ingenuity.

Some harsh criticisms have been made by would-be critics upon a few of the California links. As a sample, the course at Presidio is called "rough, unkempt, and badly laid out, an absolute libel on the name of golf links." This is pretty hard truly, but in the statement that "the greens are as rough as the rubbing surface of a washboard," there are elements of truth which can be applied with justice to many courses in Southern California where the turf is often as scarce as is the case in Florida. A new house and links at Pasadena, known as the Hotel Green Golf Club, was opened with a three-day tournament last week.

The entries at the Presidio links for the championship of the San Francisci locality, were not as large as had been expected, all the competitors being local men, except one or two from Los Angeles. The Colgrove Golf Club of the latter place is one of the new acquisitions, and the Rubidoux Club of Riverside has arranged several events for the Winter. On the whole, golf in California is steadily improving and with more attention to the links the sport will attain a higher standard. The visit this season of several Eastern professionals to the Pacific Coast is exerting a beneficent influence upon both players and links.

A new woman's record has just been made on the links of the Chevvy Chase Golf Club, Washington, D. C. Miss Kitzmilhar of the Edgewood Club, Pittsburg, reduced the old record of 117 strokes to 110 strokes, and won the first big tournament for women at the club this season. She gets a three-quarter swing and drives a long ball. Miss Parrish of the Shinnecock Hills Club, and who has played on many local links, did the course in 113 strokes, winning second place. A number of interesting events will be held on the Chevvy Chase links during the Winter.

Our English friends fight shy of new ideas in golf. The proposition to adopt the American plan of a qualifying round has recently been before the officers of the Ladies' Golf Union of Great Britain, and after considerable discussion as to its value in a championship match, it was voted down by a large majority. Both the men's and the women's championships there start with a match play round of all the entries, and so continue until finished.

The Harbor Hill Golf Club of Staten Island will keep its course open all Winter, and with favorable weather several informal contests will be played. Otto Hochmeyer has retired from the Captaincy, and that place will be filled during the coming year by his brother, Vincent Hochmeyer. The brothers are both on the Green Committee, and the other members are Paul B. Cooke, W. Scott O'Connor, and J. E. C. Leavitt. The officers as recently elected are: President—P. F. Kobbe; Vice President—H. J. Cruikshank; Secretary—J. E. C. Leavitt; Treasurer—E. E. Allum; Recording Secretary—Ralph McKee; Associate Captain—Miss H. I. Whittemore.

THE SPORTSMAN'S SHOW.

Some of the Contemplated Attractions for Yachtsmen and Gunners.

Unless indications are misleading, the sixth annual sportsman's show at Madison Square Garden this Winter will be the grandest of any yet held by the association. Attractive features are now being arranged for and exhibitors have engaged space months in advance. This year the exhibition of boats, canoes, and launches will be made a feature, and the up-to-date appliances which are of interest to the yachtsman will be most complete.

A miniature lake will again be one of the features, and special attractions in the way of aquatic sports will be given nightly. These sports will include swimming, canoeing, tub racing, and water polo. A big game park, containing deer, elk, buffalo, caribou, and moose, will form an exhibit of big game, and in addition there will be mountain lions, cougars, bears, &c., in specially built cages. Live game birds will be shown, including quail, ducks of every variety, pheasants, swans, geese, and other specimens. The fish exhibit, which will be under the supervision of the State Fish Commission, will be most complete. The Indian village and guides' Adirondack camps will also be numbered among the attractions.

The association championship at inanimate targets will be held on the roof of the Garden, and additional sweepstake events will be shot at the pleasure of shooters.

AMATEUR ATHLETIC NOTES.

The Registration Committee of the Metropolitan Association of the Amateur Athletic Union are taking hold of the game of basket ball, and are going to encourage it in this district in every possible way. Chairman Rubien of the committee said yesterday that at the next meeting of the association they are going to advocate that the Metropolitan Association give basket-ball championships, open to all registered athletes in the metropolitan district. Both senior and junior championships will be advocated. Besides these two championships, the National Committee of the Amateur Athletic Union will soon, after the Metropolitan Association championships are finished, give a National championship meeting, which will be open to all registered basket-ball teams in the United States.

John Flanagan, the champion hammer thrower of the world, has developed an inventive turn of mind. So far as his natural ability as a hammer thrower was concerned, he has about reached his limit; so he has turned his attention to something whereby he can improve his record. The result is that he has invented a new ball-bearing hammer. It is very much like the ordinary hammer, with the exception that the wire handle is so inserted in the hammer that the hammer when in the air continually revolves on a series of ball bearings, and from the few times he has thrown this hammer of his he is convinced that at least eight or ten feet can be added to his present record. As soon as the hammer leaves the thrower's hands it goes through the air with a rapidity that is certainly marvelous, and the head is always revolving. Besides the speed, it is claimed for the hammer that it is indestructible, and the breaking of hammer handles will now be a thing of the past.

The Cutler School Athletic Association has elected H. Littlejohn Captain of the cross-country team and J. Aiken Captain of the basket-ball team. The first cross-country run of the season was held last Saturday morning over the Van Cortlandt Park course, a distance of about three miles. In the senior division S. M. Edgell finished first, G. C. Parsons second, and L. Littlejohn third. Esler was the first to finish in the junior division, and was closely followed home by Babcock and Cutting in the order named.

The Metropolitan Association of the Amateur Athletic Union will hold a meeting at the Astor House Jan. 5, 1900, to arrange for a cross-country championship meeting.

YACHTS AND YACHTSMEN.

"International challenge cups, like newspapers, are all the better for being circulated," says the current issue of The London Yachtsman. "What displeases us most about the America's Cup, for instance, is that it is so horribly stagnant."

The yachting season on the Clyde begins on May 12, at Gourock, and ends on Aug. 8 with the cruise of the Royal Northern Yacht Club.

Both J. Pierpont Morgan and C. Oliver Iselin, as well as Mr. Herreshoff, are reported to have expressed themselves as determined to have nothing more to do with matches for the America's Cup, though Herman B. Duryea, W. K. Vanderbilt, Jr., and Harry Payne Whitney, who have raced thirty-footers at Newport for some seasons, are reported to be ready to build a new "defender" and contribute all the money necessary for sailing her when the need arises.

The steam yacht Arcturus, owned by Rutherford Stuyvesant, and Sir Thomas Lipton's Erin are in Fay & Co.'s docks, at Southampton, England, and are being overhauled. The Arcturus is one of the few American yachts that has never been seen in American waters. She is being fitted out for the Mediterranean season.

The current number of The Yachtsman reports that William Waldorf Astor of London has chartered the Duke of Sutherland's yacht Catania for a four months' cruise in the Mediterranean. The yacht is expected to leave Cowes, Isle of Wight, where she has been laid up, early next month.

Sir Thomas Lipton's cutter Shamrock has been towed from her dock at Greenock to the mooring prepared for her in the Gareloch. Sir Thomas will not fit her our for the Riviera.

Sir Thomas Lipton, who was a guest of honor at the annual dinner of the Royal Temple Yacht Club in the Hotel Cecil, London, responded to the toast, "The America's Cup." Sir Thomas, who was heartily cheered, said he had received nothing but the very greatest kindness and the fairest possible treatment during his sojourn in the United States. The Shamrock had been fairly and squarely beaten, but, though he was genuinely disappointed at not being able to win the cup, he did not in the smallest degree regret having gone across the Atlantic, and he added, "Although not successful, I see nothing to discourage me from making another attempt, and unless some one else makes a challenge in the meantime, I have every intention of doing so very shortly." An exhibition by the American Biograph showing scenes during the progress of the Columbia-Shamrock races, was a feature of the evening.

A merry party composed of members of the Greenville Yacht Club went down in the sloop Ella G. as far as Rockaway last Sunday, where, off the Oriental Hotel, they secured a good mess of codfish and ling. The party started for the lower bay the previous night, and was in charge of Mr. Busche, one of the club's most enthusiastic skippers. A deep-sea cook, chartered specially for the occasion by Capt. Busche, could not stand the uneasy movements of the plunging craft, and paid tribute to old Father Neptune before the yacht had really reached the open sea. He was relegated to the sick bay, well forward of the galley, where he remained during the entire voyage despite repeated doses of strong waters, that usually effect a cure in similar cases. By a unanimous vote Mr. Brown was delegated to act as an emergency cook, and if some portion of the steak was done a little too much and another not quite enough; it didn't interfere with the appetites of the convives. The coffee also, while not quite up to the quality that "mother used to make," was acceptable. Just who caught the largest denizen of the deep will perhaps forever remain a mystery, as each man of the party claims the honor. Some of the claims have reached as high as sixty pounds, and late reports show a tendency to still further increase the limit.

On Monday evening, Dec. 18, the Morris Yacht Club held their annual meeting at their rooms in the Morris Hotel. The meeting was called for the purpose of hearing the reports of the various committees and for the election of officers for the coming year. The flag officers elected were: Commodore—George R. Moran; Vice Commodore—Hugo Eckert; Rear Commodore—William Neubeck; Fleet Captain—J. Belgard. Mr. F. Knezek, Jr., was elected Secretary, and Mr. Ralph Kestler Treasurer. Several new members were elected, among others being M. M. Corwin, John Heeb, and William Herrmann. The elections were followed by the annual dinner and entertainment provided by mine host Fisher. The Regatta Committee are to arrange for special races for next season, and have under way races for the two classes brought forward by The Rudder—the Larks and Swallows; other races will be arranged for the various classes enrolled in the club. The class so popular last season (racing skiffs) will again contest for a special trophy offered by the Commodore, the Crank, Mr. A. G. Riegel, having won the trophy last season, the Nono, Commodore Moran, being second.

The noted shipyard at City Island, owned for many years by Henry Peipgras, has been sold. Many of the famous yachts that have raced under the Stars and Stripes during the past twenty years have been built there, and scores of the fliers have been laid up in its basins or hauled high and dry on the beaches every Winter. The name of the new owner has not transpired, but it is rumored that Lewis Nixon, manager of the Crescent Shipbuilding Company, has acquired the property.

H. C. Fowler, New York Yacht Club, who formerly owned the steam yacht Huntress, has placed an order with the Marblehead Yacht Yard for a thirty-five-foot water line sailing craft. The new boat will be cutter-rigged and about fifty-five feet over all. Purdon's was the accepted design. Last season Mr. Fowler deserted steam and was a part owner with W. D. Bishop of Bridgeport in the schooner Comanche.

The fast thirty-four-footer Surprise, one of the best-known racing yachts on Long Island Sound, has been sold by W. T. Rainey to Charles Robinson Smith of this city. The Surprise will be raced again next season.

The Annual Event in Muslin Underwear.

Sale Begins Tuesday, December 26.

This announcement of the beginning of our annual sale of Muslin Underwear will be a signal for thousands of Brooklyn women to flock to our store on Tuesday.

Each recurring sale has reflected the progress of the store, and this offering as a matter of course will easily be the best we've ever been able to present. Our preparations for this sale were made many months ago, before the great and constantly increasing advance in the cost of cotton fabrics set in. We couldn't begin to buy these goods ourselves in the present market at anything near the low prices at which we offer them to you. In many instances we're able to sell you garments at less than you'd have to pay for the material alone. What we wish to direct particular attention to is the quality of all the garments in the collection. Every piece, no matter how low priced, is properly proportioned and made and finished in a manner to meet the requirements of good taste and good service.

Masonville Muslin—a muslin noted for its excellence and durability—is used in even the cheapest corset cover.

The most fastidious woman can select any of this underwear with the certainty of being pleased and suited

Winter Dress Goods.

Great Reduction Sale—Half of Regular Prices and Less.

The long continued mild weather has somewhat interfered with the sale of woolen dress fabrics. We do not propose to have any "slow" goods on our shelves, not even if they ARE NEW AND DESIRABLE—this season's lines. Therefore, we will have a reduction sale on TUESDAY, DECEMBER 26, of Dress Goods at prices one-half of former figures and less. The goods are in every way up to our well known high standard. Such an opportunity has not occurred in Greater New York this season.

LOT 1—350 yards Fancy Check Mixtures, variety of excellent styles in Scotch effects, 40 inches wide, reduced from 50 cts. to 25 cts. per yard.

LOT 2—400 yards Cheviot Homespun, plaids in most stylish skirting designs, 47 inches wide, reduced from $1.25 to 50 cts. per yard.

LOT 3—575 yards Fancy Suitings in camel's hair bourette effects and granite Cheviots, 45 inches wide; also a lot of 50-inch Homespuns, in excellent mixtures, reduced from $1.25 to 58 cts. per yard.

LOT 4—550 yards of 50-inch all wool Suitings, a variety of desirable mixtures, reduced from $1.25 to 75 cts. per yard.

LOT 5—500 yards very fine high-class imported Suitings, from England and Scotland; plaids in zibeline effects; Scotch mixtures and homespun stripes—all with the unmistakable foreign look that gives these goods their stylish effect—suitable for dresses and skirts; early season prices, $2.25 and $2.85, reduced to $1.25 per yard.

Special Tables in Dress Goods Section.

Ladies' Suits and Jackets.

Sweeping Reductions Made for Tuesday.

Charges of Collusion and Fraud Against McMahon and Heydecker Withdrawn.

The charges of collusion and fraud as attorneys which were preferred against Fulton McMahon and E. L. Heydecker by Ignatius Weltner, a lawyer of this city, were yesterday formally retracted by E. A. Alexander, counsel for Mr. Weltner at a continuance of the hearing before Magistrate Mayo in the Jefferson Market Police Court. Mr. Alexander was placed on the witness stand at his own request, and after setting forth the grounds of his earlier suspicions, declared that all the circumstances had been clearly explained to him, and that in the light of these explanations the charges were groundless.

This sudden turn of affairs left the burden of the prosecution, which was of a criminal nature, solely upon the District Attorney's office. Assistant District Attorney Le Barbier was nonplused. Unwilling to withdraw the charges without first consulting with his chief, he announced that the prosecution had concluded its examination of witnesses, and asked Magistrate Mayo for an adjournment until the stenographic notes could be reviewed, when he would sum up the case.

"The only summing up," interjected Simon Sterne, counsel for the defendants, "should be an elaborate apology to the gentlemen who have been wronged by these charges. Nothing else is possible in view of the evidence."

Mr. McMahon and Mr. Heydecker, however, objected to a withdrawal of the charges against them, and insisted that the case be pushed until dismissed by the court. No date was set for the final hearing.

The charges against Messrs. Heydecker and McMahon grew out of a series of litigations incidental to the settlement of the estate of George Orgawitz, an Austrian, who died in this country. The defendants in the present case represented the American heirs, and Ignatius Weltner, who preferred the charges, represented the foreign heirs. The records of the litigations involved were very extensive, and the examination of these and of the witnesses had proceeded for several weeks.

Considerable comment was caused when the prosecution began from the fact that both Mr. Heydecker and Mr. McMahon, who are members of the City Club, had been active in certain work connected with the club's charges against District Attorney Gardiner now pending before a Commissioner appointed by Gov. Roosevelt. The City Club retained Simon Sterne and other counsel to defend the accused attorneys, and sent delegations to the police court as a manifestation of its interest in the case. In withdrawing his client's charges yesterday Mr. Alexander insisted that at no time had he desired to persecute the defendants, but had acted in good faith throughout.

"If the charges are pressed by the District Attorney's office in the view of Mr. Alexander's statements," said Mr. Sterne last night, "the animus must be evident. I do not believe, however, that there will be a further hearing. Assistant District Attorney Le Barbier is too good a lawyer and too much of a gentleman to push the prosecution further."

STRUCK BY A CABLE CAR.

Woodley Carter Hurt on Columbus Avenue—Gripman Does Not Stop.

A south-bound Columbus Avenue cable car struck a well-dressed colored man as he was crossing at Sixty-third Street shortly before midnight last night. It threw him several feet to one side, and then went swiftly on, the gripman not stopping to see what he had done.

The man was picked up and taken to Roosevelt Hospital unconscious. The doctors said that he had concussion of the brain and internal injuries. Bystanders recognized the injured man as Woodley Carter, thirty years old, of 217 West Sixty-third Street, a porter in the Grand Central Station.

BOY IS ACCUSED OF PATRICIDE.

Mother Is Also Under Arrest as an Accessory.

VANDALIA, Ill., Dec. 23.—Arthur Prior, aged fifteen, is charged in a warrant issued to-day with the murder of his father, Lafayette Prior, who was killed Dec. 16 while asleep in bed. A warrant has also been drawn for the arrest of the dead man's widow, Mrs. Lydia Prior.

It is charged that she was an accessory after the fact. The family is one of the most prominent in the community, having settled here a quarter of a century ago.

SCHOOL FOR WOMEN MINISTERS.

Site for New Seminary Will Be Located in Chicago.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 23.—The seminary for female ministers which the Rev. A. M. Harvuot of the Central Christian Church of this city succeeded in having favorably considered by the jubilee convention of the Church Missionary Societies held here last October, and which it was thought would be located in Cincinnati, will probably be established in Chicago. This is because the Church of Disciples has no large college in this vicinity.

At a meeting of Christian Workers recently held in Chicago a Committee of Selection of Site was appointed, consisting of the Rev. Dr. S. G. Tyrrell of Chicago, Chairman; the Rev. W. B. Taylor, the Rev. Dr. H. F. Willet, the Rev. Dr. George R. Darstadt, all of Chicago; the Rev. Dr. J. W. Harden, President of Eureka College, Illinois; the Rev. Dr. C. D. Philpott of Central Church, Indianapolis; J. E. Pounds, National Superintendent of Christian Endeavor; the Rev. Dr. C. L. Thurgood of Pittsburg, and the Rev. A. M. Harvuot.

This committee will report to a conference to be held at Indianapolis March 27 and 29, when the site will be chosen.

POLICEMAN IN RIGHT PLACE.

Searching for One Man His Presence Prevents Another's Escape.

Policeman McDermott of the Elizabeth Street Station, while searching for the complainant against four prisoners he had arrested yesterday morning, was happily the means of preventing the escape of Edward Cohen of 111 East One Hundred and Fifth Street, who is now in the Tombs on a charge of having stabbed his wife, Annie Cohen of 185 Chrystie Street.

The man McDermott was looking for lived at 185 Chrystie Street. Just as the policeman was ringing the bell the door was flung open and Cohen, with a bloody knife in his hand, dashed out. He ran into the policeman and both fell, while a crowd of infuriated men and women, inmates of the house, who came pell-mell down the stairs in pursuit of Cohen, tumbled over them and landed in a heap in the street. When Cohen got to his feet he tried to get away, but the policeman held him fast with one hand while with the other he pushed back the crowd of angry neighbors.

Annie Cohen was found unconscious in her room on the third floor, with deep wounds in her neck and left breast. She was taken to Gouverneur Hospital, where she is reported to be in a serious condition.

McDermott took his prisoner to the Centre Street Police Court, where he found the man he had been looking for waiting for him.

Cohen was remanded to the Tombs, and will be arraigned in Essex Market Police Court to-day.

The neighbors say that the stabbing was the result of a quarrel in the Cohen apartments, in Chrystie Street, yesterday morning.

Judge Hurd Takes a Bride.

Judge William B. Hurd of the Kings County Court celebrated Christmas yesterday by getting quietly married. The bride was Mrs. Mary A. Barrett, widow of James C. Barrett of Vanderbilt Avenue. The marriage took place at the home of the Rev. C. W. Homer, rector of St. James's Protestant Episcopal Church, on St. James's Place. Judge Aspinall of the County Court was one of the few friends of the couple present. Mrs. Hurd was formerly of Rutland, Vt.

DENOUNCES WOMAN'S ARREST.

A. R. Ferguson Alleges that His Sister-in-Law Suffered Detention Without Cause.

Miss Edith Howard, richly dressed and about twenty-five years of age, was arrested between midnight and 1 o'clock yesterday morning, at Broadway and Forty-second Street, for alleged disorderly conduct. She was discharged in court. She called at the West Thirtieth Street Station last night with a man who gave his name as A. R. Ferguson. He said he was the brother-in-law of the woman. He denounced Detective Binning, who arrested Miss Howard, and said he would take the case to the Police Commissioners.

Dinning is one of Capt. Price's men. He said the woman accosted him, and he arrested her. She was discharged in the Jefferson Market Court. She complains that she was all night in jail, and in the morning put in a pen with objectionable persons.

Ferguson, who says he lives at the Cadillac Hotel, Forty-third Street and Broadway, and is a tobacconist at 36 East Houston Street, walked into the station house with Miss Howard and asked her to point out the man who had arrested her. Binning was present and the woman pointed to him. Ferguson asked Binning if he had arrested her, and upon Binning answering that he had, and that she had accosted him, Ferguson said:

"You're a liar! How could she? She was waiting for me."

Ferguson said he was accompanying the woman home. He stopped in the Hotel Cadillac to get something to drink, and asked her to wait a few seconds. She was arrested while he was inside. The woman said Binning had addressed her, and she turned, thinking he was Mr. Ferguson, and finding out her mistake, had apologized. She said Binning then arrested her.

Ferguson denounced Binning until the woman begged him to desist. He laid the matter before Capt. Price.

CARE OF POOR PATIENTS.

The fifteenth annual report of the Post-Graduate Hospital has just been published. Sixteen hundred and seventeen absolutely free patients, to whom 38,313 days of care were given, were treated as in-patients. The whole number of patients was 2,688. The district physician visited 1,447 patients at their homes, without charge. Three hundred and sixty-eight poor women were cared for at their homes by the obstetric physician. More than $30,000 was received during the year from physicians attending the medical school of which the hospital is a part.

The report contains an account of the work of the hospital on the east side, and an appeal for the endowment of the laboratory and the lying-in department. There are numerous illustrations, among which is a view of a large fireproof building just erected and given by Harris C. Fahnestock to the Post-Graduate Medical School and Hospital.

EXHIBIT OF YACHT MODELS.

Those Destined for Paris Fair to be Shown at N. Y. Athletic Club.

The exhibit of models of noted American yachts that will form a part of the United States contribution to the Paris Exposition next year will be shown to members of the New York Athletic Club for a short time before they are sent abroad. This exhibit has been arranged through the courtesy of the committee who will control it during the exposition, and will include models of the Columbia, Defender, and other noted sailing vessels as well as models of famous steam craft whose reputations for speed have traveled across the Atlantic.

These models, the majority of which are the handiwork of Gustav Gran of this city, have been loaned by the owners or by the New York Yacht Club. Charles R. Flint's new flyer, now in process of construction at Ayres's yard, Upper Nyack, and which is confidently expected to develop a speed of more than fifty miles an hour, will be one of the most important of the exhibits.

At the New York Athletic Club's house, where the preliminary exhibition will be held, nothing could be learned as to the date when the models would be shown. A number of them are already there, however, although their shipping cases have not as yet been removed.

Sheriff-elect William Walton of Kings County was yesterday sworn in by Justice Gaynor in the Supreme Court. Mr. Walton will enter upon his duties as Sheriff on Jan. 1.

SHIPWRECKED SAILORS IN PORT.

Crew of the Bark Autocrat Buffeted by a Gale Near Bermuda.

The steamer Trinidad, that came in yesterday from Bermuda, brought along Capt. Alberthsen and eleven men of the crew of the Norwegian bark Autocrat, which was wrecked in a gale near Bermuda. Seaman Frank Gell said that the bark left Brunswick, Ga., on Nov. 24, with a load of heavy timber for King's Lynn.

The Autocrat on Dec. 12 ran into a fierce northeast gale, and the Captain hove to. A heavy sea was shipped which tore off the vessel's bulwarks, and much water poured down the hold and spoiled the provisions. At 3 o'clock the following morning the bark filled and became waterlogged, the main and foremasts broke, and had to be cut down. The decks burst open, and the cabin went to pieces. The Captain had the new Norwegian flag put up in the mizzen crosstrees and also hoisted a signal flag.

The British steamer Cayo Moro, from London for Bermuda, sighted the signal and hastened to the rescue on the lee side. Boats were lowered, and the Norwegian sailors jumped into the sea and were pulled into the boats. The shipwrecked sailors were taken to Bermuda, where they landed on Dec. 17. Then they took passage for this city. The sailors went to the Scandinavian Sailors' Home, in Brooklyn.

BABY MET WITH FOUL PLAY.

Ball of Straw in Throat of the Child Found in Brooklyn.

An autopsy was performed yesterday on the body of the female child that was found on Friday in a barrel containing a quantity of straw in the glass house at Morgan Avenue and Maujer Street, Brooklyn. Evidence was found by the Coroner's physician that practically confirmed the suspicion that the child's death had been due to foul play.

The child's body was found in a barrel, which was among eight that George Becker, a driver in the employ of Otto Goetz, a glassware dealer at 261 Stagg Street, had removed to Brooklyn from a cellar under the crockery store of L. Grassman, on Ninth Avenue, between Fifty-third and Fifty-fourth Streets, Manhattan. Becker had delivered goods at Grassman's place, and the barrels, which he removed and one of which contained the body, had been in the cellar for some time.

Coroners' Physician Wuest found that death had been caused by a roll of straw about the size of a pigeon's egg that had been rolled into a ball and presumably pushed down the child's throat. Coroner Delap, upon hearing the report, at once communicated with the police of the West Forty-seventh Street Station in Manhattan, and also with Police Headquarters, in the Borough of Manhattan.

The police of the West Forty-seventh Street Station said last night they are looking for Susie Sifos, who lived over Grassman's store until a few days ago. They think she may know something of the case.

Catholic Ordinations in Brooklyn.

Bishop McDonnell of Brooklyn yesterday conferred minor orders and deaconships on a number of students at St. John's Seminary, Willoughby and Lewis Avenues. John Smith received full minor orders, and Peter Richard, Theodore King, Patrick Kelly, James Traynor, William Duhigg, John Farrell, Joseph McKenna, William Heavey, Emil Strenski, and Martin Fitzpatrick were ordained exorcists and acolytes. Those ordained deacons were the Revs. Conrad Lutz, Tobias Farrinkoff, John Scheffel, Thomas Quinn, and John Patterson.

Brooklyn Teachers Paid.

The Brooklyn teachers were enabled to do some extra Christmas shopping yesterday. The supplementary pay rolls and checks for the money due them under the minimum requirements of the Ahearn law were received by Secretary Brown of the local School Board from City Paymaster Timmermann during the day, and the money was later paid over to the teachers.

THINKS HE IS INSANE.

Joseph Block Asks Bellevue Physicians to Examine Him.

Joseph Block, twenty-seven years old, of 2,230 Fifth Avenue, a well-dressed man, walked into Bellevue Hospital last night and asked to be examined. He said he feared he was not in his right mind.

The man said he lived at the above address with his wife, Sophia, but he did not tell anything else about his history. He was placed in the insane pavilion to be held under the observation of Dr. Robertson.

CREDITORS OF CONKLIN & SON.

New Receiver Under Federal Law Supersedes Assignee Drugan.

The action of certain of the creditors of John M. Conklin & Son, the Brooklyn dry goods firm which made an assignment on Friday, has drawn public attention to the operation of the Federal bankruptcy law of 1898, as affecting citizens who make assignments for the benefit of creditors under the State assignment act.

The mere act of making a general assignment is an act of bankruptcy under the Federal statute, and is the only fact which creditors need allege and prove, to have bankruptcy declared.

Justice Thomas, in the United States District Court, yesterday, appointed Robert D. Beattys, a Manhattan attorney, receiver for the business, on the application of creditors. The petition recited that under the new National bankruptcy law the firm had committed an act of bankruptcy by making an assignment.

Mr. Beattys, as receiver, supersedes Edward F. Drugan, as assignee, Mr. Beattys getting his paramount authority because of his having been appointed under the United States bankruptcy law, which overrides the State law, under which the assignee was appointed.

Mr. Beattys will continue in charge of the business until the creditors meet and agree upon the appointment of a trustee. The business was going on as usual yesterday.

TRIED TO STEAL NECKLACE.

Adams Express Company Clerk Caught in the Act.

John Stead of 593 Ninth Avenue, a clerk in the office of the Adams Express Company, was caught on Friday in the act of stealing a necklace of sixty-two diamonds from a package which was to have been delivered at Rochester. He was arraigned in the Centre Street Police Court yesterday morning, and held for trial in $2,000 bail.

The express company had been losing valuables intrusted to its care for some time. Suspicion was finally attached to Stead and a watch set on him.

UPSETS R. PORTERFIELD'S WILL.

Justice Marean Declares Trusts Established Are Invalid.

Justice Marean, in the Supreme Court, Brooklyn, has declared invalid the will of Robert Porterfield, so far as the trusts established by the instrument are concerned. Mr. Porterfield was the senior member of the real estate firm of Porterfield & Conklin of Brooklyn. He died on Aug. 29 last, leaving an estate valued at $650,000.

Mrs. Mary A. Mott, a daughter of the testator, brought proceedings in the Supreme Court to construe her father's will, claiming that there were trusts established by the instrument which were in violation of the State law. Justice Marean decides that the trusts were for a longer porid than two lives in being at the time of the testator's death and therefore are invalid.

Became Hysterical in the Street.

Mrs. Lizzie Rowe of 417 West Thirty-fifth Street became hysterical yesterday after leaving a Second Avenue car at Thirty-fourth Street to transfer westward. She fell unconscious to the street, and was taken to Bellevue.

APARTMENT HOUSES IN DEMAND

Latest Sales by Brokers—Auctioneers Preparing for Spring Business — Only Foreclosures for This Week.

Sales in greater variety, many of them involving good-sized amounts, have contributed to the market's steady improvement during the week and strengthened the belief that there is an active Spring season ahead. The purchase of the southwest corner of Broadway and White Street, a ten-story building, by James B. Haggin, brings the city's main thoroughfare to the front again and in a most gratifying way. Six months ago Mr. Haggin bought a similar building at Broadway and Broome Street, and another purchase by him in the same class of property shows conclusively his satisfaction with his original investment and a confidence in future values. Other Broadway deals, notably one involving a part of Well & Mayer's holdings, just north of Prince Street, still lack confirmation, from the invested parties, but even disregarding these the creditable showing of the rest of the week's business is not affected.

The decision of the Union Club to take the Fifth Avenue and Fifty-first Street corner of the Orphan Asylum block was in many respects the most significant item in the week's doings, but not because, as has been stated, the purchase of the block by the syndicate depended upon it. In this connection it may be said that there are still those who take a skeptical view of the sale to the syndicate and refer to the fact that contracts have not been signed as indicating a second collapse of the negotiations. There is nothing to warrant such a view. Every detail of the transaction has been agreed upon, and it is a matter of small moment whether the formal signing of documents takes place within two days or two weeks. A speedy completion of the deal will be welcome, however, and will afford an opportunity to learn additional facts in regard to the resale of parts of the block, negotiations for which in several instances are well under way.

The new elevator apartment houses continue to be the most attractive commodity in the market as shown in the sales of those at the northeast corner of Broadway and Ninety-sixth Street, the southwest corner of Broadway and One Hundred and Second Street, and at the southeast corner of St. Nicholas Avenue and One Hundred and Twentieth Street. The lots on Seventy-seventh Street, near Columbus Avenue, given in trade for the Broadway and One Hundred and Second Street property, were put in on a basis equivalent to a cash value of $50,000 a lot, which it is believed is a high record for the street.

The only other lot sale of importance reported was that of the Archer estate's holdings at the northeast corner of Manhattan Avenue and One Hundred and Seventh Street. The ready market for the high-class dwellings being erected on the old Columbia College site again showed itself in the purchase of the one at the southeast corner of Madison Avenue and Fiftieth Street by James Taylor.

The old factory property at 516 to 528 West Thirty-fifth Street was involved in a deal which will lead to its refitting and operation, while on East Thirty-third Street, near Third Avenue, a 155-foot frontage was sold to a publishing house and will, according to the broker in the deal, soon be the site of new buildings.

Latest Sales by Brokers.

F. Vietor & Achelis have bought from the Sternberger estate the old buildings at the southeast corner of Mercer and Spring Streets, on a plot 61 by 100, on which the buyers will erect a ten-story building for their own occupancy.

P. S. Treacy has sold for the Countess Naselli, as guardian, the four-story brown-stone-front dwelling 147 West Sixty-first Street.

Horace S. Ely & Co. have sold for the Rogers estate 36 and 38 Cherry Street, 50 by 237, with an "L" 23.8 by 70, fronting at 81 Roosevelt Street, old buildings, formerly known as Gotham Court. The buyer is a builder who will erect modern tenements on the lots.

M. Feeney has sold to J. Freedman the three-story brownstone-front dwelling, 329 East One Hundred and Sixteenth Street.

Alexander Roux has rented two lofts in the building 34 Union Square to the Doubleday & McClure Company.

Robert E. Simon, who has been connected with L. J. Phillips & Co. for a number of years, will become a member of that firm on Jan. 1.

The Auction Room.

Another week of foreclosures remains, but the auction business of 1899 has virtually been consigned to history, and the auctioneers are now turning their attention to the first three or four months of the new year, which usually make up the season in the salesroom and during which fully one-half, if not a larger proportion, of the year's business is done.

Few announcements have yet been made, but it is a little early perhaps to foreshadow a dearth of offerings. Another Eno sale is among the probabilities, and arrangements are now being made for an offering by another estate which will include several down-town parcels of a total value well over $1,000,000. The estate of George E. Whitfield will dispose of its holdings—about twenty desirable parcels in various sections of Manhattan and the Bronx—through Auctioneer William Kennelly, on Jan. 10.

Complaint about the condition of the auction market during the Fall is general among the auctioneers. Results have not, it is true, been of the sort to make owners eager to put their property under the hammer, but any discussion of the situation is very apt to result in reasoning in a circle, for while the auctioneers point to the discouraging results—it can also be said that few properties have been offered that have been of a fair quality to test the market. That the real estate salesroom is not a junk shop has been frequently and conclusively shown, and any effort to make it one is almost sure to prove disastrous. Of course, it is anybody's privilege to make the effort, but it is not reasonable to group a series of these attempts to get a high figure for second-rate properties and point to them as showing that the auction market has gone to pieces.

There were recorded last week 349 mortgages, for $4,318,847, of which 111, for $1,555,994, were at 5 per cent.; 160, for $1,219,035, were at more, and 78, for $1,543,818, were at less. In the corresponding week last year 303 mortgages, for $3,826,761, of which 95, for $1,433,135, were at 5 per cent.; 138, for $848,526, were at more, and 70, for $1,545,100, were at less.

THIBETAN EXPLORER HERE

A. Henry Savage Landor Comes to the United States to Lecture.

HIS THRILLING EXPERIENCES

Taken Captive and Tortured by the Fanatics, His Life Is Saved by a British Official.

A dapper little man in dark clothes with a rakish Fedora hat was one of the first to step down the gang plank when the St. Paul was warped into her berth at the American Line pier yesterday. He was A. Henry Savage Landor, author, traveler, and lecturer, whose experiences in Thibet have been of a hair-raising character. Only thirty-three years old, Mr. Landor, soon after entering his teens, manifested a longing for travel and adventure. He found enough of the latter, and while he underwent torture his appearance does not warrant the "before and after taking" pictures printed in some newspapers.

"I am glad to be in New York," said Mr. Landor. "We had a most pleasant journey. I have always had a love for travel, and when only fifteen years old I spent five months with the hairy Ainus in the Kurile Islands of Kamscatka. They are a remarkable people. Their bodies are covered with long hair, more so with the male than the female. Their arms are of extraordinary length. They are not ill-looking, but the women make themselves somewhat hideous by tattooing their faces. They live almost entirely on fish.

"I left New York in 1887, and since then have traversed nearly all of the globe. I have been in Japan, China, Kamschatka, the Kurile Islands, Mongolia, Australia, India, Nepal, Thibet, Northern Africa, and naturally in Europe. I never visited South Africa, so I can tell you nothing of that now important part of the world. I always traveled in a party in which I was the only Anglo-Saxon.

"It was in Thibet that I encountered most serious obstacles, and underwent the most horrible tortures conceivable. Up to this time no foreign power has made an attempt to open up Thibet. Even Russia exercises no influence there. The people there are religious fanatics, and are absolutely dominated by the lamas or priests. The Thibetans consider their territory sacred, and regard the coming of a foreigner as heretical, and something that must be prevented at all costs. I reached Thibet in the early Spring of 1897, and had with me a party of thirty Hindoos and frontier tribesmen. We explored the country very thoroughly, and I succeeded in discovering both sources of the great Brahmaputra River in the Province of Lassa, in the centre of Thibet. To one of these I gave the name of the Landor source. I also broke the record in mountaineering, ascending 23,490 feet on Lumpa Mountain, in Nepal.

"The Thibetans soon learned of our presence in their country, and parties started in search of us. We had many narrow escapes, and while several of my assistants were killed, others deserted me, and on Aug. 15, 1897, I found myself at Toxem with only two Hindoos in my party. We were captured and first savagely beaten with clubs, and then separated. I was manacled hand and foot and seated in a spiked saddle on the back of a wild Arabian horse, which by goading was forced to buck savagely. At every movement of the animal the spikes entered my body to the delight of my merciless captors. As the result of this treatment, I was paralyzed for about a year and a half.

"Next, while bound hand and foot, hot irons were placed in front of my eyes, and so closely that it was a miracle I did not lose my sight. Even now my left eye gives me a great deal of trouble.

"Next, chains were fastened about my body, and these were made the connecting link in a tug-of-war. Then I underwent the final test—the ordeal of the scimitar. In this piece of fiendish cruelty the swordsman endeavors to see by a sweep of his weapon how near he can come to cutting off the victim's head without touching the skin. The Oriental in my case barely scratched me in the neck. Fully expecting to be killed, I determined to die game, and I think that it was due to my presence of mind that my life was then spared. But my ill-treatment was not at an end.

"With my only surviving servant, I was then taken to Taklakot, where I was kept in chains for twenty-five days. At night our feet were also manacled to prevent any possibility of escape. While our guards slept in tents, we lay on the open, snow-clad ground. For days at a time we had neither food nor water, and about our only sustenance was a little substance like bread and tea, seasoned with salt and butter. At the end of the twenty-fifth day our chains were taken off, but a close watch was kept.

"In some way, through frontier tribesmen, J. Larkin, the British Deputy Collector at Almorra, in Northwestern India, heard of my predicament, and a relief expedition was at once formed. In the party was the Rev. Harkua Wilson, American Methodist Episcopal missionary at Bhot. They came to Taklakot and demanded our release. While negotiations were progressing the attempt was unsuccessfully made to take me in another direction, and, this failing, I was sentenced to be beheaded. But the firmness of Collector Larkin saved me. On Oct. 12, 1897, I was released, proceeding to Almora, and thence to England.

"I was again in Thibet last Summer, but had no serious trouble. While in captivity at Taklakot I once broke away from my guards, but was speedily recaptured and cruelly beaten. On several occasions I used my blood for ink to make cipher memoranda on my linen. I shall make arrangements for a lecturing tour of the United States, beginning about the middle of next month. My plans are still in a crude state. Just now my health is very good."

Mr. Landor is a grandson of Walter Savage Landor, poet and critic. He has no great means. His father is an Englishman, his mother Italian. He owns a large farm in Italy, where he grows grapes and olives principally, and realizes a fair sum from the manufacture of wine and oil.

INSPECTOR MURRAY SHOCKED.

Alleged Infernal Machine's Disclosure —Christmas at Fire Headquarters.

Inspector of Combustibles George E. Murray yesterday received a double shock that he will not soon forget. When he reached his office at Fire Headquarters he found a mysterious package on his desk addressed to him. It was apparently a cigar box, but this is the kind frequently used for the storage of infernal machines. The Inspector felt it, weighed it, and then proceeded with the usual precautions to open the package, which on the outside had the name of a prominent dynamite manufacturing concern. Slowly the Inspector removed the paper cover. There were three holes in the box, and Mr. Murray felt sure it was an infernal machine. The cover of the box was unfastened, and at the same moment the cover went up without assistance from the outside, and the Inspector and his assistants prepared to make a hasty exit.

In another moment an alligator about ten inches long scrambled out of the box. It was a joke on the Inspector, and a prominent police official just back from Florida was responsible for it.

When the alligator was put back into the alleged infernal machine the employes of the Bureau of Combustibles gathered in the rooms and surrounded Inspector Murray and Chief Clerk James Carroll. One of them handed to Inspector Murray a diamond ring and to Clerk Carroll a gold watch as tokens of regard.

The Hungarian Peasant Ball.

Elaborate preparations are being made for the Hungarian Peasant Ball to be given at the Madison Square Garden on New Year's Eve, in aid of the charity fund of the Hungarian Literary Society. A corps of 100 coryphees several days ago started rehearsals of the old Hungarian dances, which are to be given, and it is expected that a performance of its kind never before equaled in this country will result. Among the dances being rehearsed is the "Magyar Kor," which has just been introduced at the German Court by order of Emperor William, who sent to the Hungarian capital for an instructor in it.

Bookmaker's Losses Drove Him Crazy.

Heavy losses in the bookmaking ring on the Western tracks during the Fall caused the mind of Robert B. McVehny, a bookmaker, to become deranged, and he was declared insane in Bellevue Hospital yesterday. McVehny was brought here from Chicago on Wednesday. He is now in Bloomingdale Asylum.

A MYSTERIOUS PRISONER.

Man Said to Have Been Arrested by Capt. McClusky and Locked Up.

Detective Reidy of the Central Office took a mysterious prisoner to Police Headquarters late last night. The man was young and well-dressed, and it was said he had been arrested at Forty-fifth Street and Broadway, and at the order of Capt. McClusky.

It was also said that Capt. McClusky himself arrested the man and sent him to Headquarters by Reidy. The man was believed to have come from New Jersey. All information about him was refused at Headquarters.

TYPHOID FEVER AT CAPE NOME.

Fifteen Hundred Cases Said to Exist Among the Miners.

MINNEAPOLIS, Dec. 23.—A special from Deadwood, S. D., says:

John Leedy, who has just returned from Cape Nome, states there were 1,500 cases of typhoid fever there when he left. He met a number of men returning from the Siberian gold fields, which are only about forty miles from Cape Nome.

A number of Cape Nome miners were planning to go into the new district as soon as they could get permits from the Russian Government.

TROUBLE AHEAD IN GUATEMALA

It Is Thought in San Francisco that a Revolution Exists.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 23.—The Post publishes the following:

"Local Guatemalans are somewhat uneasy over a message received to-day which suggests the probable existence of a state of revolution. The dispatch was received by a local firm from a prominent resident of the City of Guatemala, asking the former to call on the Pacific Mail agents, and, if possible, have several passengers on board the last steamer which left here taken off at San Benito instead of their original destination, the City of Guatemala.

"The dispatch ends with the statement that there is 'serious trouble ahead.'

"The last steamer for Guatemalan ports left here on the 18th inst. San Benito is the last port in Mexico the steamer touches before reaching Ocos, Guatemala."

IMMIGRATION LAW IS VIOLATED.

Commissioner Powderly Is Looking for Evidence Against Offenders.

PITTSBURG, Dec. 23.—Terence V. Powderly, Commissioner of Immigration, was in Pittsburg to-day, and held a consultation with Immigrant Inspector Robert D. Lawton of this district on business connected with the department.

Mr. Powderly said that the contract labor law is being violated, and the Inspectors all over the country are looking for evidence against the violators. He says that an unusually large number of foreigners who arrive in New York had railroad tickets for Pittsburg. The number of immigrants, Mr. Powderly says, is greater than at any time since 1885.

Mr. Powderly has kept a record of foreigners who have come to this country during the first give months of the present fiscal year, and it shows an increase of 41,353 over the same period last year.

MILLER'S FURNITURE REMOVED.

Fixtures of the Franklin Syndicate Taken to Vernon Avenue Station.

In the two-story and basement frame building at 144 Floyd Street, Brooklyn, where the Franklin Syndicate, with its fugitive financier, William F. Miller, did such a rushing business until the collapse came last month, there is no longer any office furniture or other things to denote what had been carried on in the premises. All of the fixtures have been removed to the Vernon Avenue Police Station. The moving was begun on Friday afternoon and completed yesterday morning.

A large crowd of people, among them some of Miller's dupes, witnessed the removal of the property. Desks were first carried out, then other office furniture, and lastly the carpets. When the things were received at the station they were sorted. The best pieces were placed in the detectives' room and the balance in the cellar.

ELLEN C. HOWARTH DEAD.

Authoress of the "Wind Harp" Passes Away in Trenton.

TRENTON, N. J., Dec. 23.—Ellen Clementine Howarth, the poetess who wrote the "Wind Harp" and other pieces, died here to-night, in her seventy-third year. Mrs. Howarth had not written much for years and lived in humble circumstances in this city. On her last birthday, May 21, she was visited by Mrs. Grover Cleveland and Mr. and Mrs. Richard Watson Gilder.

Mrs. Howarth, a woman in poor circumstances and with no education, thirty-five years ago suddenly began to write verses full of patriotism and fire. They were printed in the Trenton newspapers over the signature "Clementine," and then found their way into the magazines. Mr. Gilder was impressed with her work, and helped to find a market for it.

Mrs. Howarth said her poems came to her by inspiration while she worked about the house sweeping or at the washtub. She did not write them down at first, but kneaded them into shape in her brain, and did not take up her pen until she was thoroughly satisfied with them. She began her output of verse without any preliminary study or training and after a period of great activity it suddenly ceased.

PUBLIC SCHOOL NO. 112 CLOSED.

City Inspectors Have Declared It Unsafe—Recommended Improvements.

Public School No. 112, at Eighteenth Avenue and Sixty-seventh Street, Brooklyn, has been closed because it has been found that the conditions of the building violate both the Fire and Building Departments' regulations. The school, a two-story and attic frame structure, was built originally for use as a hotel. It was never used as such, however, and last Summer it was rented by the Board of Education and fitted up as a school.

Last September it was opened up as No. 112, and has had an average daily attendance of 200 pupils. No fault was found with the building until the first cold snap. Then the owner or his agent ordered heating apparatus for the building, and the Fire Department stepped in. The foreman of the nearest engine company had looked the building over and had decided that there was danger of the building taking fire.

On the morning of Dec. 11 a slight fire occurred at the school, and Deputy Fire Commissioner Tully ordered an inspection of the place by Fire Marshal Brymer. Buildings Commissioner Guilfoyle also detailed Inspector W. H. Helwig of his department to inspect the property.

The Fire Marshal and Inspector Helwig have both reported that the heating arrangements are unsafe; that the exits from the upper class rooms are inadequate and dangerous in case of fire and panic. Both officials recommend improvements, which will probably be made and the school reopened.

Steamer for Service in Cuba.

The small excursion steamer Bay Shore has been bought by the Cuban Land and Steamship Company, and is to be sent tomorrow to Cuba to ply between Nuevitas and Caibarien. She is built of wood, and is 102 feet long, 22 feet beam, and 5 feet depth. The company has also chartered for five months the steel steamer Yarmouth that ran between Yarmouth and Boston. It will make trips between New York and Nuevitas.

Fire in West End Avenue House.

Fire started in some unknown manner in a closet of Mrs. Amelia M. Howard's residence, at 747 West End Avenue, last night. A servant discovered it, and, being unable to extinguish it with buckets of water, called a private watchman, and had him ring a fire alarm. The chemical engine of the department put out the fire after $100 damage was done.

Col. Gardiner Leaves the Waldorf.

News was received at the District Attorney's Office yesterday that the injuries received by Col. Gardiner from a fall in his office on Thursday were so slight as to permit of his removal from the Waldorf-Astoria, where he had been staying, to Garden City. The broken rib from which the District Attorney is suffering is doing well, and it is expected that he will soon be able to be at his office again.

THE ART OF PAPIER MACHE

A Dealer in Theatrical "Props" Talks of His Trade.

SENDS MUMMIES TO EGYPT

Rameses and Other Old Worthies in Paper—Likewise Little Evas and More Familiars.

"Yes," said the little man up town who makes theatrical "Props" and incidentally any number of "props" for other things, "there is nothing like papier maché. It is being used more and more all the time now and there are more and more things for which it can be used. It is the strongest material known for its weight. You see, for anything to use in the theatre you have to have something that is strong and that will stand traveling and being thrown around, and if it is big—columns in the scenery, for instance—it must not only be strong but light, so that it can be moved easily. It must be light anyway. Imagine a band of Amazons traveling around the country with suits of metal armor, or wearing it, either, for that matter. The Amazons would strike, the railroad companies would strike, and the theatrical company would go out of business. There is nothing you can't make of papier maché, from an elephant to a vase. The greatest trouble is to get the models. Sometimes you send out and get small ones of plaster or marble, and at other times you will have to work from sketches and photographs and use your own ingenuity, working on a geometrical scale for enlargement.

"Papier maché is simply layers of paper wet with paste and pressed, one on top of the other, into the mold and left to harden, and when it comes out the different parts are sewn together, the seams covered with paper, and then finished, and the whole covered with a good finish and painted. All the gold that is to go out in the street parades has to be varnished, and it will stand all kinds of weather. There is another kind of material used by architects in interior decorations that is called papier maché, but it is quite different. This is made of white India glue and a little paper pulp. It is brittle, will break easily, and is not the kind used for anything that will require hard service.

"To make papier maché figures, you go to work exactly as you do for a plaster cast. First you do your modeling in clay, then from that you make the mold, and from the mold you can take any number of impressions. Among the most interesting things I ever made was a set of Egyptian mummies, that have now gone to Egypt. It shows that we are enterprising here to make mummies to send to the land of mummies, but that is what we have done. It was when I was in Chicago, at the time of the World's Fair.

"Demetrius Mosconus, an Egyptian dragoman for one of the big tourist companies, a well-known man, by the way, whose son was a General in the army at Khartoum at the time Gordon was killed, had planned to give a representation of the Temple of Luxor at the exposition, and it was to contain ten reproductions of mummies. The mummies were made of plaster, at great expense, in Egypt, but coming over they were broken and had to be replaced. Well, I made the ten mummies, and I can warrant that those mummies were anatomically correct. There is Rameses hanging on the wall now. No, he doesn't look like the mummies one usually thinks of, for he is not in a case, and most of the mummies you see are in cases. There were cases to these, too, covered with inscriptions.

"There was some work in those mummies, I tell you. I was eight miles from the place where the pieces of the first reproductions were stored. They could not be moved, and I had to work from them and from photographs. A mummy is just a skeleton covered with a leather like substance, as you see in the reproduction of Rameses II. The upper part of the body, the head, hands, and feet, show this brown parchment-like skin, and the lower part of the body, the legs and arms, are wrapped in white bandages, just as they are in the originals. Then I put a little hair on Rameses's head, and he was all right. He was the King of Egypt, who caused all the trouble for the children of Israel. Then there was Rameses III., Seti, Hirhor I., who was the father-in-law of King Solomon, and the Princess Nessi-Ta-Neb-Asher, the sister-in-law of King Solomon. The Princess had long hair.

"When Demetrius went back to Egypt he took my ten mummies with him, and as there was no business in Chicago after the fair, I came back to New York again. It was funny that the first thing I should have to do here was to make the 'props' for the Wizard of the Nile, and I put some of the experience I had gained in Chicago into the work. The mummy cases in that play had some of the inscriptions that were on the mummy cases of those old Egyptian Kings, and they traveled around the country for five years.

"The large pieces are not the hardest to do by any means. Sometimes the small ones are a great deal of trouble. Some of the things are made in a good many pieces. There is the Venus de Medici, a life-size figure in thirty-six pieces, and in a skeleton there are 125 pieces. The skeleton is really something of a 'prop,' but not theatrical prop. He goes into societies of various kinds, the Masons, Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias. Most of these societies have skeletons, and they would rather have a made-up one than the genuine article. They're a little scary, I guess.

"The big statue of the Venus would be classed with bric-à-brac for stage 'props.' Denman Thompson has used one for a garden scene, and Agnes Herndon in the stage setting of 'La Pelle Marie.' Those busts of Diana, Mercury, and Voltaire Stuart Robson has used. 'In the sorrows of Satan' all the pillars were of papier maché, and when you see a tree trunk all gnarled on the stage you may know that that part of the tree is made of the same material.

"Some of the things into which it goes largely are not seen around New York, and these are the figures for street shows. In the small towns theatrical companies have these shows, with a band and different things to attract attention and give an idea of the show. I have made twenty nine-foot figures this year and fitted out at least ten shows. There are the cake walkers, two coons, a man and a woman, the heads of the papier, while the eyes of the real man look out through the shirt bosom. There was a tall Uncle Sam for an 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' show, a three-legged man, an old man for a ventriloquist, all sorts of coons, and other things. There are five different companies in Pennsylvania using giant figures for street parades, and I have fitted out five companies with 'Uncle Tom's Cabin' street parades, including little Evas. There are fifteen or twenty companies on the road now with 'Uncle Tom' and they are all making a living; they are doing more with that than with any Shakespeare play you could mention.

"I have made a good many animals—elephants, donkeys, and lions—for variety performers to use in their acts. You have to change nature a little sometimes to make the animals fit the performers who are going to wear them. You can't very well put a short-legged man into a long-legged elephant. However, almost any man can wear almost any elephant, but when one is made for a particular man you have to measure him for it. It is the head of the elephants or other animals that are made of the papier maché. I have a two-man elephant in Germany now, one that was shipped to London for some English performers. A bull for a burlesque bull-fight in a circus has a genuine bull's hair and horns.

"There are all sorts of musical instruments that are made in papier maché, as well as armor, and I have made cannon in white for sculpture tableau for the circus. This big Cupid in bas relief will go on a circus wagon in gold. All that brilliant relief work is papier maché and it stands the weather, there is no extra weight on the wagons, and it does not break. The work for circus wagons does not begin until the first of January, though I had some orders last year before Christmas.

"Busts of actors and actresses for windows have come up again recently. That has been done before. Janauschek used to have the paper busts made for shop windows, and Fritz Emmet has had them. The only trouble with them is that they are rather expensive. There must be a well modeled portrait bust of plaster made first. It would not pay to make less than seventy-five or eighty busts at a time, and that would cost several thousands of dollars.

"Daly used to have a good way of examining his 'props.' He would never look at them in producing a new play until the dress rehearsal, and then he would see them from the front, the view the audience would have, and know the real effect it would produce. If there was anything he did not like then he would simply order it off the stage. If he didn't say anything you knew things were all right. Most managers, however, like to take things and look them over beforehand."

TURQUOISES FROM RUINS

Valuable Collection Acquired by the American Museum.

ANCIENT TALES OF TREASURES

Indian Ideas of Gems—Probable Significance of Some of the New Specimens and Their Value.

The exhibits of the American Museum of Natural History will soon be enriched by a fine collection of turquois objects obtained from the ancient ruins of New Mexico. The collection was brought in a few weeks ago, and contains many objects which are unique and of great scientific value, aside from their intrinsic worth. A paper describing them will be read at New Haven this week.

Turquois is essentially the American gem, not only in the sense that it is most highly valued by all the Indian tribes, as it has always been by their ancestors, even long before the days of Columbus, but also because within the past few years the American product has practically driven out of the market the Persian and other imported stones. An examination of the gems offered for sale by one of the leading jewelers on Union Square the other day, showed ten American stones to every one that came from other countries, and demonstrated, moreover, that the home product is superior in every way to the imported, especially in that peculiar blue color, which, like the "pigeon's blood red" of the ruby, gives the gem its value.

Most of the specimens in the museum collection are off color, and of little value from the jeweler's standpoint. This is almost always the case with examples obtained from the Indians or from Indian sources, although now and then really fine gems can be picked up. The Indian makes no distinction; he places as high a value on a stone of sea-green color as on one which is of the true "robin's egg blue," his only measure being the size of the gem, and its freedom from flaws. If, however, the stone is fashioned into a rude resemblance to some object, having a religious significance its value is increased manyfold.

INDIAN IDEAS OF THE GEMS.

Although no definite conclusions have yet been reached by archeologists on the question, the trend of opinion seems to be that the high value attached to turquois by the aborigines of America, and especially by the tribes in the southwestern part of what is now the United States, is directly connected with the idea of water. This hypothesis is materially strengthened by the recent finds, for among the specimens there are two little images of tadpoles, made of solid turquoises, and several unmistakable frogs, also carved of the solid stone. Tadpoles and frogs are the most sacred symbols in the religion of the Pueblo Indians of New Mexico and Arizona. Images of frogs, formed of black pitch, inlaid or incrusted with flakes of turquois, have been found before, but specimens formed of the solid stone are unique, as are also the tadpoles.

In the regions of the tribes which live in the arid regions of the Southwest, the one central idea is water, or the lack of it. Many of the most important ceremonials are more or less directly connected with this idea, and, like all savage ceremonials, certain paraphernalia are necessary to the proper performance of the sacred rites. The possession of a water fetich, for example such as a turquois tadpole might be, would give a medicine man a very high standing among his fellows, and the object would be considered almost priceless. It is doubtless for this reason that such examples are found only in the old ruins, any of them that are in use to-day would be carefully concealed and sedulously guarded from profane eyes.

Ordinary specimens, however, consisting of little tablets and bits of turquois, can be seen by the thousand. Few of the Indians of the Southwest are so poor that they cannot own a specimen or two, and some of them have whole necklaces of the precious stones, or of shell beads interspersed with turquois. In one sense they are the equivalent of money, for they can be converted readily into whatever money will buy for the Indians, and small pieces pass from hand to hand much the same as silver ornaments or silver coin. The demand is apparently unlimited, while the supply is comparatively small.

ANCIENT WEALTH IN TURQUOIS.

The discovery and conquest of what is now New Mexico and Arizona was brought about directly by vague stories of the wealth of that region in turquois which reached to the City of Mexico. In 1539 the Franciscan friar, Marcos de Niza, was sent out by the then Viceroy of Mexico to investigate these tales. On foot and with only one attendant the intrepid priest pushed on for over a thousand miles into the unknown north, where no European had ever been, penetrating as far as the present Indian village of Buni, in Northern New Mexico.

His companion lost his life there, but the friar returned safely to Mexico, where he reported that all the chief men of the Indians wore an abundance of turquois and jewels, and that even the lintels of the doorways in the houses were incrusted with the precious blue stones. An expedition was sent out during the following year which brought the whole country under the Spanish crown, but the great wealth which the friar reported was nowhere found.

"Curses loud and deep," says the old Spanish chronicler of the expedition, "fell upon the devoted head of the monk," and for over three centuries he has been held up as "the greatest liar of Christendom."

Within the past decade the memory of the monk has been cleared of the burden which has rested upon it for so long, and his narrative of the expedition is now generally accepted as true, if proper regard is had to the times and the conditions under which he wrote. Every year, as research progresses, further corroboration is given to his statements, and excavations in the old ruins show that in ancient times, as well as now, an immense amount of turquois, in the aggregate, was in use by the people who lived in that region. The museum collection contains many objects of wood, incrusted with gems, such as he mentioned, and numerous examples of that work are extant in other institutions.

WHERE THE TURQUOIS WAS FOUND.

Turquois has been found at several places in New Mexico and Arizona, but there is no doubt that the bulk of the supply in ancient times as well as most of that obtained to-day came from the turquois mines at Los Cerrillos, in New Mexico. These mines have been worked from time immemorial, although by exceedingly crude methods. They are practically nothing but a huge pit in the ground, from which thousands of tons of turquois bearing rock have been removed, while the supply is practically inexhaustible. It was rumored some time ago that the ownership of the mines had been acquired by a prominent firm of New York jewelers, but this has been denied by a member of the firm, a well-known expert in gems, who said that, owing to the way in which the turquois occurred, it was impossible to work the mines on a commercial basis. They are free to any one who wants them.

Indian methods of mining are largely responsible for the poor quality of the gems obtained. The turquois occurs in thin streaks and flakes, imbedded in the solid rock, to which it is so closely cemented that the two form practically one material. A man might take out ten tons of rock without securing a gem the size of a hazel nut, and, on the other hand, he might find a large piece in half an hour's work. The Indian manner of getting out the rock is to build a large fire on a projecting edge and then to throw water on the heated stone. The sudden chill cracks off large masses, which are then broken up by pounding with other stones. The color of turquois, however, is not fixed like that of some of the other gems, and the peculiar tint of blue which jewelers demand is easily lost. It is almost invariably destroyed by the heat used in the Indian method; hence the green color of most of the specimens in the possession of the natives. Another thing which has the same result is that the Indians wear the stones on their naked bodies, and the gems are turned green by perspiration. Jewelers have means of restoring the color if the change has not progressed too far, but these, of course, are unknown to the Indians, who, moreover, are indifferent to minor changes of color, if, indeed, they are able to distinguish them.

ANCIENT AZTEC WORK.

Some magnificent examples of ancient Aztec work in turquois have been found in Mexico, and are now in European museums. In one example a large part of a human skull was covered with flakes of this and other gems, arranged in bands, the whole giving the effect of an Indian's face when decorated with war paint. Some of the great idols were ornamented in the same manner, and with pieces of solid turquois set into the stone of which they were carved. One of the most interesting problems now before archaeologists is the extent to which the aboriginal jeweler's art, if it may be so termed, has been transferred from one tribe to another and from nation to nation.

Copper implements, presumed to have come from the northern part of the United States, have been found in the South, and even in Mexico; pipes of the peculiar red stone known as catlinite, which is found only in one locality in Minnesota, have been collected from places more than a thousand miles from there, and there is no doubt that extensive barter went on between the Indian tribes long before the discovery of America.

With the exchange of material objects there was also an exchange of ideas, but on the other hand there must be considered the well-known trait of the human mind to work along similar lines under similar conditions. No one now doubts that many of the most important advances achieved by mankind have been attained independently by peoples widely separated and between whom there could be no possible connection. Just how far the art of a people has been modified by contact with other nations, and how much of it is original, is the problem which it is necessary to solve to understand human progress in its early stages.

One aspect of the broad question, in so far as it relates to the use of turquoise, has been taken up by members of the staff of the American Museum, and it is believed that the collection recently acquired will throw some light on the problem. Just who the Aztecs were is yet to be determined, and although it is known that they were intruders in Mexico, supplanting an older people there, whence they came is still a mystery. It is generally held that they came from the north, the distance being variously given at from a few hundred miles to over 5,000.

The museum specimens of turquois were secured from the Chaco ruins, in the northwestern part of New Mexico, on the possible route of the Aztecs in their southward migration, and if a similarity in the use of turquois is established, there would be a fair presumption that the people who lived in the villages now in ruins, concerning whom practically nothing is known, may have been a remnant of the Aztec tribe left behind when the wave swept on to Mexico.

COL. A. H. LEE, R. A., MARRIED

He Quietly Weds Miss Ruth Moore at All Souls' Church.

Lieut Col. Arthur H. Lee, R. A., Military Attaché at the British Embassy at Washington, D. C., was married in this city yesterday to Ruth Moore, daughter of the late John Godfrey Moore. The ceremony was performed at All Souls' Church by the pastor, the Rev. Dr. R. Heber Newton, only the mother and sister of the bride being present.

Col. Lee has been a prominent figure in Washington for a long time.

SEVENTH REGIMENT SHOOT.

Handicap and Three Prize Matches Competed for in Fair Scores.

Two matches, the handicap and three prize, were shot last night at the Seventh Regiment Armory rifle ranges. Sixteen contestants were entered in the former and seventeen in the latter. In the handicap match the contestants are grouped in five classes. The first, which includes experts and sharpshooters who have made a score of 68 or better, is handicapped 6 points; the second class, made up of sharpshooters who have never equaled a score of 68, is handicapped 4 points; the third class, those who have made 62 and not more than 64, concedes 2 points, and the fourth, those who have made 60 or 61, 1 point. The fifth class includes all others. Seven shots are fired standing at 200 yards and seven prone at 500 yards. The five prizes were awarded as follows:

	200 Yds.	500 Yds.	Hdcp.	Total.
Private B. H. Welsker, Co. E	31	35	2	64
Corp. A. V. Stout, Co. K.	33	34	4	63

The next match will occur Saturday night.

LEXINGTON A. C. TOURNAMENT.

The Bouts at the Broadway Club Were Warmly Contested.

The final bouts in the amateur boxing tournament of the Lexington Athletic Club were warmly contested last night, at the Broadway Athletic Club. Murphy and Diamond, who met in the last event, put up the best bout of the night. Both boys are in the 115-pound class, and fought from the sound of the gong to the finish.

Murphy landed on Diamond's face in the first round and dazed him. The rest of the fight was even, and the judges disagreed at the end of the third round. Murphy had the best of the extra round, and the decision was awarded to him. Summaries:

105-Pound Class.—First Bout—W. Cullen, Union Settlement A. C., defeated J. Stone, Avonia A. C. Second Bout—C. Hand, New York City, defeated J. Brown, New West Side A. C. Third Bout—C. Hand, New York City, defeated J. Fuchs, Tipper A. C. Final Bout—W. Cullen, Union Settlement A. C., defeated C. Hand, New York City.

RACES FOR AMATEUR SWIMMERS.

Water Polo and Short-Distance Championship Planned in Boston.

BOSTON, Dec. 23.—The water polo championship contest of the A. A. U. will be held in Mechanics' Hall this city during the Sportsmen's Show, which opens Feb. 22. An A. A. U. sanction has been granted not only for the water polo championship, but for championships for indoor swimming at short distances, diving, and relay team racing.

John Graham, athletic manager of the B. A. A., has completed his programme of events for the swimming championships. The races will be at the following distances: Sixty yards, 80 yards, 100 yards, 120 yards, 160 yards, and 200 yards. The tank is twenty yards in length. There are no A. A. U. rules governing diving competitions, so that Manager Graham will arrange his diving events according to the practices in vogue among the best-regulated swimming clubs.

The programme will name six different styles of diving. The man making the most points will be declared the winner. The relay team race championships will be open to club and college teams of four men. The distance will be 320 yards, or four lengths of the tank for each relay swimmer.

A. A. U. rules will govern all competitions at the show, and no team or individuals will be allowed to contest unless registered by that body.

LIPTON'S PLANS FOR 1901.

Sir Thomas Confident that His Next Boat Will Excel Shamrock.

LONDON, Dec. 25.—Sir Thomas Lipton's plans for 1901 are progressing. He is confident that his next boat will be much faster than the Shamrock. He said to-day:

"I feel I will have a better chance next time, as I will have the Shamrock as a trial horse. As you know, I had to work completely in the dark with the Shamrock, and I know she can be greatly improved, as far as speed is concerned. With her designer ill, the best was not to be got out of her."

IN THE BOWLING ALLEYS.

The Bank of the Republic team bowled two scores of over 800 in the Bank Clerks' League, at Reid's alleys last night, and won two games. The first team of the Chase National was beaten in two games. Scores:

RECORDS OF THE BOWLERS.

The work of the clubs in the various tournaments during the week was productive of good scores and a number of close contests. The Corinthians, although they suffered a defeat in the American National, still retain the lead. In the Harlem League the Knickerbockers appear to have a winning lead. There is an interesting fight for first place in the Columbia League, the Orientals having a slight advantage.

The position of the leading club in the National and Arlington Leagues remains the same as last week. In the Royal Arcanum League New York Council is in the lead, but only one game ahead of Our Council. The Fidelity and Casualty Company lead with a clean score in the Life Insurance League. The records of the clubs in the various tournaments follow:

GERMANY'S NAVAL NEEDS

The Kaiser Again Tells the Reichstag of His Plans.

BUDGET DISCUSSION STOPPED

Stores Must Be Closed at 9 o'Clock P. M. — Severe Winter Weather Blocks Berlin Traffic.

Foreign Correspondence NEW YORK TIMES.

BERLIN, Dec. 12.—The unwonted procedure adopted yesterday by the Government in interrupting the examination of the budget to acquaint the Reichstag with the Emperor's naval programme caused a good deal of surprise. No bill has been laid before the House, nor has the Bundesrath yet been called upon to consider the Emperor's plan, and it was therefore expected that the Government would await a question from the body of the House before adducing its arguments on behalf of an increased army. Dr. Lieber qualified the Ministerial procedure as extraordinary and unprecedented, and this opinion is echoed in the press. Sticklers for Constitutional usage consider that by its authoritative declarations to the Reichstag on a naval programme which the Bundesrath has not yet formally discussed the Imperial Cabinet has overstepped its Constitutional rights. The rebuke is aimed at the Emperor, who is known to have instructed his Ministers in this circumstance.

Count von Bülow's exposition of the political reasons which dictate a doubling of the navy is generally declared to be a masterpiece of Ministerial oratory. The Secretary for Foreign Affairs, while assuring the Reichstag that Germany is on good terms with all nations, endeavored to convince his hearers that a stronger navy is necessary to safeguard Germany's position in view of possible ulterior developments in international politics. Germany is neither agressive nor covetous, but she needs a stronger navy, so that other nations may not be tempted to "tread on her toes" at some future time, either politically or commercially. Count von Bülow developed this theory with consummate skill, and received a respectful hearing.

But when Admiral Tirpitz rose to explain to the Reichstag that he had erred in his previous calculations regarding the naval requirements of the nation, a distinct titter passed through the House, and it became an audible laugh as Baron von Thielmann urged that the expense of the new ships can be borne without recourse to an increase of taxation. Both Ministers were evidently ill at ease, and hurried through their arguments.

THE BUDGET FOR 1900.

The budget for 1900 amounts to nearly $515,000,000, the exact figures being 2,058,333,551 marks. The recurring expenditure is fixed at 1,783,042,498 marks, being an increase of 107,004,665 marks on the current year; the non-recurring expenditure is estimated at 196,092,642 marks, or an increase of 30,685,500 marks. The supplementary estimates call for 79,198,411 marks, being 32,011,-623 marks less than the 1899 budget.

In the foregoing calculations the gross expenditure is given. The net expenditure amounts only to 986,222,954 marks. The army estimates amount to 450,946,908 marks, the navy costs 121,333,586 marks, interest on the imperial debt 77,686,800 marks, the pensions fund 68,153,354 marks, the Home Office 45,467,315 marks, and the Foreign Office 33,737,367 marks.

Among the receipts are included a balance of 30,700,000 marks, and 76,098,411 marks to be raised by loans for extraordinary expenditure in the army, navy, and railway departments. An increase is expected from nearly all the ordinary sources of receipts. Thus the customs duties are estimated at 473,200,000 marks, the tobacco tax at 12,100,000 marks, sugar tax, 102,-000,000 marks; salt tax, 47,800,000 marks; materials for alcohol, 18,500,000 marks; alcohol, 105,800,000 marks; beer, 30,200,000 marks; stamp taxes, including lotteries, 65,500,000 marks, and Post Office Department, 393,500,000 marks.

While an increase of receipts is anticipated amounting to 100,900,000 marks, the increase of expenditure amounts to 137,700,-000 marks. The deficit of 36,800,000 marks must be provided by a proportionate increase of the quota of expenditure borne by the various States of the confederation.

An examination of the detailed budget of the Foreign Office shows that a second Chancellor is to be employed at the Washington Embassy and a second expert at the New York Consulate General.

The navy estimates mention that the Spanish-American war showed the necessity of having a large stock of ammunition. Eight million marks is demanded for this purpose. The marine forces are fixed at 1,195 officers, 153 medical officers, and 28,204 men. The officials employed on land by the Naval Department number 1,838.

EARLY CLOSING ORDERED.

An important resolution has been taken by the Reichstag in regard to the hours of business for shops. It renders the closing of shops obligatory between the hours of 9 o'clock P. M. and 5 o'clock A. M. The local authorities are empowered to allow tradesmen in a given branch of commerce to keep their shops open two hours longer if two-thirds of the shopkeepers in the branch so desire. At the demand of one-third of the interested shopkeepers, the local authorities must take the vote of the trade regarding the extra two hours. It is noteworthy that all parties in the Reichstag declared themselves in favor of the early closing, most of the speakers advocating closing at 8 o'clock. A minority of the Reichstag considered the matter one to be left to private initiative, and on this ground only opposed the compulsory closing. It remains to be seen how far the advantages of the measure to shop assistants will compensate the inconvenience resulting from the measure to the purchasing public and to small shopkeepers who employ no hired assistants.

In 1891 the compulsory closing of shops on Sundays during certain hours was ordained, and in economic circles the resolution now taken is regarded as a complement of that law. At present many shops remain open fourteen, fifteen, and sixteen hours daily, and the assistants and apprentices, even youths and girls of fifteen years of age, are required to be present during this lapse of time.

There is, however, another side of the question, which was brought out by Baron von Stumm and Dr. Paschnicke during the debate. It is that in 60 per cent. of the shops of Germany no hired help is employed, and 147,000 of them are kept by women and widows. These small shops rely for patronage chiefly on working people, many of whom are themselves employed until late at night, and consequently make their purchases late. The opponents of the 9 o'clock closing resolution therefore urge that the measure is an interference with the small shopkeepers' right to work, and also a limitation on the just rights of the purchasing public.

BERLIN SNOWBOUND.

Berlin has been practically exempt from real wintry weather during the past two years, and was taken by surprise yesterday when an incessant downfall of snow and sleet transformed the appearance of the city and caused the greatest interruption of traffic that can be remembered. A complete breakdown occurred in the electric-car system, and from 5 o'clock in the afternoon lines of cars numbering from thirty to forty-eight were to be seen standing abandoned in the main thoroughfares. The heavy accumulator cars, a large number of which are of American manufacture, proved most helpless, their power being absolutely inadequate to overcome the resistance on the rails caused by the freezing snow. On lines where overhead cable cars are in use the central stations turned on double power, which, in many cases, but not all, enabled the cars to make headway.

There is a good deal of grumbling in this morning's papers at the lack of foresight of the management of the car companies, though it is difficult to imagine in what manner the companies could have prevented the block, excepting by refusing to run their cars.

The old-fashioned horse omnibuses, so despised by the Berliners since the electric cars were introduced, managed to pull through the snow with the help of extra horses, a fact which furnished Berlin popular wit with material for jokes at the expense of the electric-car system. In the evening sleighs were seen on the streets for the first time in many years, and the merry jingling of their bells somewhat lessened the Berliner's feeling of wretchedness as he tramped along in the snow.

BOOKS THE STUDENTS READ.

Hermann Kantorowicz has been examining the registers of the Academic Library to ascertain what are the favorite authors of Berlin students. His chief discovery is that very few students read at all, for out of 5,000 only 335 avail themselves of the privileges of the library. The reason is not hard to find. In his first terms the Berlin student is disposed to prefer the kneipe and other amusements to reading, and in the latter terms he has to devote all his leisure to his studies in order to make up for the time lost earlier.

Of the comparatively few students who do use the library a large percentage prefer modern authors. Works by "old" writers are demanded only 1.7 times as against 8.2 times for the writings of "new" authors. Gerhard Hauptmann is most in request; Hermann Sudermann follows him closely, and then come Max Halbe and Maeterlinck. Zola and Ibsen are also widely read.

Inquiry as to the popularity of Shakespeare, Goethe, Schiller, Lessing, Kleist, and other classics shows that they are held in small favor. Their works were in no case demanded by more than seven students. Of modern lyrical poets Liliencron and Dehmel alone find favor. Standard novelists are much neglected. Heyse and Raabe are forgotten; Freytag's popularity is ebbing; even Reuter is neglected. Spielhagen is still much read, as are Dahn and Ebers, though Sudermann far outdistances all novelists. Of every nine requests for a novel one is for a Sudermann book. Fontane, Tovote, Wolzogen, and Gottfried Keller have numerous readers. The book most often demanded is Marcel Prévost's "Demi Vierges." Nietzche is most in request of the scientific writers.

DR. SIEMENS A NOBLE.

Dr. George Siemens, the Director of the Deutsche Bank, has been created a nobleman of Prussia by the Emperor. The distinction is a reward for Dr. Siemens's services in connection with the Bagdad Railway concession and the financing of the Anatolian Railway. George Siemens's father was the man who lent Werner von Siemens the six thousand thalers with which the now universally known firm of Siemens and Halske was founded in 1847. The newly created nobleman is about sixty years of age and has been at the head of the Deutsche Bank since 1870. Previously he superintended the erection of a considerable portion of the Indian telegraph lines on behalf of his uncle Werner.

J. P.

MAGISTRATE'S PLEA FOR MERCY.

Thinks Dean of Columbia Law School Should Withdraw a Charge.

Prof. William A. Keener, Dean of Columbia Law School, appeared as complainant in the Harlem Police Court yesterday against Frederick J. Park, nineteen years of age, of 213 West One Hundred and Fourth Street, the assistant librarian of the school, and charged him with stealing a law book valued at $2.50. William H. Switzer, twenty-seven years of age, the librarian, of 271 West One Hundred and Fourteenth Street, saw Park take the volume.

Park's father appeared in court and stood on the bridge, sobbing, when the charge was made. He said in asking for mercy for his son that he was a hard-working mechanic. He had saved and stinted himself to give his son an education. He had been graduated from college and was reading law. He only got a small sum as assistant librarian, and not enough to support himself.

Magistrate Crane, who was much affected by the plea, said, turning to Prof. Keener: "This is Christmas time, and it behooves us all to show a little good will and mercy. Now, if I was in your place I should not at this time press the charge. Do not think that I am trying to dissuade you from doing what you think should be done. I will do just as you say."

Prof. Keener said that he would consult his confreres, and the boy was paroled until next Thursday.

GERMANY FRIENDLY NOW.

So Says Robert T. Porter, Just Returned from Abroad.

Robert P. Porter, Federal Commissioner to Cuba and ex-Superintendent of the Federal census, was a passenger on the St. Paul, which arrived yesterday. After greeting the members of his family he proceeded almost immediately to his home, 36 East Sixty-fifth Street. While waiting for his baggage to be inspected by the customs officers, Mr. Porter said to a NEW YORK TIMES reporter:

"I have been abroad in the interest of the American manufacturers and exporters to aid in securing commercial reciprocity.

"Until very recently Americans have been at a decided disadvantage in the export trade. The recent treaty made with France was a great benefit and is working splendidly.

"You see that when you are doing business with another, and you have only a verbal agreement, it is not very difficult for one or the other to break the contract. But when you have something that is signed, sealed, and delivered, it is different. Then you know upon just what terms you are doing business, and can make your plans accordingly. Now, a treaty similar to that made with France is being arranged with Germany, and I am very hopeful of an early ratification. Germany is one of our greatest competitors, and it will be of great importance to come to some sort of a commercial understanding.

"Germany is very friendly with us just now, and an increase in our commercial relations will serve to increase that friendship. American manufacturers and exporters realize the importance of the treaty."

Upon President McKinley's recommendation for free trade between Puerto Rico and the United States, Mr. Porter said:

"The President is right, and a similar policy should be inaugurated with reference to Cuba and the Philippines. There has been a marked change in business conditions. While we were importing iron and steel annually to the amount of $100,000,000, we are now exporting that class of goods for as large or a larger amount. I have made a study of general business elsewhere with relation to its bearing on this country, and everywhere the outlook is most encouraging."

MRS. GORSCH WANTS $50,000.

Sues Hugo Gorsch for Alienating Her Husband's Affections.

Hugo Gorsch, President of the Universal Storage Warehouse and Express Company, 202-208 East Eighty-eighth Street, is defendant in a suit for $50,000 brought by Mrs. Annie T. Gorsch of 167 East One Hundred and Twelfth Street, for the alienation of the affections of her husband, Wilson Gorsch, who is a nephew of the defendant. The case is now on the calendar of the Supreme Court, and it is expected that it will come up for trial next month. Louis J. Grant is attorney for Mrs. Gorsch and Ira B. Wheeler is attorney for Hugo Gorsch.

In her complaint Mrs. Gorsch, whose maiden name was Corrigan, says she became acquainted with Wilson Gorsch in 1894. He was then a clerk in his uncle's warehouse, receiving $15 a week. He asked her on Thanksgiving Day to marry him, but she refused. He persisted and she finally consented. They were married on Dec. 23, 1894, by the Rev. Dr. H. Hebler, at 207 East Eighty-third Street. Her husband before their marriage told her he would inherit a large sum from his uncle.

Mrs. Gorsch, in her affidavit, further swears that she and her husband went to live in a flat at 888 Third Avenue, but that a few days afterward he disappeared. In January she received a letter from him, dated Kingston, in which he stated that he was under guard of several men. She went to Margaretville, where her husband's parents lived, and there met her husband, who told her that owing to their marriage his uncle had discharged him and had put him in charge of two men, who had taken him to Margaretville.

She and her husband returned to live at 888 Third Avenue. One day after their return her husband came home greatly excited. She followed him to a drug store at Fifty-third Street and Third Avenue, where she found him seated at a telephone with a pistol pointed at his head. When he saw her he pointed the pistol at her. The drug clerk took the pistol from him and threw him into the street.

Shortly after this Gorsch again disappeared, and she swears she has not seen him since. She says she had heard he was in the Jefferson Barracks, at Jefferson City, Mo. She alleges that her husband's uncle, by malicious statements reflecting upon her, persuaded him to leave her. An affidavit was presented by Frank Jaeger, in which he says he has learned that young Gorsch is in Texas.

Lawyer Ira B. Wheeler said yesterday that his client, Hugo Gorsch, had nothing to say at present, except to make a general denial of the charge that he had alienated the affections of Wilson Gorsch.

CHICAGO FACES A DEFICIT

Said to be Due to Failure to Tax Big Corporations.

POLITICS WARM IN ILLINOIS

Effort Being Made to Defeat Gov. Tanner for Renomination — Congressional Committees Disappointing.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Dec. 23.—Tax authorities and others here express great indignation at the manner in which the State Board of Equalization has permitted the railways and many of the rich corporations to escape from the tax lists. It is asserted that the loss to Cook County by reason of this alleged dereliction will amount to over $2,500,000. President Upham of the Board of Review says that, inasmuch as these quasi-public corporations did not file schedules in accordance with the law, the Board of Equalization should have assessed their stock at its market value. He holds that, by refusing to schedule, they waived all obligations which might have been regarded as offsets. As it is, such corporations as the Pullman Palace Car Company, the People's Gas Company, the Edison Company, and the street railways escape scot free from payment of any tax whatever on their capital stock, while companies of lesser magnitude are heavily taxed.

Upon these escaping companies the market value of whose stock is $308,000,000, the local Assessors put a total tax assessment of $43,000,000. Thus on a total of $263,000,000 there will be no taxes paid. The tax rate for the year will be about 1 per cent. on the fair cash valuation, showing a loss to the county of about $2,600,000. The approximate valuation of the four concerns which escaped taxation on their capital stock would be, according to present market quotations, as follows:

	Capitalization.	Value Per Share.	Total.
Pullman Company	$54,000,000	187½	$101,250,000
Chi. City Ry. Co.	13,000,000	282½	36,080,000
Edison Company	5,000,000	175	8,750,000
W. Chi. St. Ry. Co.	20,000,000	113	22,600,000

When values went skyward in the local Assessors' offices last Summer it was predicted that even under the reduced tax rate the county would have a surplus after all the bills were paid. County Clerk Knopf takes a very gloomy view of the situation, as do many others. He says that the county will have to face a deficit instead of a surplus, and he does not see where the money is to come from. He roundly denounces the new revenue law, and he ridicules the idea that it accomplishes the purpose for which it was intended.

"It saddles more taxes than ever on the middle class," he says. "The law was designed to distribute equitably the burden of taxation. The cry went up: 'Make the rich pay their share.' Instead of doing this the law makes it easier for the tax-dodger to escape."

For the first time in many years the Republicans of Chicago are seriously thinking of nominating one of their number for Governor. In fact, there are at present two avowed candidates here for the place, and they are both on the bench. They are Judge Elbridge Hanecy and Judge Orrin M. Carter. The last is a brother of Zina R. Carter, who made the unsuccessful run for the Mayoralty against Harrison at the last city election. The candidacy of each is announced, and as both stand well with the party in Cook County the fight is apt to be of good-natured warmth. Both these men and their supporters are against Tanner's renomination, although, of course, they do not say so. It is the hope of the party aside from the State machine to get some such man as Hanecy or Carter before the people in such a way that the present incumbent will be headed off. This is much easier said than done, however, for Tanner is still strong with the country districts, and it is the latter which elect the Governor in Illinois. As yet the adherents of the Governor here, such as Congressman Lorimer, Sheriff Pease, and others, have not taken sides in the fight, and they dare not at present, for it is too early and Tanner's opponents are too strong, but if the Governor should decide to run again the fight will be a bitter one, and blows will not be spared on either side. Tanner wants a renomination for the purpose of "vindication." His Republican opponents do not propose to give him that chance if they can help it. They know their weakness in the country districts, and for that reason they are inclined to favor the nomination of Judge Carter or Judge Hanecy rather than some one from the country other than Tanner himself. The granger vote would be less inclined to antagonize such a man from Cook County than some one else from the country. They realize that they can hardly afford to have Tanner re-elected or even renominated. Either event seems to presage the going out of power for the party for a considerable period. Almost any good Democrat could win against the present Governor, even if 1900 should prove a McKinley landslide. At the same time they hesitate to put a third ticket in the field for the party's sake. The party machine is still in pretty good shape.

It is not impossible, however, that Tanner may find a rival out in the State. Congressman Reeves is credited with the ambition to preside at the State House, although he hesitates about giving up his seat in the House of Representatives, and it is even said that Mr. Hopkins might be induced to relinquish his place in Congress for the honor of becoming Governor.

Some surprise has been shown at the fact that not one of the Chicago Congressmen has received a chairmanship at the hands of Speaker Henderson, although some of the older ones got fairly satisfactory places in second place. Of course, the country Representatives of experience were well taken care of. Cannon, Warner, Hopkins, Graff, Marsh, and Smith are all at the head of more or less important committees. The new Chicago men are all Democrats, and, of course, they could not expect much, so were not disappointed, but Mann, Foss, Lorimer, and Boutell, all Republicans with considerable time to their credit, are keenly disappointed, as are their constituents, that they were not singled out for more signal honors.

Even at this great distance the effect of the death of Bernard Quaritch, the London bibliophile, was felt. In spite of its commercialism, Chicago contains many book lovers, and such men as Gen. McClurg, George Millard, Frederick Hild, W. Irving Way, Edward E. Ayer, and Charles J. Barnes heard of the great bookman's passing away with genuine regret. All these gentlemen knew him intimately and had had dealings with him. Mr. Millard, in speaking of him, said that if the younger Quaritch did not continue the business of his father and the great collection should be placed upon the market, there would certainly be a great shaking up in the prices of rare books. Mr. Millard called Quaritch a bull in the book market, and he prophesied a sort of panic should the collection be put upon the market suddenly. Mr. Millard once went abroad with a commission from a Chicago man to buy the great Spencer library. The collection founded by Dibdin. He was too late, for it had just been sold for $1,250,000.

He told Quaritch of his disappointment, and the latter said: "You could do much better by buying my stock."

He then put a price of £120,000 upon his collection, exclusive of duplicates.

Another time he said, speaking of his books: "These do not belong to me. They belong to Sotheby." Sotheby being the great book auction house of London.

From this Mr. Millard inferred that Quaritch was greatly in Sotheby's debt, although he does not know this to be the fact.

SAM T. JACK'S WILL PROBATED.

Claim of the Widow of Undue Influence Not Sustained.

Surrogate Fitzgerald yesterday handed down a decision admitting the will of Sam T. Jack, the theatrical manager, to probate. The value of Mr. Jack's estate is not known. There is $75,000 in personal property in this State, but there is said to be real estate in other States.

According to the will, Mrs. Jack, who was Emma Ward, a burlesque actress, and James C. Jack, a brother of the testator, each receive one-third of the estate. The other third is divided among the testator's father, mother, and a number of relatives.

In his will Mr. Jack inserted the following clause: "It is my wish first and foremost that my brother and my wife Emma become husband and wife." The wish has never been carried out.

After the will was filed for probate a contest was entered to its probate by Mrs. Jack. She contested on the usual ground of undue influence and mental incapacity. She alleged that her husband was under the influence of his brother at the time of the execution of the will. The will was executed on the day of Mr. Jack's death, April 27 last.

LEGAL NOTES.

HUBER ENJOINED FROM REPRODUCING MOVING PICTURES OF THE JEFFRIES-SHARKEY FIGHT.—Justice Gildersleeve yesterday granted the application of James J. Jeffries, referred to as "Champion of the World," and of Thomas Sharkey, to continue a temporary injunction obtained by them in their suit to restrain George H. Huber from reproducing or exhibiting moving pictures taken by biograph, of what they call their sparring exhibition at the Coney Island Athletic Club on the 3d of last November. Jeffries and Sharkey describe themselves in their complaint as "athletes and experts in the science and art of sparring and boxing." Justice Gildersleeve, in his opinion, said: "It is my judgment that the creation of attitudes and movements discernible to the eye, at the exhibition in question, by the plaintiffs, as represented by the moving pictures, was a product of the plaintiffs' labor. It was not a literary product, nor a picture upon canvas, which have frequently been the subject of litigation, but a product resultant of skill that had required much time, large experience, and great mental and physical effort to develop. All the facts in this case are new, but nevertheless the contention of the plaintiffs evokes no new principles of law or equity. The property of the plaintiffs, which it is alleged the defendant is undertaking to enjoy without their consent, is analagous to a literary creation of the mind or a production of art." The Court decides that sufficient ground for apprehension of immediate injury was disclosed, and that it was clear that the damages could not be ascertained and measured at law.

INVESTMENT OF SECURITIES.—Justice Russell, in Supreme Court, Special Term, yesterday gave legal construction to some portions of the will of the late John G. Butler. By the third clause of the instrument, the testator gave to Charles R. Duncklee, his executor, $25,000 in trust, the income of which was to go to his wife for life, after which it was to become part of the residuary estate. By the fourth clause the residue was to be divided into four parts, the income to be applied, so far as necessary, to the support and education of the testator's four children, three daughters and a son, during their minority. Each daughter, when she became of age, was to have the income of one part during her life, remainder to her issue; the share of any one dying without issue to be added to the portions of the other children. In an action by Mr. Duncklee for the construction of the will, the First Appellate Division held, last March, that the bequest of $25,000 to the wife, which, upon her death, was to be disposed of as part of the residuary estate, was in contravention of the statute, and that with respect to that sum, the testator died intestate. Justice Russell, from whom the executor now asks for further instructions, gives direction as to the investment of the testator's personal estate, which amounts to nearly $1,000,000. The executor asked whether he might still retain securities found by him upon the testator's death, and reinvest in securities of a similar character, or whether he should be confined to the purchase of Government bonds, or to investments in real estate mortgages. Justice Russell said, considering the language of the testator and his own conduct as showing his intent, the trustee might retain the investments in his hands, and as a necessary corollary, might reinvest as necessity compelled, in similar securities, using always the fair business discretion which the law required. By the second clause of the will, the widow was given "the use and improvement of one-third of all the real estate," and Justice Russell holds that therefore besides her dower interest, she is entitled to the use of two-ninths of the real estate.

THE SURROGATE HAD NO JURISDICTION.—Henry B. Brant, who, prior to the Spring of 1894, resided in Piermont, Rockland County, at that time went to board in Twenty-fifth Street, in this city. He had become so intemperate that his wife would not tolerate his presence in the house he had given her at Piermont, and she had arranged for his sojourn in this city at her expense. Should he reform, she was willing to live with him again, but in April, 1895, despairing of such reformation, she brought an action for a separation. That suit was pending at his death, in October, 1895. Upon a contest by the wife against the probate of his will, which he made while residing in Twenty-fifth Street, Surrogate Arnold filed an opinion that the will should be probated. On a resubmission to Surrogate Varnum, it was claimed the Surrogate's Court here had no jurisdiction, because the decedent's residence was in Rockland County. Surrogate Varnum yesterday dismissed the proceeding for probate, holding that the evidence established the decedent's intention when he came to board here not to abandon his Piermont residence.

VESTED REMAINDER CHARGED WITH PAYMENT.—John W. Moore, whose death occurred in 1878, gave his widow, Juliet M. Moore, a life estate in all his property, remainder to his son, Sylvester P. Moore, with a provision that if the son died without issue, before the widow, the property should go to the testator's brothers and sisters, and that if the son survived the widow he should pay a certain sum to Carrie L. Moore, a granddaughter, the daughter of a deceased son of the testator, as a condition of his receiving the bequest. The son, who was in being at the death of the testator, died intestate, before the widow, leaving a child, Nellie K. Moore, his only heir at law. The Court of Appeals, modifying the decision of the Second Appellate Division, which affirmed the decree of the Surrogate of Dutchess County, recently held, in an opinion by Judge Haight, that the remainder was deemed to have vested in the son, and passed, on the widow's death, to the son's heir at law, burdened with the payment to the testator's granddaughter mentioned in the will, and the latter was entitled to share in the estate only to the extent of the sum so directed to be paid to her.

THE SHIPPING SUBSIDY BILL.

Reform Club Calls Attention to the National Grange Opposition.

The Committee on Tariff Reform of the Reform Club has issued a circular calling attention to the resolution opposing a subsidized American merchant marine passed by the National Grange at its recent session at Springfield, Ohio, and reciting the reasons why the committee opposes the Shipping Subsidy bill now before Congress. The action of the National Grange, it is remarked, renders the petitions from local granges or supposed local granges worthless, though, it is added, "they will doubtless continue to be paraded before Congress."

An interview with T. J. Elderkin, vessel dispatcher for the City of Chicago, is quoted in order to show "the extent to which money is being spent and lobbyists employed by the shipping people." Mr. Elderkin characterized the attempt to pass the Subsidy bill as "the greatest confidence game ever attempted in the country." He said he met the most active body of lobbyists about the hotels of Detroit during the convention of the American Federation of Labor that he had ever found interested in the passage of any measure. He counted nineteen men who were there specially to secure the passage of a resolution favoring the Hanna-Payne measure.

Mr. Elderkin added: "You mark my words: Congress will pass this bill because Hanna has the House in his hand. The law will establish a trust. Freight and passenger rates will remain the same. Where, then, are the people to derive a benefit? Of the many attempts to secure the adoption of resolutions favoring this bill only one marine institution, the Lake Carriers' Association of Cleveland, Ohio, has commended it. That institution, by the way, is owned by Mark Hanna and his brother."

Scramble for Credit of Putting Gold in Platform of 1896.

ANECDOTES OF GEN. LAWTON

Effort to Restrict Traffic on Pennsylvania Avenue — Strict Regulations Against the Plague.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23.—There has been quite a scramble of late among leading Republican politicians to obtain the reputation of responsibility for the adoption at St. Louis, in 1896, of an unqualified gold standard plank in the National platform. Everybody who recollected that he was in any way influential has put in a claim, and individual credit has been in a measure obliterated by a sort of round-robin declaration, in which the honor is distributed so as to go around among a number.

The amusing thing about these gold-standard declarations of this latter day is that there do not appear to have been any fearsome friends of President McKinley present at the convention except those who afterward bolted and now make up the leadership and rank and file of the small party of silver Republicans. But very few of the newspaper representatives who attended that convention have been drilled in a fashion to destroy their memories. To some of them it seems that when the convention was assembling there were some McKinley men, and one at least of them from Ohio, who were very anxious that the word "gold" should be sedulously avoided. Mr. Hanna had a room at the end of a hall on the second floor. The door of that room was entered many times each day by men who were endeavoring to find out what the headquarters idea was of what should be the financial declaration of the platform. To all with whom he spoke about the matter Mr. Hanna was quite sure that nothing so strong as the declaration of the Indiana State Convention would be adopted. The word "gold" would surely not be offered to offend the Republicans disposed to adhere to their free-silver notions.

Senator Foraker, who is now admitted to participation in the credit of having pressed the word gold upon the convention, was a gold standard man from the moment of his arrival in St. Louis, and he certainly had the impression that the candidate needed to be urged to accept its use. Mr. Lodge was known to be a gold standard man, and according to the understanding at the time of the convention, the use of the word gold was not consented to until it was found that the Southern delegates and the Eastern and Middle States delegates had agreed that the platform should be quite as strong as that of Indiana, and that they had the votes to compel a gold plank. Even Mr. Depew held the opinion, up to a late hour, that a modified Indiana expression would be chosen to express the Republican financial policy.

The death in action of the first General officer of the United States since the beginning of the war with Spain brought very sincere personal grief to many persons in Washington who knew Major Gen. Lawton more or less intimately. The army is universally in sorrow. Few officers enjoyed such affection as was felt for Lawton. His long service in the war of the rebellion and on the plains, where he proved himself a master in the art of tiring out Indians, and a fine quality of good-fellowship, endeared him to those who came in close contact with him.

An officer who formerly served with him in the Fourth Cavalry recalled to-day an incident of his service in the West that was interesting. He was under the famous Mackenzie, one of the men who achieved a high reputation and commanded at an early age, and died miserably here in Washington in an asylum. Lawton had been out on some scouting trip, and returned to his quarters at Rosebud Agency between midnight and morning. On reaching his bed in the dark he found that it was occupied. He shook the occupant, but received no response. Then seizing the intruder by the leg, he pulled him out of bed and left him on the floor, getting into bed without further formality. Next morning he was placed under arrest for disrespect to his commanding officer, and then learned that it was Col. Mackenzie whom he had flung upon the floor with so little ceremony. This incident did not hurt the brave fighter, but it kept up a coolness between the commander and his subordinate for a time. Lawton was not without a sense of humor, and he came to enjoy references to the cause of his temporary humiliation. Mackenzie did not cherish any grudge against Lawton on this score.

About a year ago Gen. Lawton was in this city, and one night was the guest of the Gridiron Club at a dinner at which Gen. Shafter, Rear Admiral Schley, Capt. Sigsbee, and other officers who had been conspicuous during the war, were present. When the time came for guests to be seen and heard Shafter, Schley, Sigsbee, and others made brief little talks, those of Schley and Sigsbee being very happy and appropriate, while Shafter's was a cold-blooded admission, in typewritten pages, that he did not consider himself an off-hand speaker. Gen. Lawton enjoyed with a grim smile the heroic effort of Shafter to do his unaccustomed part. By and by it came the turn of Lawton. His name was mentioned with a most cordial reference to his soldierly qualities, which Lawton heard with a calm smile, as he sat half facing the presiding officer. The applause that followed the introduction was immense and hearty, the diners rising to cheer and wave their napkins at the tall, slender man in uniform.

Standing for a moment as straight as an arrow, Gen. Lawton bowed first to the Chair, then to the right and then to the left, once more to the presiding officer—and sat down. He picked up his cigar and again became a spectator. The cheering that followed was as tumultuous and appreciative as if it had been evoked by the wittiest of remarks. The General had not been distressed at the expectation that he was to be called on. He enjoyed himself, and the merriment of the occasion, evidently had determined that he would utter no sound when summoned, and his performance was so absolutely in key with his reputation for taciturnity that it took the company as thoroughly captive as if he had uttered a great sentiment or told a side-splitting story of soldiers' experience.

Pennsylvania Avenue, the principal street in width and location in Washington, appears to be overcrowded, according to the judgment of persons who are encouraging the District of Columbia Commissioners to obtain from Congress the authority to limit the use of that avenue, for certain hours of each day, to certain classes of traffic. The avenue is about 120 feet wide between gutters, from the Treasury to the Capitol. It crosses all the numbered streets and lettered streets "on the bias," so that at the intersections there are gore lots, or in their absence, sometimes because there would be no economy in saving the little slice that would be left, there are wide and irregular expansions of the street. The "reservations" are sometimes occupied by statues. Car tracks run down the avenue, leaving space enough at either side for four teams driven with care. Yet the complaint is made that there are too many dirt carts, grocery vans, lumber wagons, express wagons, trucks carrying railroad iron, drays rumbling with barrels of beer, constantly on the go, on this wide highway, to make the avenue safe or comfortable for carriages.

The object is to exclude all business wagons from the avenue during certain hours. To the New York visitor accustomed to observing the congestion in some of the streets of his own busy city, Pennsylvania Avenue may never seem to be so crowded as to need the intervention of the police to prevent a blockade. The drivers of trade vehicles unquestionably like to use the avenue because it brings them where life is most active here. The avenue cannot well be narrowed, although I have the word of Representative Levy that it is too wide, and that its width will always keep it down in commercial estimation. And it would not do to assume too confidently that Congress will authorize the Commissioners of the District to set it apart exclusively as a pleasure driveway, even for part of each day.

Very strict regulations have been issued by the Marine Hospital Service to prevent the importation into the United States of the bubonic plague. Vessels from infected ports are to be subjected to elaborate precautions. Rats are not to be permitted to escape from the incoming ships, as they may have the plague and carry it ashore to inoculate other animals, and so spread the contagion among human beings. Pilots bringing in infected vessels must undergo quarantine, and the vessels must be subjected to the strictest disinfection. The requirements will be irksome, but the Marine Hospital Service is brought constantly face to face with the ghastly record of the deadliness of the plague where it has become established, and reasonable persons will sanction much quarantine annoyance to others rather than have this deadliest of diseases get in.

According to the latest reports of the Marine Hospital Bureau, the fatality of the plague is dreadful. At Hongkong, between April 11 and Oct. 28, there were 1,640 cases, with 1,582 deaths. In Bombay, between Sept. 10 and Sept. 23—just thirteen days—there were 8,659 deaths in the presidency. Since the outbreak of the disease in India there have been in the Dharwar district 38,-754 cases and 31,507 deaths. In the Rutnagherry district the number of cases has been 27,087 and the deaths 21,211. Out of a grand total of 220,907 cases in India since the pleague appeared, 164,083 victims have died. At Tamsui, Formosa, since the outbreak of the plague 1,866 deaths have resulted in 2,468 cases. Oporto, Portugal, which threatened New York, showed from August to October a death rate of one to three of all cases.

Senator Frye is to make another effort, which he believes will be successful, to "promote the efficiency" of the Revenue Cutter Service. That service, which has won its right to be treated as honorably and as fairly as the navy, is destined, under the present law, to become congested by the accumulation on its register of superannuated officers. Temporary alleviation of this state of things was made in 1895 by the creation of a "permanent waiting orders" list. Mr. Frye, with all true friends of the Revenue Cutter Service, believes that it should have a retiring list, similar in all respects to that of the army and the navy.

The bill which Mr. Frye will seek to have passed gives the officers the same comparative rank with the army as is now enjoyed by naval officers, with like pay and allowances. It also grants longevity pay, which the service has never received, the increase being precisely that for the army and navy, 10 per centum increase for each five years of service. Officers reaching the age of sixty-four must retire, and those becoming incapacitated sooner are to be placed on a retired waiting orders list or to be actually retired. The pay of the retired officers under the act and of those who have heretofore been placed upon the permanent waiting orders list is to be 75 per cent. of the pay of the rank upon which they were retired.

Capt. Hibbard of the Alaska Transportation Company, who is one of the latest arrivals from Cape Nome, the wonderful "gold beach" country, poured into a hat held out by a visitor to the Bureau of Navigation of the Treasury about half a hatful of gold nuggets taken from the beach diggings just before he started for San Francisco.

"These are samples taken out of the furrows you see in this photograph," said he, showing one of several pictures of this wonderful new gold field. "There has been very little exploration except along the beach. We do not know how far back the deposits are to be found. The field is scarcely touched. It reaches from Cape Nome to Port Clarence, about two hundred miles. No prospecting has been done on the other side of the hills from which the gold is supposed to have worked down.

"Dawson? Yes, about all the people who were there and who could get to Cape Nome had arrived. More will come. This gold field will be either the most wonderful ever discovered or the greatest disappointment. There is nothing there except the beach, the water, and the gold. Food, clothing, timber, everything needed to sustain life and make it comfortable must be brought long distances. The diggers will be obliged to put up with hardships, but everybody is bound to get well paid for his sufferings if he is industrious."

CHRISTMAS IN BETHLEHEM

Bishop Wigger of New Jersey Will Take Part in Ceremonies.

STRANGE AND STRIKING SCENES

The Patriarch's Gorgeous Procession from Jerusalem to the Church and Grotto of the Nativity.

Bishop Wigger, the Roman Catholic prelate of New Jersey, who this year is to conduct the Christmas ceremonies and grand high mass in the Church of the Nativity, in Bethlehem, will, on his arrival in Palestine, find himself in a land whose physical features and inhabitants differ greatly from the country of his birth, and in a climate that will make him imagine that Winter has been omitted in this year's seasons. Instead of the snow or slush and lowering skies associated in his mind with Christmas time in his diocese, he will see the great vault of heaven bright-smiling and sunny, and the ground, refreshed by the early Winter rains, covered with green grass, which is everywhere studded with pink, yellow, and white stars of Bethlehem and cyclamen of varied delicate and rich hues.

The City of Jerusalem, which is about five miles from Bethlehem, and where the Patriarchs of the Roman Catholic, Greek, and the other Oriental Churches reside, is well filled at this season of the year with pilgrims and travelers from all parts of the world, and the Christmas celebrations form one of the great features of the pilgrimage season that lasts until Easter. These ceremonies begin with a grand procession from Jerusalem this afternoon, and as the Roman Catholic Bishop or Patriarch of Jerusalem—who is regarded as next in rank to the Pope himself—is the principal figure in the Catholic celebrations, the privilege extended to Bishop Wigger to conduct the services this year is one of the highest honors that could be conferred upon him.

One of these interesting processions and ceremonies was witnessed by a party of travelers, who started out of Jerusalem at the same time that the Roman Catholic ecclesiastical procession moved out through the Jaffa gate of that ancient city. The vanguard of the Latin Patriarch was composed of several hundred young men, native inhabitants and members of the Roman Catholic Church. The Arabian dress they wore was peculiarly graceful and the pleasing outline much enhanced by variety of color and harmony of tint and shade. Each youth carried a gun slung across his back and a pair of pistols in his girdle; while the horse he rode was young, well groomed, fiery, and gayly caparisoned. This company was not made up of mercenaries, but of sons of well-to-do citizens, in whose families the privilege of thus escorting the Latin Patriarch has been jealously retained for generations.

A body of Turkish irregular cavalry, in picturesque garb, carrying a whole arsenal of guns and pistols about them and lances in rest, came next, on fine horses, with bright and numerous trappings. Behind these rode the cawassy, or special guards of the Patriarch, in glittering janissary costume of blue cloth, heavily embroidered and corded with gold; crimson turboosh, with blue silken tassel. A Turkish scimitar, in shining brass sheath, at the left side, the long, large, knob-headed silver mace of office in the right hand, its iron-shod end supported by the shovel-shaped stirrup, gave these cawassy a most imposing air as they sat erect and graceful on their handsome steeds.

THE PATRIARCH'S SUITE.

Directly behind this special guard came the Patriarch, with his suite of priests, forming a contrast in their broad, low-crowned hats of black beaver and large flowing black cloaks to the gorgeous mass of color preceding them. These ecclesiastics wore full beards. The Roman Catholic Church, whose priests are clean shaved in other countries, make this concession to the Orientals, whose native clergy, whether Mohammedan, Christian, or Jewish, wear full beards to insure the respect of their congregations, who would despise an ecclesiastic with a shaved face.

After the Patriarch and the priests rode the seminarists, natives of the country, who are educated for the Church. A navy blue cassock faced with red, a red sash, with long streamers, for girdle, and a native red cap completed their uniform. The lay elders of the Latin community followed. These were heads of families, men of substance and good social standing, and formed the rear guard of honor.

Behind this official procession no regard was paid to any order of procedure. Pilgrims, tourists, foreigners, natives, men, women, and children, aristocrats, peasants, and artisans rode or walked, mingled, and moved in a kaleidoscopic crowd. These travelers had come from every known portion of the globe, and the great variety in the fashion of costume was wonderfully picturesque. There was neither crowding nor jostling, but good nature prevailed everywhere, and much joy among the pious strangers that they had come thus far safely on their pilgrimage.

From the city gate down into and across the Gihon Valley, ascending the opposite hill until they reached the Baksa, the procession formed a long train, the road not allowing of more than three or four horsemen abreast. On the plain of the ancient camp of the Assyrians the great company spread out and halted a while. The younger cavaliers then gave a fine display of horsemanship. There was no race course nor beaten track, but at a word from the riders the intelligent animals careered, curveted, pranced, galloped wildly, and wheeled about. The reins lay loose on the pommel, for the riders were discharging their guns and pistols, reloading, throwing the lance, and catching it on the fly. At the same time they urged their horses to greater speed and new manoeuvres by words of praise and shouts of encouragement. To inexperienced strangers the performance threatened to become an inextricable tangle of men, horses, guns, and lances, but in no instance did a horse so much as jostle another.

It was a spectacle never to be forgotten by many of the strangers who viewed it for the first time, especially with the accessories of balmy air, sweet odors of flowers, and of spice herbs from the hills. Picturesque groups of peasants here and there returning to their villages from a shopping or trading expedition to the city, and over all the tender blue of the sky veiled at intervals by fleecy cloudlets of delicate tints in rose, citron, lilac, and green.

The procession reformed and proceeded leisurely. At the summit of a long, gradual ascent in the middle of the highway is the Well of the Star. It is surrounded by a stone curb several feet in height, and a stone trough beside it holds water for passing beasts of burden and for the little flocks that pasture in the neighboring fields. The legend connected with this well states that the natal star of the Redeemer became invisible to the Magi during their visit to Jerusalem. Traveling along this road and debating how they were to find the Holy Child, they halted at this well to refresh themselves and their animals. One of the wise men lowered the leathern bucket which long-distance travelers always carry, and looking into the well to ascertain the distance of the water, saw in its crystal depths the reflection of the natal star. Joyfully he summoned his companions and they all looked upward to see their celestial guide emerging brilliant from under passing clouds. Numbers of the pious pilgrims devoutly crossed themselves as they passed the spot.

The fortress-like building of the church and convent of Mar Elyas occupy a fine site with a background of a grove of grand olive trees. It is said to mark the spot where the prophet Elijah rested when he fled from the offended Queen Jezebel. At this point there is a beautiful view of the surrounding country, of Jerusalem and Bethlehem, although six miles apart. It was by this route that Tesso's pilgrims approached the holy city, and got their first view of its battlements and towers, its domes, minarets, and castellated walls, its fortifications and citadel, the most beautiful castle in the world.

It was etiquette for this ecclesiastical procession to proceed very leisurely, so that although the distance between Jerusalem and Bethlehem is barely six miles, it took about three hours to traverse that distance. It had the advantage of affording ample time and opportunity to the lovers of nature to note the features of the landscape, and to lovers of history and legend to listen to all the tales that friends or guides could supply.

The tomb of Rachel, daughter of Laban, the Syrian, and favorite wife of Jacob, stands along this route. It is a spot much venerated by Hebrews, and faithfully visited as a shrine by childless women.

The large, handsome village of Beit Jalah, on the slope of a mountain amid groves of olive trees, lay in the golden glow of the setting sun. The houses are of white stone, and the country seats, convents, and theological seminaries of the Latin and Greek orthodox communities palatial in size and architecture. It is believed to be the ancient Zalah, where King Saul and his son Jonathan were buried in the tomb of their ancestors.

The patriarchal procession was now continually augmented by parties of native peasants, who came on horseback from neighboring villages to give their spiritual chief greeting and escort. They carried guns and pistols, and the appearance of each company was the signal for exchange of compliments by firing salutes.

HOW BETHLEHEM LOOKS.

Bethlehem is situated on an elongated hill, which is cultivated with terraces of vines and fig trees. The white stone houses rise in terraces above each other, and command many a beautiful view from open court and vaulted lewan. Besides farming the inhabitants occupy themselves with the manufacture of souvenirs and in trade. They have always been noted for enterprise, industry, beauty, and fierce turbulence, ever conspicuous in the sectarian disturbances of their own town and of Jerusalem. The majority of the population is Christian, but the Moslem portion is warlike and powerful.

The huge, massive, fortress-like pile of buildings that comprises the Church of the Nativity, the Latin, Greek, and Armenian Convents, stands on the brow of the hill at the eastern extremity of the town. To reach it the procession was obliged to traverse Bethlehem. At the entrance to the town are the wells, of which tradition says that King David longed to drink and yet refused to do so, because men had risked their lives to bring him some of its water.

At this place the gallant Bethlehemites came down with a rush on horseback, several hundred strong. They tendered a right hearty welcome with the noise of their long, old-fashioned, brass-ornamented muskets and enormous blunderbusses that emitted sounds like small cannon. The streets, the roofs, and terraces were crowded with people, the majority eager to add their quota of noise by shout and chant.

The women and maidens of Bethlehem, graceful and gay in holiday attire, had assembled in the great square fronting the Basilica. As the procession drew near, the horsemen divided right and left, lining the plaza many riders deep. When the Patriarch reached the edge of the square, the entire procession halted and perfect silence ensued. A stalwart native, personal attendant, held the bridle of the horse ridden by the Prelate, while another was stationed in the rear with his hand on the crupper. One priest passed to the right side and held the stirrup to steady the saddle while a second ecclesiastic held the left stirrup and assisted his chief to dismount. Other ecclesiastics followed the Prelate's example and dismounted, the travelers and pilgrims who were guests of the convent doing likewise.

The Patriarch stepped forward, and amid the general pause and silence, raised his hands and blessed the multitude with the sign of the cross, the members of his community folding their hands on the breast and bowing their heads.

Suddenly the voices of hundreds of the assembled women and maidens broke the stillness with songs of welcome. During the Patriarch's progress across the square toward the Basilica, large numbers of the native Roman Catholics pressed forward to kiss his hands, or, failing such privilege, to kiss or even touch the hem of his garments for a blessing. At the entrance to the Basilica the Prelate was received by the custodian friars and conducted to the rooms prepared for his reception in the Latin convent.

The present entrance to the immense pile of buildings is low and narrow, with a thick oaken door covered with iron and studded with enormous nails. The original grand entrance has been walled up. Predatory bedouins, who, as sons of the soil, considered themselves entitled to a share of the revenues of the foreigners, made a habit of an occasional unexpected visitation. They used to ride with a sudden rush through the grand entrance up to the very altars of the magnificent cathedral and then proceed to appropriate all valuables in sight, such as gold and silver lamps, and jewels off the images. Besides these raids on the church furniture the marauders frequently refused to leave without further levy on the stores of the friars, such as sugar, coffee, and other delicacies.

HOSPITALITY AT THE CONVENT.

The rooms allotted to guests of the convent are very simply furnished, but all is exceedingly fresh and sweet and clean. Specially favored guests were entertained in the clausura where no women are permitted to enter. All other guests were summoned to supper in the refectory. This is a large oblong hall, with chintz covered divans, a long table, and straw-bottomed chairs. Besides a few religious prints in plain frames there were two large oil paintings of Philip IV. of Spain and his Queen, who, in 1628, donated 30,000 ducats to repair the convent.

The hospitable Friars served the guests at table with a most appetizing variety, although, being the Advent season, during which both Eastern and Western Churches in the Orient abstain from such meats, the supper contained no flesh of either cattle or poultry.

The architecture of the immense Cathedral of the Nativity is cruciform. In 1842, owing to the discords of the various sects a partition wall was raised below the transepts. The native Greek orthodox community appropriated the chancel and high altar, the north transept was given to the Roman Catholics, and the Armenians received the south transept. The great nave remained common to all the sects, and is by far the most interesting, being the only remaining portion of the Basilica built in 327, and the oldest monument of Christian architecture in the world. Besides, the four rows of enormous monoliths of colored marble that support the roof formed part of Herod's temple in the days of Jesus.

Hundreds of wax candles in the mammoth chandeliers emitted millions of jewel-like reflections from the countless thousands of facets of the cut-glass pendants and cast a soft radiance on the crowd that thronged the nave. Numbers of the native peasant men and women sat cross-legged on the marble pavement, each with a piece of cloth spread in front, on which were displayed rosaries, crosses, crucifixes, beads, &c., manufactured of mother of pearl, native woods, and stone. Hundreds of tourists and pilgrims passed and repassed, inspected, bargained, and chattered, while the traders extolled their wares in every language spoken by the strangers. Among his various accomplishments the Bethlehemite manages to master enough of a foreign tongue to sell his wares to tourists and pilgrims in their own vernacular.

The great square outside the Basilica was lighted by over 100 torches. A long iron pole, surmounted by a large iron cresset filled with chunks of the roots of olive and oak that had previously been well steeped in pitch, is a Palestine torch, and it blazes brightly. A pile of fuel lay beside each torch, which were kept burning through the night. In the centre of the square a company of Turkish soldiers had stacked their guns and were dancing a slow and pretty step to the accompaniment of their own quaint folk song. Vendors of bread, cakes, fruit, hot tea, and coffee cried their wares. Scattered about the great square a number of natives offered a portion of savory food, free of charge, to all who would accept it. The donors repeated the words: "Tunnsor lul butruk, heydeya lul butruk."—Bake-meat for the Patriarch, gift for the Patriarch.

As the time drew near for the grand procession through the nave with which the night service began, the friars called upon the sellers of souvenirs and relics to clear the place of their wares. "Yes, brother, we are going," was the reply, but the traders continued their endeavors to attract custom till the kindly friars began to lose patience.

A door leading into the Latin convent opened and the Patriarch appeared, followed by a number of seminarists. "Clear the place of these people with their wares," he said with a comprehensive wave of the hand. "Get out of here, get out," ordered the students as they made the tour of the place. Every man and woman quickly made a bundle of the wares in the cloth on which they had been displayed, and carried it away.

Turkish soldiers with rifles and fixed bayonets were now stationed at the entrances and about the nave to guard against disturbance, and to keep a path clear for the religious procession. The doors leading from the nave into the church were opened, and the place began to fill fast. With the exception of several benches in the chapels to accommodate a favored few, there were no seats in the church. Worshippers and spectators either stand or kneel. The native Arabs, when tired, squat down on the marble pavement.

Twenty cawassy with silver maces waited at the door through which the ecclesiastics would enter the nave. The convent bell rang, and they fell into line two abreast. The door opened, and as the Patriarch appeared on the threshold the soldiers presented arms, and the cawassy struck the marble pavement with the iron ferrule of the silver maces. This was the signal for people to get out of the way of the coming Church or State dignitaries.

AN IMPOSING SPECTACLE.

In full canonicals of cloth of gold and bejeweled mitre, the Patriarch walked slightly in advance of the priests, who were clad in rich silken vestments, heavy with gold and pearls. The friars, choristers, and seminarists followed in tunics of fine white linen trimmed with beautiful lace. The French Consul, Consular attachés, and suite in full uniform, completed the official portion of the procession. France is protector of the Roman Catholic Church in Palestine. Next in order came the guests of the convent, noble foreign pilgrims, Consuls and Consular attachés from Jerusalem, and lay agents of the ecclesiastical body. The remainder of the procession consisted of native worshippers, foreign pilgrims, and tourists.

As ecclesiastics and laymen fell into line two friars handed them large lighted wax candles. The procession moved with slow dignity, the priests, friars, and choristers chanting. The great convent bell continued to ring while the procession made the tour of the nave and the grand aisles.

The church was brilliant with the light of thousands of wax candles and olive oil in lamps of gold and silver suspended by chains. Turkish soldiers with rifles and fixed bayonets did guard duty in every portion of the church, and two lines of them kept a passage clear for the procession through the dense crowds to the altar of the Latin chapel in the north transept.

The services were largely choral, and voices were heard that night whose marvelous beauty might have won wealth and fame for their owners if these had not sacrificed all for the service of their Church.

The native Arabs, devoutly attentive during the earlier part of the service, began to relax in fervor later in the evening. They squatted down when tired of standing, and stood up when cramped with sitting. Some had brought small rugs on which, huddled up, they managed to slumber quite peacefully. Others chattered and moved about the church, elbowing their way with difficulty as they went out or returned. The Arab conscience is easily salved in such instances by making the sign of the cross and reciting fragments of prayers in the interludes of conversation.

A sudden cessation of the organ tones and the chanting caused an instantaneous silence and stillness throughout the vast crowd. Strangers wondered what it could mean, but the absolute hush continued. It was midnight, the hour of the holy nativity. A clock began to ring out twelve rich, clear strokes. The seventh candle was lighted on the altar. A crimson velvet curtain, heavy with gold, was drawn back; the image of an infant wrapped in cloth of gold became visible. The big bell in the convent tower rang joyously, acolytes swung censers of bejewelled gold and silver; clouds of fragrant incense filled the church. Priests, friars, and choristers chanted in unison the majestic anthem, "Gloria, Gloria in Excelsis." The triumphant tones of the great organ pealed in harmony with the musical sound of shepherds' reeds in commemoration of the night when shepherds watched over their flocks in the plains below and heard the songs of the angels.

THE GROTTO OF THE NATIVITY.

The Grotto of the Nativity is situated under the chancel of the cathedral. It is reached by two flights of steps. This grotto is either a natural cave or was cut out of the living rock, but no evidence of the chisel is visible. To protect the rock from the vandal relic hunter the cave as well as the stone manger, is lined with marble. The first service of Christmas Day closed about 2 o'clock in the morning with a procession to the grotto. The procession formed in the same order as in the nave, and the candles were relighted. The Patriarch carried the life size wax image of an infant in his arms, and the soldiers opened and lined a passage through the crowd.

Being forty feet in length and about half that width, the grotto can hold but a favored few besides the officiating ecclesiastics. The place was ablaze with lights and jewels. The Gospel was read in Latin and at the words, "She brought forth her first born Son," the Patriarch laid the infant image on the slab which is said to mark the exact spot of the nativity. At the words, "There were shepherds abiding in the fields," &c., the "Gloria" was again rendered with indescribable beauty and grandeur. The procession returned to the Latin chapel in the same state, and finally ended by a tour of the great nave.

The hospitable friars had prepared delicious café-au-lait for their guests, who gratefully drank it as they wished each other and their hosts a very happy Christmas.

MAY BE GAS COMBINATION.

Similar Bids for City Lighting Lend to This Surmise.

The fact that the Consolidated, Standard, and New Amsterdam Gas Companies made identical bids for the lighting of streets and public buildings has led city officials to surmise that a combination of the companies has been effected.

Commissioner Kearny of the Department of Public Buildings, Lighting, and Supplies was not prepared yesterday to say that he believed the rumor, but he declared that it was certainly a remarkable coincidence that these companies, which last Spring entered into the liveliest competition, had offered to do the city's work at a uniform price of 92½ cents a thousand feet.

MAY IMPRISON MORE THAN ONCE

Appellate Division So Interprets Section 111 of Civil Code.

An important opinion as to the proper interpretation of Section 111 of the Code of Civil Procedure has just been handed down in the case of Sarah E. Reese against her husband, Thomas J. Reese, by Justice O'Brien of the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, all the other Justices concurring. Heretofore the general opinion among lawyers as to this section has been that it forbade the imprisonment more than once of a defendant in any single proceeding, but it would seem that the limitation applies only to the final order of the Court, and that there is nothing to prevent a defendant being imprisoned a number of times on interlocutory orders.

Reese is a New Jersey pilot. His wife brought an action against him for separation, alleging cruelty, and got a judgment ordering him to pay $75 a month for the support of herself and children. He was required to furnish a bond of $1,000 that he would comply with the order. When he was served with a copy of the decree, however, he refused to pay the money. Moses H. Grossman of the firm of House, Grossman & Vorhaus then got an order for Reese's punishment for contempt of court. He was arrested and imprisoned for three months.

After his release he continued to refuse to pay the money to his wife, and the Court having made a final order in the case, Lawyer Grossman applied again for his arrest and imprisonment. Reese's lawyer, George W. Dease, opposed the application, arguing that, as Reese had been imprisoned once for refusing to pay, he could not again be locked up on the same ground and upon the same process.

In his opinion, Justice O'Brien says that this precise question has not been passed upon by any Appellate Court. He then goes on to say that the words "process" and "mandatory," as used in Section 111, refer to process after final action, and not to mesne process.

The fact, therefore, that Reese was imprisoned under the interlocutory order does not prevent his being imprisoned again under the final decree. The purpose of the section is simply to prevent a defendant being twice imprisoned after the final decree. The decision of the lower court is therefore sustained, and Reese is again adjudged guilty of contempt of court. He is now at liberty, but a warrant is out for his arrest.

Dead Woman Mrs. Mainey.

The woman who was taken ill in a street car Friday evening and carried into Durland's Riding Academy, where she died, was identified yesterday at the Morgue as Mrs. Mary A. Mainey, fifty-one years old, a dressmaker, of 740 Sixth Avenue. The identification was made by Maria Mainey, a daughter of the dead woman Bellevue Park Completed.

The yard of Bellevue Hospital has been transformed into a park, which was opened yesterday by the playing of a spouting fountain such as in Madison Square. The only other formality was the establishment of a watchman as a policeman to keep people off the grass.

ALABAMA'S "SHOW" CITY

Ensley a Serious Rival to Pittsburg.

NEVER SAY "BOOM" AGAIN

Increased Industrial Activity Has Produced a Wonderfully Economic Plant Near Birmingham.

Special Correspondence THE NEW YORK TIMES.

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Dec. 23.—The traveler whose destination is Birmingham, whether he be one of the large and eager and confident throng of commercial men visiting a greedy market or a newspaper man willing to observe and note the evidences of general activity in business, will do well to write or telegraph ahead if he desires to be provided on his arrival with a room in a hotel. If he neglect this precaution he may arrive at midnight to be offered the alternative of a cot or a chair, and the prospect of standing in line to await the departure of others who may have been subjected to the like ordeal.

The further one journeys in the South, beginning in Virginia and traveling by way of Kentucky, Tennessee, and Georgia, the more impressive become the evidences of business activity. It is not a "boom" anywhere. On the contrary, the use of that word, recalling days of rapid and excessive expansion and investment in speculative enterprises, is discovered to be decidedly distasteful. You may hear warnings against the use of the word as you approach Birmingham. There is plenty of talk about the prodigious activity of the iron producers in the Birmingham district, of the manufacturers in the cotton belt below it, and of the operators in the pine timber section still further to the South, but no toleration of the suggestion that there is a "boom." Every man who is directly or indirectly concerned in the permanent prosperity of Birmingham impresses this upon the stranger, his face glowing with earnestness in the glare of coke ovens and blast furnaces past which the crowded train is gliding into the station.

A few years ago, when the writer last visited Birmingham, there was plenty of room in the hotels for more visitors than were seeking shelter and food. A balloon had just collapsed, and many discouraged eyes were staring at the expensive fragments of the wreck. Buildings for business, fine houses, some of them at distant points along a prematurely extended line; castles in air, dreams of fabulous wealth, were oppressing the people of an arrested city like a nightmare. To-day the memory of that bitter experience is less vivid to some of its victims than it is to the man who has been occupied with other interests. The misfortunes of the past are obscured by the clouds belching from many furnaces. Suggest that Birmingham is another Pittsburg, a city that by and by will exist with diluted sunlight only, and you touch the denizen on a tender and susceptible spot. "Pittsburg will be clear enough," said one enthusiastic owner of iron mines, "when we get fairly at work. We like this smoke and smut. It is a constant reminder to us that our resources are being developed; this glcom is an assurance that money is trying to find our pockets."

The man who visits Birmingham to get an idea of what it is doing finds out at once that Ensley is Birmingham's pride. Trolley cars, decked with temporary signs, painted on cotton cloth, invite others to join the throng, not of sightseers or speculators, but of people who live in Ensley or between Ensley and Birmingham. Each street car here, as in all this section, and on all steam railways, has its two sections, one sacred to the use of whites and the other equally sacred to the negroes. White people will wait for another car rather than provoke the law and individual resentment by intruding upon the colored section of a car. Of course, the negroes never upon any pretext attempt to use the compartments reserved for white persons.

Ensley is about seven miles west from Birmingham. To reach it one must pass through Pratt City, once a great suburb, now eclipsed in importance by its greater and younger neighbor. On the way are blast furnaces to right and left, sending up their clouds of black smoke by day and at night making the country lurid with their glare. When Ensley is reached, it is a mining camp. New roads, sometimes soft because of their newness, lead between long rows of one-story buildings, with now and then a tent sandwiched in. Like an Eastern bazaar, the shops in these flimsy and hastily erected structures are open upon the sidewalk, are usually innocent of glazed windows, are decorated with temporary signs, suggesting independence of, or, on the part of sign painters, small concern about, appearances, and very zealous devotion to trade. The patrons of the shops include miners, ironworkers, women in sun bonnets and tailor-made gowns. In one respect Ensley is not at all like the Western mining town. It is "dry" for the drinker of drams and dead for the player of games of chance. It is as free from drunken men as the towns I visited in Kentucky.

A year ago Ensley City—for it is incorporated and has its own intendant, who conducts a flourishing dry goods store—was looking up. The Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railway Company, without enjoying prophetic vision, had been guided by wise advisers to undertake steel development where coal and iron were found together. The company had four blast furnaces in operation when iron began to try its wings. Ensley felt the flutter at once. As pig iron advanced in price, population flocked to Ensley. Soon there were 5,000 people living there. The erection of a new steel mill by the Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railway Company proved magnetic. The operatives who sought employment, and soon found it at good wages, drew families with them. Presently the multitude that lived in tents, sheds, cabins, or halls furnished with cots, or that traveled daily to and from Pratt City or Birmingham, in preference to sleeping the open air, numbered 10,000, and it is not considered improbable that Director Merriam's agents will class Ensley City among the places with 15,000 inhabitants.

Ensley is Alabama's "show town." It is worth showing. Without assuming to be sage, one may understand at once that its foundations are as secure as those of any legitimate business in the world. Having confidence in the possibility of making steel from the ores of Alabama, the corporation that has promoted the erection of Ensley set out to become a competitor with the steel producers further north, those using the rich lake ores but not enjoying the advantages secured here of coal, iron, and fluxing material in intimate neighborhood. The result as it is to be seen is impressive. Here, stretched along in a line, at wide intervals, are four great blast furnaces in operation, each turning out about 200 tons of pig iron a day, and a fifth furnace is about completed, to enable the entire group to produce 1,000 tons daily. The ore fed into these furnaces comes out of the mines of the Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railway Company, not more than four miles distant. The flux is found beside the iron ore. The coal is mined right in Ensley, on the land of the company.

The central feature of this industrial town or city is its newest one. To realize its purpose of gaining by advancing its pig iron to higher and more valuable forms, the company that created Ensley set up the steel mill that was recently put in operation. This mill, a costly shed about 800 feet long and 300 feet wide, is intended to take the product of the furnaces, the iron loaded with impurities, and convert it into blooms, ingots, rods, rails, wire, wire nails, or whatever forms of steel are in demand. The interest to Ensley in this is that it keeps there 1,000 tons of iron that would otherwise go elsewhere to be advanced by labor. The concern of the iron trade is that it takes 1,000 tons daily out of a market with an insatiable appetite for pig at almost any price. The problem it presents to Pittsburg is that of competition with a rival that can make pig iron at a cost of $5 the ton, while Pittsburg cannot reduce its production cost below $7.

Two millions of dollars, or thereabout, was expended here before Ensley began to turn out the most economically made steel ever produced. The scheme was broadly conceived. It has been liberally carried into operation, with the most approved appliances, under the personal direction of men of tried capacity. At one end of the grounds ore will be brought in from the furnaces. When it enters the yard it passes a little mountain of scrap iron—old wire, old stoves, shafting, flatirons, stovepipe, tin trimmings—an article very scarce and very high in price, of which 200 tons a day are used with pig iron in charging the ten open-hearth furnaces. The economies studied and applied in this great concern have been recently described in THE NEW YORK TIMES by Mr. James Bowron, the Vice President of the Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railway Company, an acknowledged authority here, and do not call for detailed repetition. It is sufficient to say for the mill that it is so constructed and provided as to require the least hand labor possible. The ore and coal that were in the earth yesterday may be together in the blast furnace to-day, the iron may be steel to-morrow, and probably may be drawn into wire and made into nails within three days of the removal of the ore from the mine.

But this is not all. In connection with the production of iron and steel, other profitable articles are rescued from what was formerly waste. A bi-product plant, one of six in this country, extracts from the gases generated in the coke ovens all the tar and ammonia contained in them. From each ton of coal there are saved 20 pounds of ammonia sulphate and 100 pounds of tar. Much of the tar is at once converted in Ensley into roofing material. The cleaned gas is used under the boilers in the bi-product plant and in the blast furnaces, and there remains a large quantity fit for illuminating uses, for the 120 coke ovens at Ensley go on day and night, requiring that the bi-product plant keep pace with it.

Still another economy is practiced at Ensley. The slag at the blast furnaces is not wasted. As it comes from the furnace with the molten ore it is welcomed by streams of cold water that drive the sulphur out of it and reduce it to a sort of drowned powder. While saturated it is carried dripping away in cars into which it is blown, dumped into cylindrical dryers, each holding about five tons of slag dust, and is then whirled in hot air until it is dry dust. This dust is still further pulverized by grinding, the grinding being very thorough. The resultant is a cement like that used by the old Roman builders, that will withstand the test of ages. The process is in part secret. Ensley's mill will produce 1,500 barrels daily. There is demand for every barrel of it.

No wonder that with a neighbor like Ensley City business in Birmingham is brisk and business men cheerful. But preoccupation in business has its embarrassments. The hotel proprietors, who are getting all of the prevailing prosperity they can use, are so put upon to provide for the immediate wants of their guests that they cannot find time or assistance to keep their hotels in order or clean. They have been so busy at the Florence that the guests have worn out the carpet on almost every stair until the wood stares at you, and the proprietor is not even afforded time to direct the expenditure of some of his gains in new carpets for the stairs and imperative repairs in sleeping rooms. There is not even time for the management to light up the rotundas, and guests grope about them or go into the street the better to see. An experiment being tried at the Florence is interesting. It is to run the hotel, all its rooms, with one key. When you are shown to your room, after waiting impatiently for it, a boy lets you in with a pass-key. When you desire to leave your room you call up the boy, who locks you out with the universal door-opener. If anybody else has borrowed and forgotten to return it, you wait or else take chances by leaving your door unlocked.

This experiment ought to be postponed until a more convenient season, when guests are fewer and keys less in demand. The locksmiths in Birmingham are busy, like all other people who can work and will work, but it is conceivable that they could be prevailed upon, by a little judicious bribery, to even work one Sunday to help the proprietor of the Florence out of his difficulty. We may yet have hotel rooms without keys, but as long as keys must be used it will be difficult to run a hotel of 100 rooms with one key.

CHANGE IN PARK POLICE.

Devery Would Have the Men in the Squad Perform the Regular Duty.

Chief Devery has made up his mind to change the patrol system of the police part of Central Park, so that the men now doing duty in the Park may perform patrol duty the same as in other precincts. Under the system now in vogue in the Park the men are on duty eight hours and have sixteen hours off. This is looked upon as a detail, and since the consolidation many policemen have been anxious to be transferred to the Park Squad.

Chief Devery now proposes to have the Park men perform the same tour of duty as in the other precincts. This means they will have to perform patrol duty on the first and last tour do the dog watch, do reserve duty, and perform exactly the same duties as the patrolmen outside of the Park. With that end in view, Chief Devery had recommended to the Police Board that a suitable building be procured outside of the limits of Central Park, but adjacent to the Park, for a police station to accommodate the Park Squad.

Chief Devery states in his communication to the board that the police work done in the Park can be more economically and efficiently performed under the conditions recommended. The Park Squad has 182 members, including the Captain, Sergeants, Roundsmen, and patrolmen.

It is expected the Chief's recommendation will raise a protest from President Clausen of the Park Board. President Clausen is in favor of a bill, to be introduced in the next Legislature, to separate the Park Police from the regular police. Mr. Clausen has been opposed to the Police Commissioners and the Chief having power over the police doing duty in the Park.

President York is in favor of Chief Devery's plan. If a suitable building can be procured for a station house, the change will be made in the near future.

Eucharistic League Incorporated.

ALBANY, Dec. 23.—Articles of incorporation of the Peoples' Eucharistic League of New York City, to promote a reverent and continual service of adoration and love of Jesus Christ in the Eucharist and for the sanctification of the people through the Eucharistic devotion, were filed with the Secretary of State to-day. Archbishop Corrigan of the New York Diocese heads the list of Directors, which includes the names of Michael J. Lavelle, Eliza Lummis, Adele F. Vatable, Jeanette Hale, Aimee Delmonico, and Marie J. C. Delmonico.

Complaint of Tea Importers.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 23.—The tea importers of San Francisco have sent a protest to the Secretary of the Treasury against a recent order requiring all samples of tea admitted into the United States to be forwarded to the tea examiner at the Port of New York, the idea being to secure uniformity. It is claimed that the effect of this order will be to divert the tea importing business of this port to New York.

Jefferson County Sues the State.

ALBANY, Dec. 23.—Jefferson County today filed a claim against the State to recover $33,719.57, moneys collected by taxation from various railroads for State purposes. The towns interested in the claim are Alexandria, which was bonded in $60,000; Champion, for $10,000; Clayton, $100,000; Houndsfield, $75,000; Orleans, $80,000; Philadelphia, $15,000; Theresa, $60,000; City of Watertown, $300,000; Wilna, $50,000, and Carthage, $10,000.

Chickamauga and Chattanooga Parks.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 23.—Through its Chairman, Gen. H. V. Boynton, the Chickamauga and Chattanooga National Military Park Commission has made its annual report to the Secretary of War. The document is of interest mainly because of the energetic defense of the healthfulness of the park, based on the experience gained during the Spanish-American war. It is said that the military use to which the park was put has not resulted in any permanent damage.

Fell Into Scalding Brine; May Die.

WATKINS, Dec. 23.—Joseph H. Wilson, aged forty, an employe of the Glen Salt Works at Salt Point, while crossing one of the vacuum pans, lost his footing and fell into the pan, which was full of scalding brine. He was taken to his home in this place, and when his clothing was removed portions of the flesh and skin came with them. He is in a serious condition and may die.

San Francisco's Harbor Defenses.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 23.—The fortifications at Fort Point, on the southern side of the Golden Gate, are rapidly nearing completion, and all of the lighter ordnance will be in position the early part of January. This harbor will then become one of the most strongly protected ports in the country.

New Hotel for San Francisco.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 23.—The Examiner says it is the intention of the Crocker Estate Company to erect a modern fireproof hotel, to cost about $1,000,000, at Van Ness Avenue and Sutter Street, in this city.

At the Play and With the Players

Christmas means nothing more in the New York theatres nowadays than a reawakening of public interest in theatricals after a period of neglect. This period has been unusually long this year. Acute observers say that the plethora of money has been the cause. Some of us may not be able ot follow that line of argument understandingly, but there is no doubt that women who shop, shop, shop, from early morn till half an hour or less before late dinner do not feel like going to the theatre in the evening, and that men, generally speaking, go to theatre principally to escort women.

With Christmas Day, however, the theatres fill up again. For three weeks, more or less, all but two or three of them have had scant audiences. Now they may all fairly expect a revival of the prosperity which has been twice interrupted since the theatrical reopening in the early Fall, first by the counter attractions of Dewey week, secondly by the rivalry of the holiday displays in the shops.

In the many new bills of Christmas week, however, no note is taken of the traditions of the season. Experience has shown that the American theatrical public gets into no well defined Yuletide mood to which the theatres can profitably minister. Comedy and farce and romantic drama serve as well in the last week of December as in the middle of September.

Mr. Mansfield, to be sure, will put forward at the Garden Theatre a piece supposed to include something of the Christmas spirit among its contents.

Last week's varied bill showed anew Mansfield's wide range of expression and its power. Old Baron Chevrial, the rôle in which he first astonished New York; young Prince Karl, the sentimental humorist; harsh but tender, selfish but heroic Dick Dudgeon, and the everlasting man with two identities but only one soul, (and that a lost one,) Jekyll and Hyde, are all parts Mansfield has acted so many times that current criticism takes small heed of them Yet each year they draw a partly new audience, and probably the larger number of people who saw the portrayals of these rôles last week had never seen them before. Mansfield's popularity is now at its height, and will continue many years, doubtless, unless the unhappy idea should possess him some day (as it so often possesses men and women who have made artistic careers) that the time has come when no further effort is needed to retain the public regard. He still needs at least one good new play every year.

Much stress has been laid by some students of contemporary French literature who admire Paul Hervieu's command of expression, upon the fact that the dénouement of his play called "Les Tenailles" was slightly altered in the English version of it called "Ties," mistakenly offered by Mr. John Blair in his second subscription performance last week. But the alteration made no difference at all in the minds of the spectators. It was a false note, of course, to exhibit Fergan in the act of almost forgiving his wife and admitting his faults at the climax, but there was no charm in the play to be destroyed by that or any other mistake.

However, much literary skill may be employed in France upon the manufacture of such plays as this, (and I firmly believe that the toleration given to such imaginary conversations on the subject of marriage and how to escape it by the present Director of the French national theatre has done more than anything else, by destroying interest in the drama, to bring about the pecuniary troubles of that institution,) it is quite certain that there is nothing in them, even for the élite, the restless, unsatisfied deadheads, in this country. Good actors could have made "Ties" more bearable, of course, but never profitable.

I suppose a lack of money has deterred Mr. Blair from attempting to produce some of the works of surer value which still lie very far from the repertory of the commercial theatre, such as Ibsen's "Little Eyolf" and "Master Builder," Maeterlinck's longer dramas, Sudermann's and Hauptmann's plays. The condensed version of an Echegaray piece which differs from the popular sort of play only in its intolerable dullness, and this set of unholy and drivelling conversations called "Ties" are poor substitutes for works by leaders of a new movement in dramatic art. But to produce such appropriate scenery and the services of good actors are needed.

In "Ties," as in the former play, the burden was borne by two young players who have not yet mastered the rudiments of dramatic expression, and who are both, it is to be feared, in imminent danger of being ruined by flattery. Mr. Blair moves and talks, in every part he undertakes, like a man under the influence of a narcotic. As a fervent and amorous young poet, a police spy of deadly craft and vile passions, a stolid, brutal French husband, he walks, talks, gesticulates in the same monotonous way and exhibits the same striking lack of variety of facial and vocal expression. Yet slow and methodical as his acting always is, he never conveys an idea of strength in repose. He does not lack appreciable personal charm. He has a good face, a pleasing voice, a well-knit frame. With these advantages he ought to develop into an actor of distinction. But he is not traveling on that road at present.

Miss Kahn has something more of the magnetic quality than her vis-à-vis. Her voice is something better, too, than merely pleasing. It is a voice that may fairly be called remarkable. She has perceptible dramatic instinct, and in the one striking situation of Hervieu's piece she produced a coherent effect. But otherwise she simply floundered through the text of her part, sometimes imitating the manner of Mrs. Fiske, which is no fit model for any young actress, sometimes whining and wailing for no perceptible theatric reason at all.

Miss Kahn needs good practical instruction, and above all she needs practical experience. A year or so under the rigid and quite unsentimental discipline of Richard Mansfield's company would do her a world of good.

In spite of the war excitement some of the theatrical dilettante in London have managed to get up considerable public discussion of two schemes. One of these is a proposed actors' association to which every recognized player must belong. All persons registered on the roll of this association are to use the letters F. A. A. (Fellow of the Actors' Association) after their names in all documents and announcements.

A great deal of quiet fun has been made of the scheme, the advantages of which seem at present to be very much in the air. De Wolf Hopper, who is now a personage in London, has been duly "interviewed" concerning it, and impelled to gravely assert his belief that the plan will never work till the critics, too, are licensed and compelled to sign "D. C." after their names.

The other scheme is the perennial Ideal Theatre, on the plan of the repertory playhouses of some of the Continental cities. Such practical men as Bernard Shaw and William Archer are behind this great enterprise, and subscriptions are fairly pouring in. Only the other day one of the newspapers acknowledged the receipt of £5.

THIS WEEK'S NEW BILLS.

An Embarrassment of Riches for the Holiday Night—Three New Plays and a Foreign Star.

The regular company of the Empire Theatre will take possession of its own stage to-morrow night, when a new whimsical comedy in four acts entitled "My Lady's Lord," written by Henry V. Esmond, a young dramatist of whom much is expected, will be acted. This play has been given by Mr. Frohman's actors in other cities lately, and its first performance here may be expected to be uncommonly smooth. The story seems to be original, and if Mr. Esmond's powers of expression have equaled his imagination in this effort, his play should be very interesting.

The cast will include Miss Millward, who has been so effective in every rôle she has undertaken at the Empire, as a proud Princess of a hitherto unknown Duchy, Vasungia; Mr. Faversham as the young English barrister, who falls in love with her; young Wheelock as his friend, Messrs. Benrimo, Standing, Sidney Herbert, and Crompton as nobles and potentates of Vasungia, and Blanche Burton and Sara Perry as ladies of that dominion. The scene is in Vasungia, and at the close the romance is to be abruptly transferred to a little flat in prosaic London.

Mr. Frohman announces that he will produce two other new plays in the new term of the Empire company, which will last till Spring. One of them will be a comedy of New York life by Clyde Fitch. The story of "My Lady's Lord" is told as follows:

The action of the play takes place in the mythical dukedom of Vasungia. The daughter of the Archduke of this province is betrothed to the Prince of Goska. They have never met. The feast of St. Hilda is in progress, and the priest, in accordance with custom, appears twice on the church portico singing this invocation:

Come, men and maidens all,
Come at St. Hilda's call.
Happiness awaits you!
Marriage means joy on joy,
Safe from dull care's alloy
Kisses can never cloy,
When Hilda mates you!

Hilda, it seems, was in love with a young man who died early, and she lived a long and lonesome life of spinsterhood. To prevent anything like that occurring again, the feast of St. Hilda was instituted to be celebrated twice a year, the church to be kept open on the feast days from sunrise to sunset and the priest to invite men and maidens to come in and be married without question and without fee.

The Archduke's daughter, the Lady Doura, who has been in London, is returning to her father's castle after a ride with her friend Katrina. An English barrister, Jack Martin, is in love with her. He met her in Hyde Park, and having learned that her home was in Vasungia, has followed her and is making inquiries for her. The Lady Doura meets the Prince of Goska, who, ignorant of her identity, but charmed with her beauty, makes love to her and asks her to come to Vasungia's palace as the Lady Doura's chambermaid, after his marriage with Doura has taken place. The Prince's promiscuity of affection piques Doura, who, meeting Jack Martin a few moments later and hearing the priest's invocation in behalf of St. Hilda, agrees to marry the barrister. They proceed hand in hand into the church, where the marriage ceremony is performed. After their union, Doura haughtily disdains to notice the Englishman and sends him about his business.

Then comes Jack Martin's romantic struggle to get possession of his wife, who is separated from him by the high walls and alert soldiers that guard the Vasungia palace. The wedding of Doura and the Prince of Goska is in preparation. It is the afternoon of the day when the marriage is to be solemnized. The Archduke and the guests are feasting in the banquet hall. Doura in her room refuses to present herself at the feast. She does not wish to marry Goska, and says so. Her father fumes and threatens, but she does not care. He sends for her often, but in vain. Finally she consents after a long delay to make her appearance at the banquet.

Jack Martin, who has gained entrance to the palace yard, encounters her on the way and insists that she cannot wed the Prince, as she is already married. He begs her to fly with him to his London flat and be happy. She scorns him, and says that if he does not leave the palace grounds forthwith she will turn him over to the guard and order him shot. The appearance of the Archduke and his guests, who emerge from the banquet hall, saves Jack from arrest. He hides behind a stone settee, and while there later on hears a plot devised by Goska to carry off the Lady Doura by force that very night.

In the action that follows Jack Martin prevents the consummation of Goska's plans. There is a fierce encounter between himself and the Prince, in which Jack is badly wounded. In this condition he is found in the Lady Doura's room, and ordered by the Archduke to be shot at daybreak. The hour of execution is at hand when the Lady Doura, still apparently indifferent to her husband's fate, hears through Katrina and an English friend of Jack's the story of his mad love for her. While this narrative is in progress a squad of soldiers appears with the condemned man handcuffed. They are on the way to the place of execution. By a ruse Doura prevents the shooting, obtains Jack's pardon, gives him her heart and again her hand, and the last seen and heard of them they are discussing the particulars of Jack Martin's little flat and its furnishings, and Doura seems to be overjoyed at the prospect soon becoming the queen of the unpretentious but happy home.

At the Knickerbocker Theatre Mr. Nat Goodwin and Miss Maxine Elliott will begin their annual engagement to-morrow night, presenting Clyde Fitch's comedy-drama called "The Cowboy and the Lady," which has been acted in London and in some of the American cities, too. Mr. Goodwin's company this year includes Charles Scott, Cuyler Hastings, Thomas Oberle, Burr McIntosh, Nell O'Brien, Clarence Handyside, Minnie Dupree, Gertrude Gheen, and Estelle Mortimer.

In the new play Goodwin appears as Teddy North, a Harvard man, who had gone West and become a cowboy, and Miss Elliott is Mrs. Weston, a lady whom he meets under distressing circumstances. The story of the play is told as follows:

Teddy, with a comrade, has established a ranch and is surrounded by a band of typical cowboys. There is also the Bret Harte girl who can shoot a rifle, ride a horse, and scalp an Indian, and with whom all the "boys" are in love. Into this camp come Mr. and Mrs. Weston, who take up their residence in the nearest mining town. Weston is a villain and his wife a beauty. North falls in love with her, while Weston becomes entangled in a liaison with a frail creature who is the sweetheart of Jim, a half breed.

At a dance in a music hall at Silverville North and Weston quarrel over North's protégée, the orphan girl of the camp, with whom Weston had attempted liberties. North threatens to kill Weston, but is restrained by Mrs. Weston. Jim, who has been concealed, overhears Weston planning to run off with his sweetheart. He turns out the lights and in the dark shoots Weston, and makes his escape through his sweetheart's room. North and Mrs. Weston re-enter the room simultaneously and come upon the body of Mr. Weston.

North, thinking the woman has murdered her husband, and to shield her, declares that he shot Weston himself. He is arrested, and the third and last act comprises a court scene in which evidence is heard and the case argued by the District Attorney and by North in his own defense, with the result that he is convicted of murder in the first degree. But the curtain falls upon North vindicated and he and Mrs. Weston united.

Felix Schweighofer, the celebrated German comedian, will begin his engagement at the Irving Place Theatre to-morrow night in Costa's farce, called "Ein Blitzmaedel," ("A Telegraph Girl.") Thursday night he will be seen in Morro's "'S Nullerl." In the first his rôle is comic. His powers of more serious characterization will be illustrated in the other piece. In "Ein Blitzmaedel" he plays the part of Leo Brueller, a chorus singer. A telegraph girl, Caroline, the betrothed of Rudolf Kern, would like to secure the position of secretary in the telegraph office for her intended. The same position is wanted by a stupid nobleman. Brueller, who is desirous of helping the girl, ascertains that Baron von Junaz, the uncle of the nobleman, intends to call upon some prominent persons, to interest high officials in favor of his nephew. Brueller, who knows the peculiarities of these people, visits them also in company with Caroline, introducing himself in different characters. On the first he calls as an abbé, on the second as a ballet master, and on the third as an old student. He knows how to touch their weak sides, and quickly gains their favor and promise for the appointment of his protégé. Among those in the principal parts will be Anna Leonardi, Meta Buenger, Wilhelmine Schlüter, Georg Raselt, Edmund Hanno, Gustav Olmar, and Gustav von Seyffertitz.

"Three Little Lambs," a comical musical piece, with words by R. A. Barnet and music by E. W. Corliss, will be produced by Mr. Knowles at the Fifth Avenue Theatre to-morrow night. There is said to be a coherent story in this piece, the plot of which turns on a whimsical will.

Jack Harwicke is to have all his departed uncle's money if he will behave himself for a whole year. But Jack is scarcely able to be a good boy for twenty-four hours at a stretch. The money must therefore go to the danseuse his uncle once met, and whom he made his alternative legatee. As this lady is Jack's sweetheart, his misfortune is not great, but Jack does not discover the identity of the other legatee until the end of the play, which is not too serious in any part, we may imagine.

On the contrary, it is believed to be filled with odd conceits and to contain many merry hits at prevailing fads. The "advanced" woman, for instance, is caricatured in a bank with a female directorate. Golf is made much fun of.

The scenery and dresses, they say, will be of the showiest description, while the female chorus will be numerous and comely. The distributions of the principal parts will include Adele Ritchie, Nellie Braggins, Marie Cahill, Clara Palmer, Ida Hawley, Gerry Ames, Suzanne Santjo, W. E. Philp, Raymond Hitchcock, W. T. Carleton, Edmund Lawrence, Richard Ridgely, Thomas Whiffen, Harold Vizard, and Tom Hadaway.

For Christmas week at the Fourteenth Street Theatre, Mr. Rosenquest will revive Alice Ives and Jerome Eddy's comic drama of old New England life, called "A Village Postmaster." A new scenic dress, new singers, and dancers for the musical scenes, and a competent company are expected to give a new lease of life to the play, which has been very successful on the road this season. The cast will include Archie Boyd, Tom Maguire, Edith Barker, Charlotte Deane, and many others.

"WHEELS WITHIN WHEELS."

A Chapter on the Dresses and a Woman's Impressions of the Play.

The gown that Miss Hilda Spong wears as Mrs. Onslow Bulmer in the first act of "Wheels Within Wheels," is a "dream." That is exactly the expression the women in the audience use when they first catch a glimpse of it. Then they follow it up with other adjectives, not very many, but the same old adjectives that have to do such hard service, and which means that for the time being no one ever saw anything that was quite so altogether charming. Miss Spong, in fact, is pursued with adjectives all through the play, and when she and the audience make a final exit, there is a final splutter of adjectives like the last crackling sparks of a fire-works exhibition.

But that gown is worth adjectives. If Mrs. Robert Osborne, who designed the gowns for this play, never conceives the idea for another she can well rest on her laurels. The foundation of the gown is gray chiffon, perfectly plain, princesse, with just a chiffon flounce with fluffy edges at the lower edge of the skirt. But all that is simply the foundation, which only shows its color effect and the edges of that flounce, for over it, sheathing the whole gown, is a covering of black net embroidered with large cut steel flowers. There is no effect of the black, however, only a perfectly fitting gray gown, a mass of steel embroidery without a single bow, a single line of anything to mar the simplicity of the outline and the beautiful effect of the material.

It is a décolleté gown without sleeves. It would appear lower cut but for the strings upon strings of fine steel beads which form the most effective finish possible to the decollatage, make a bracelet sleeve across one arm, and are gathered upon the right shoulder to hang in heavy twisted cords almost to the elbow of the right arm.

The gown clings, clings, clings everywhere softly to the figure and yet it is altogether a decent, modest gown, only effective. There is not a bit of color about it, the only ornaments a diamond comb in the hair, but nothing else from those many strings of beads at the neck to the steel fringe at the edge of the skirt, which does not flare, but whose fullness falls softly around the feet and into the train.

It would be interesting to know what men think of a gown like this. What they think of Miss Spong in it can be taken for granted, for she is altogether charming, particularly as she stands at the grand pianet purloining the dangerous letter with the firelight falling on her pretty round arms. Elbows are such uncertain quantities! There are a good many pretty women on the stage who, with otherwise pretty arms, might do well to wear bracelets over their elbows. But Miss Spong's are altogether irreproachable, and no one could take exception to them or to her in that gown. But men are so apt not to think those things that they ought to think in regard to gowns that are really beautiful from a feminine standpoint, and to think those things they ought not to think in regard to what are ugly from a woman's point of view that they cannot be judged by any reliable standard, and they do not use adjectives freely.

Men certainly, according to all precedent, should admire the second gown that Mrs. Bulmer wears. That is a gown all of big red flowers and lace. An afternoon gown undoubtedly, a little gorgeous perhaps, but Mrs. Onslow Bulmer has nothing Quakerish in her disposition. It is a handsome gown of silk with enormous great crimson roses. The foundation of this gown is low cut in the bodice and without sleeves. The bodice is made with a little bolero, fitting perfectly snug—alternate rows of heavy lace and the silk running across the back curving up into the short round bolero effect in the front. Here is a soft tan chiffon drawn up from the waist to the transparent collar of the same material, while a broad piece of the shirred chiffon crosses the bust from the edges of the bolero and fastens in a big chou at one side. The sleeves are of the shirred chiffon with a cap set in of the silk and lace, the chiffon wrinkles a little more fully at the wrists.

Narrow panels of the silk with the big crimson roses run down the centre of both the front and back of the skirt, and have almost the appearance of real flowers. Over the hips the heavy lace is solid and sheath-like, and then tapers off into narrow panels, almost points, between which appear the more delicate parts of the pattern of the silk, rosebuds on a delicate ground. Below this is a flounce of the lace with the big roses appearing at intervals set in underneath. It is altogether a handsome gown, if not exactly of the style that every woman would care to wear.

The gray velvet evening coat that Miss Spong wears over her steel gown is also charming, with its loose sleeves of the ruched chiffon, high collar lined with the same, only with finer needlework, the edges of the coat faced with ruched chiffon, while a heavy cord of it passes around the back, giving a yoke effect, and across the front, where it ties and falls to the feet.

The first gown that Miss Grace Elliston wears as Lady Curtoys is absolutely charming. Lady Curtoys is a simple little mouse of a creature. To be sure, she does in a cool, calculating fashion things that a reckless, daring woman would hesitate about; but it is the innocent, girlish little woman who is dressed, and nothing could be more appropriate for the character than that little frock of white chiffon. There are innumerable complications in the needlework, but the effect is simplicity itself.

With the exception of the lace yoke and two plain little flounces on the skirt, every bit of the frock is a mass of the most minute shirrings. The skirt is a sheath of it, perfectly plain to the knee, when it seems to change its course a little, and, while still plain and smooth, has the effect of a fitted flounce. Below that there are four narrow flounces, alternating one plain and one shirred. The bodice is a simple little bloused affair, though of the solid shirred chiffon. It blouses a little in the back, and the front blouses a little more. There is a yoke of the heavy cream lace, cut low and round at the throat, in a way that is charming when it can be worn, but most difficult to wear. Miss Elliston is very pretty in it, with the simple string of pearl beads that she wears, her only other ornament a lorgnette and chain, which is clasped with a big turquois in front. The sleeves are perfectly plain of the shirring, with a simple band of lace at the lower edge just below the elbow.

The gown in which Lady Curtoys starts unwillingly to elope is also attractive. It is a plain little tan cloth gown, the skirt long and perfectly plain, and the coat half long, rounding away from the front to the back, which is longer. There is a broad falling collar, cut a little open at the neck, and edged with a band of dark Persian trimming, while two bands edge the sleeves. The white silk and gold blouse which is worn under the coat works into the color scheme, for it has a band of the Persian trimming around the upper edge of the collar, and the little chemisette of gold cloth shows at the opening of the throat.

Mrs. Bulmer wears a black coat, lined with white satin, and a big black hat, with plumes, when she starts after her runaway sister-in-law. Lady Curtoys wears in that act with her tan suit a hat something in the nature of a toque, but rather larger, made of rose shading, from tan to darker tones, with loops of the Persian trimming.

The gowns are all effective, and they attract an unusual amount of attention from the women in the audience. The whole play does, for that matter. If it is difficult to assume what gowns will please a man, it is equally difficult to know what kind of a play will please a woman. Certainly no one would have called "Wheels Within Wheels" a "woman's play," but women are expressing an unusual amount of enthusiasm over it. They leave the theatre saying, with real pleasure, "That is a good play."

One young woman who saw the play the other evening may have put it all in a nutshell. A man of the party came in late and lost most of the first act, so she told it to him, that he might not lose the thread of the play, and told it with a good memory for detail. Then, as she closed the story, she exclaimed in those high, gushing tones in which some girls speak:

"I do love those English comedies. They are so very bright and very much to the point."

"Very bright and very much to the point!" That's it, undoubtedly.

VARIOUS DRAMATIC TOPICS.

Robert Taber seems to be contemplating an extended experiment in theatrical management in London. Besides his already announced term at the historic Adelphi Theatre with a play called "D'Arcy of the Guards," he is to have a new drama by Laurence Irving, which is to be both romantic and historical, and is to treat of Claverhouse, the famous Scotch hero. Mr. Irving, who is now traveling in this country with Sir Henry, said the other day to a reporter: "Both my father and I believe that Mr. Taber is destined to do great things in the theatrical world." Others are of the same opinion. Perhaps Robert Taber will be a great Macbeth, Othello, and Lear in the first quarter of the twentieth century.

The Bush Street Theatre, in San Francisco, recently destroyed by fire, had a picturesque and interesting history. It was built in 1860. For years it was the foremost playhouse in the city. But for many years thereafter it was in a state of decay. It had been called in its time the Alhambra and Maguire's New Theatre.

James L. Ford's new melodrama, provisionally entitled "The Defender," will be produced in Chicago by Jacob Litt next April. Mr. Ford has lately written in collaboration with Lorimer Stoddard a play in which Andrew Mack will appear next season, and a dramatization of Daudet's "Sapho," in which Sadie Martinot was to have starred under W. A. Brady's management. That arrangement, however, is now "off," and the authors have found another star.

"The Royal Box," the late Charles Coghlan's version of the "Kean" of the elder Dumas, is still on tour. Andrew Robson has taken up the rôle of Clarence, while the dead actor's daughter, Gertrude, is now appearing as Celia Pryce.

The supply of more recent plays having given out, one of the Western stock companies, the Thanhouser of Milwaukee, has revived the old version of Octave Feuillet's "Romance of a Poor Young Man." The play seems to have been well received. It was last produced here at the end of Lester Wallack's long term of management, in 1887, and was transferred from his stage to Daly's for a few weeks in the Spring. The cast included Kyrle Bellew as Manuel, Annie Robe as Marguerite, Harry Edwards as Dr. Desmarets, and E. J. Henley as Gaspard. The performances did not seem to revive much interest in the old play. It was very popular, however, during H. L. Montague's engagement at Wallack's, in 1875, when Montague's Manuel was associated with the Dr. Desmarets of John Gilbert, the Gaspard of John W. Carroll, and the Marguerite of Ada Dyas, and the cast also included J. B. Polk and Mme. Ponisi, with Mabel Leonard in the child's part.

A new play by Francis Powers, author of "The First Born," has just been produced at the Alcazar Theatre in San Francisco. It is in two acts, its scene is in Mexico, and it is called "Mother Earth." It tells a tale of love and murder in the same violent, vivid, and picturesque manner as Powers's Chinese drama, which, all London criticism to the contrary, was vastly more powerful and lifelike than C. B. Fernald's "Cat and the Cherub." The characters in "Mother Earth" seem to be elemental, the action swift, and the effect cumulative. The feeling for pictorial effect is said to be as strong in this as it was in its author's previous work. It is to be hoped that the piece will have a hearing in New York. Mr. Powers is already a dramatist to be reckoned with.

Augustus Thomas's new play for Stuart Robson, "Oliver Goldsmith," may be set down as one of the season's triumphs out of town. Robson is said to have a most congenial rôle as the poet, and to act it with rare sympathy and skill. With this play and the same author's "Arizona" drawing crowds, with the notable success of Fitch's "Barbara Frietchie," the prodigious vogue of William Young's dramatization of "Ben-Hur," and the eager acceptance of Gillette's new play, this season cannot be said to be a particularly bad one thus far, for plays of native manufacture.

"Why, in the name of Glory," which is a quotation from Keats and not slang, if the crypt of Carnegie Hall is to be used for theatrical performances, do they not hang a less comical curtain on its stage? The present sliding curtain of stiff canvas (or is it tin?) destroys the illusion of the acted play every time it is used. It begins to growl as soon as the buzzer gives the "curtain" signal, as if objecting audibly to so much hard work at its time of life. Its harsh remarks break in upon the sobs of the heroine, which give the silent prompter his cue, and distract the minds of the audience, if, indeed, the people who habitually attend performances of problem plays at Carnegie Lyceum ever take their minds with them. Also, it sadly offends the eye.

The drollest thing about these crypt theatricals, however, is the character of the audience. The American Representative of Realism in Literature is always on hand, and is much in demand. In the long and comparatively lively interludes of social chatter he is escorted around by lesser lights of literature to be introduced to their female companions. That he really enjoys himself is not credible, but he performs his function as advocate of tedious and strictly conversational drama with a commendable show of cheerfulness. Not all the audience, however, are of this kind, though you'll find at such performances as many rather noteworthy spectators as are generally seen at entertainments, free tickets for which are plentiful. The majority, though, are folks who very rarely see a play, whose judgment is not worth a pinch of snuff, and who are generally at pains to get as much pleasure as possible out of their unaccustomed treat. The number of pretty and innocent young women one generally sees at these performances of problem plays is amazing. Among them all are always a few old stagers, who get more fun out of the thing than all the others combined. Oh, the world has not grown altogether dull!

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

BIJOU THEATRE.—May Irwin is now in her third month in "Sister Mary."

DALY'S THEATRE.—"The Manoeuvres of Jane" begins the second month of its career at this house.

GRAND OPERA HOUSE.—James A. Herne's play of "Shore Acres" begins its second and last week.

THIRD AVENUE THEATRE.—"Under the Dome," the naval comedy drama, will be the Christmas week attraction.

NEW YORK THEATRE.—"The Man in the Moon" will be revived for a two weeks' engagement, beginning to-morrow night.

MURRAY HILL THEATRE.—Belasco's and De Mille's "Men and Women" will be the offering of the Donnelly Stock Company Christmas week.

ACADEMY OF MUSIC.—"Way Down East" and its vivid pictures of New England life afford enjoyment to large audiences, who have been patronizing the piece.

GARDEN THEATRE.—Richard Mansfield to-morrow evening reappears as Eugene Courvoisier in the dramatization of Jessie Fothergill's story of musical life in Germany, "The First Violin."

WALLACK'S THEATRE.—"The Ameer" continues to enjoy large business through the joint attractive powers of Frank Daniels and his new operetta. There will be an extra matinée to-morrow.

MADISON SQUARE THEATRE.—"Wheels Within Wheels," R. C. Carton's comedy, begins the third week of an engagement which has so far enjoyed great prosperity, and evidently has a long run ahead of it.

CASINO.—"The Singing Girl" enters on its last fortnight, having nearly reached the limit of its allotted time in New York. The new songs introduced on the occasion of the one hundredth performance Friday, were extremely well received.

HARLEM OPERA HOUSE.—Mrs. Leslie Carter will celebrate the completion of her first year of "Zaza" by bringing the play home to New York Christmas night, when she will begin a week's engagement, giving one matinée on Saturday.

GARRICK THEATRE.—William Gillette continues to play "Sherlock Holmes" to the capacity of the theatre. During the next two weeks extra matinées each week, one on Christmas Day and the other on New Year's Day, will be given.

HERALD SQUARE THEATRE.—For the two holiday weeks the management will present Primrose and Dockstadter and their company. The entire entertainment will be in black face and strictly in accordance with the original form of negro minstrelsy.

BROADWAY THEATRE.—"Ben Hur" seems to have become a special Christmas attraction, where nightly the largest audience that the theatre can possibly hold gather to witness this dramatic spectacle. A special matinée will be played to-morrow afternoon.

LYCEUM THEATRE.—Miss Annie Russell's successful season in "Miss Hobbs" will continue until Jan. 20. Matinées will be given on Christmas and New Year's afternoons, and there will be, besides, the regular Thursday and Saturday matinées.

MANHATTAN THEATRE.—One of the honest and well-deserved successes of the season is that of Anna Held in "Papa's Wife." There will be a special Christmas matinée to-morrow, and the only Wednesday matinée of the season is announced for Jan. 10.

CRITERION THEATRE.—This is the last week but one of Miss Julia Marlowe's engagement in "Barbara Frietchie." The final performance will be given Saturday, Jan. 6, and on the following Tuesday Miss Maude Adams will begin an engagement of two months.

THEATRE COMIQUE. — The return to burlesque performances has met with emphatic popular favor. The bill for this week is the "Bohemian Burlesquers," headed by "Billy" Van, Miss Norbriga, and others well known in their various lines. Farima, the Oriental dancer, is retained.

WEBER & FIELDS'S MUSIC HALL.—The performance to-morrow night will have a special significance. It will have been just twenty-one years ago then since Weber and Fields entered upon their stage career together, and after the performance the members of the company will be the guests of the actor-managers at a small reception on the stage.

DEWEY THEATRE.—There will be an olio of vaudeville acts and a burletta entitled "A Tin Wedding" on the programme. In the olio will appear the Manhattan Comedy Four, after Anna Lults and her company, Howard and Bland, Hayes and Bandy, Anderson and Company, Russell and Tillyne, and Ruby Marlon.

PROCTOR'S PALACE.—The up-town patrons of vaudeville will find a plentiful supply in Mr. Proctor's programme at the Palace on Christmas Day, which includes the Hungarian Band, Press Eldridge, Conway and Leland, acrobats; Alden and Hill, ragtime entertainers; the kalatechnoscope, Mlle. Flora, Barry and Bannon, Zaro, and Mlle. Hilda, and many more.

KEITH'S UNION SQUARE THEATRE.—This week will be the last of "The Girl with the Auburn Hair," and it will be the second and last week of Joseph Hart, Carrie De Mar, and of Adelaide Herrmann. The new features will be Canfield and Carleton, Hilda Thomas, Charles T. Aldrich, the Cardownie troupe of dancers, and Cyrus Dare, a parlor entertainer.

EDEN MUSEE.—New moving pictures have been placed on exhibition, representing four series of pictures, illustrating Cinderella's Slipper. Nearly a half hour is taken to show the pictures, during which time over 50,000 separate pictures are flashed upon the screen. In addition, Tills's Marionettes will give afternoon and evening performances, and new wax groups are shown.

HURTIG & SEAMON'S MUSIC HALL.—An interesting programme has been prepared for this week, which includes Pauline Hall, Lizzie Evans and Harry Mills, the sketch artists; Carl Daman Troupe, the European acrobats; "The Three Goldens," in a plantation sketch; "The Fansons," Billy Link, the monologist; Bennett and Kessner, the Irish song team, and Wormwood's trained dogs and monkeys.

HAMMERSTEIN'S VICTORIA. — "The Rogers Brothers in Wall Street" will end their engagement next Saturday night, and but seven more performances remain of their stay at this playhouse, where they have held the stage for a long time. Wednesday evening they celebrate their one hundredth performance in their present entertaining vehicle. Handsome and useful souvenirs will be presented.

PROCTOR'S THEATRE.—Christmas Day will be celebrated from 10 A. M. until 11 P. M. with a programme of popular vaudeville stars, headed by Marshall P. Wilder, who promises a new monologue. Others in this continuous programme will be Jennie Yeamans, Bertha Welby, and Master Welby in the playlet, "A Little Brick"; Dick and Alice McAvoy, "Joe" O'Hare, kalatechnoscope, with new moving pictures; Herbert and Willing, Maxwell and Dudley, Anna Teresa Berger, cornet soloiste, and many others.

HUBER'S MUSEUM. — Christmas week will be signalized by a bill extraordinarily long. The holiday features will be numerous, and will be continued throughout the week. Victorine, the European woman sword swallower, will head the bill in the curio hall; Francisco Lentine, the three-legged wonder, will be another member of the bill; Setunka, the Hindu fakir; Wilson, the expansionist; Amelia Hill, the Indian fat girl; Hans Delan, strong man; Allen's Punch, and a host of others will also be seen in the curio halls. In the theatre the double vaudeville company will appear.

KOSTER & BIAL'S MUSIC HALL.—For Christmas week the management has arranged an all-star bill. Miss Gertrude Haynes and her "Choir Celestial" are among the new features. Besides her is Miss Henrieth Paer, a singer, who will make her American début; La Fafalla, another foreign feature, who will be seen for the first time, and the Halloways, high-wire acrobats. Others in the bill are, besides these, the De Forests, the Beaumont sisters, Helen Marvin, Marie Dressler, and Adele Farrington, in their sketch, "Olivette"; Madge Fox, Felix and Barry, and John W. Ransome.

NOTES OF THE FOREIGN STAGE.

When Coquelin comes to New York with Sarah Bernhardt next Autumn he will act Polonius, (not the Ghost,) to her Hamlet. Famous actors in modern times who have taken up the rôle of the senile Lord Chamberlain in special performances of "Hamlet" have not done much with it. John Gilbert was Polonius in the performance of "Hamlet" for the benefit of Lester Wallack at the Metropolitan Opera House in the Spring of 1888, and was decidedly inferior to some of better-known Poloniuses of the stage in that hour, Henry Howe, for instance, or Charles Fisher, or Ben Rogers. Couldock had reverted to the rôle, in which he had been esteemed of great merit, a year previously in the support of Booth and Salvini without adding perceptibly to his artistic reputation. Possart, acting in German, of course, was Polonius to the Hamlet of Barnay at the old Bowery Theatre, (the Thalia,) something more than ten years ago. His portrayal was sadly overwrought and mistaken. Bernhardt, as already announced, will act Roxane to Coquelin's Cyrano. The chance to hear the voices of these two great artists in the original French poetry of Rostand will be highly prized. If Moreau's new play, "Lilleburlo," in which Coquelin is to act the infamous Judge Jeffreys, succeeds at the Porte St. Martin in Paris, where it will be produced in January, it will be included in the repertory of this tour. "Lilleburlo" is the title of a famous political ballad of the day of Monmouth's rebellion. Coquelin is now about fifty-nine years old. Mme. Bernhardt's age is fifty-five years.

The wise theatrical chronicler of one of the London "great dailies" marvels because "no English play has ever been written on the subject of Rienzi." Alas, for the memory of Mary Russell Mitford! Miss Mitford's once-famous tragedy, by the way, was revived by Lawrence Barrett in the eighties. Beerbohm Tree has a new play on the old subject. The late W. G. Wills left an unacted "Rienzi" in manuscript.

Mrs. Craigie (John Oliver Hobbes) intends to devote herself to play writing hereafter, it seems. She has in hand a new comedy for George Alexander, and a piece intended to fit the powers of expression of Winifred Emery and her husband, (Cyril Maude.)

W. Davenport Adams's "Dictionary of the Drama," long since announced, is now in press in London. It will cover the stage of both England and America. Davenport Adams is well enough known as a theatrical historian to make students of the stage interested in this work.

Molière's "Le Festin de la Pierre" ("Don Juan") was acted in English for the first time by the Elizabethan Stage Society in Lincoln's Inn, London, Dec. 15. It is said that the play has not been acted in France for twenty years. Mansfield's "Don Juan," produced in 1891, owed much to Molière's play.

Violet Vanbrugh is to have a chance for which she has long been waiting in the revival of "Dandy Dick" at Wyndham's Theatre in London. She is to have the rôle of Georgiana Tidman, "created" by Mrs. John Wood and acted here by Ada Rehan. Her sister, Irene, has taken a place in the front rank of the London actresses lately because of her successful performance of Sophie Fulgarney in "The Gay Lord Quex."

The Passion plays at Oberammergau are to commence next Summer, as they did ten years ago, with a general rehearsal open to visitors, on May 20. There will be twenty-seven performances between May 24 and Sept. 30. Each performance will begin at 8 A. M. and last till 5 P. M., including an hour for dinner. Ten years ago the nearest railway station was Oberau, whence the visitors had to drive. Now they can go by a narrow-gauge line as far as Oberammergau itself. Board and lodging have been amply provided for, and the inhabitants of Oberammergau hope that the performances will be well attended, especially by English and Americans.

The farce called "Jane," from the French of "Pretez moi ta femme," which had such a long run here with Johnstone Bennett in the title rôle, has been revived at Terry's Theatre in London.

The condition of the theatrical business in London is evidently very bad. The scarcity of good plays, reckless over-competition, and the depression following the war excitement have greatly diminished the attendance at all the playhouses.

A farce called "Shakespeare," at the Bouffes Parisiens, has nothing to do with the "Divine Williams." Shakespeare is only a dog. The scene is laid in Gibraltar. One Miguel has vainly attempted to recapture Gibraltar from the British and is condemned to death. A stay of sentence has been secured by the wife of the Governor. Consuelo, a dancer, who loves Miguel, is consequently very jealous of the Governor's wife. With the help of two French travelers, she concocts a plan to rescue Miguel from death and the lady at the same time. Disguised as three English travelers Consuelo and her friends gain admittance to the fortress. Then the three English folks themselves appear and the complications thicken in a conventional but mirthful way. The dog appears in the last act.

Mrs. Langtry has been acting the principal part in a new one-act play by Charles Brookfield called "Comrades in Khaki," which, of course, is timely and military. Mrs. Langtry appears as a hospital nurse. Her American tour will begin at the Garden Theatre in this city Jan. 15.

Haddon Chambers, whose "Tyranny of Tears" exhibited his extraordinary development as a dramatist, has just finished a new play called "The Awakening." This is said to be a drama of passion rather than a "comedy of temperament."

In the Musical World

The annual glorification of opera singers began at the Metropolitan Opera House last Monday night. The musical world has now come to a standstill, and the mystic power, personality, reigns where sometimes sat the goddess of beauty. But potent as is the charm of personality, it cannot account for the whole of the popularity of opera as a form of public entertainment. There must be something in the thing itself to attract men and women in such droves. Even if it is to be regarded only as an instrument on which singers play and through which they project their personalities upon the public, it must be conceded to differ from other instruments in the extent of its influence.

It is not a statement that may be made with anticipation of quick assent, but it is one that will be found difficult to disprove, that opera is the lowest form of music. The highest form of music is naturally one in which the laws of musical art find their fullest demonstration. This form can be only one of absolute music—that is, music unaccompanied or explained by a text. The moment an art ceases to be independent, self-reliant, it necessarily steps down from the ideal position. This is most especially the case with music because it is the most dissociated from the outer world. Music, as has often been noted, has no natural types from which to copy. Nature does not produce a single element of the materials employed in the structure of music. The whole thing is an abstract embodiment of the aesthetic part of man's nature, an embodiment entirely conceived and made by man himself.

Poetry, painting, and sculpture find their materials outside of themselves. They are to this extent dependent arts. Music is absolutely independent. During centuries of its most active growth there was not any large or well-defined attempt on the part of its makers to transform it into a vehicle for expression. Pure musical beauty was all that was sought and it was not till composers realized the power of music to stir the feelings of the hearers that systematic endeavors began looking toward the causation of defined emotions. These attempts went as far as it seemed to be possible for them to go in the symphony and sonata. The beginning of the composition of programme music was a distinct step downward. It was a step which opened to music a wide and pleasing field, but it was away from the perfect purity of the art.

The high forms of absolute music make serious demands upon the intellectual regard of the hearer, for they are themselves the results of concentrated intellectual effort. The manifestations of design in music are to be sought in the structural features of a composition. These in their turn require of the hearer strict attention to the development of the thoughts on which the work is founded. In the fugue, for instance, the duty of the hearer toward the composition is almost entirely intellectual. The processes of musical development employed in the composition of a fugal piece are such as call for analytic thought on the part of the hearer.

Again in the sonata the organism is so highly perfected that the listener who does not perceive the outlines of the form, the frame of the work, misses more than one-half the composer's thought. And this is not true only of the sonata, but of all highly wrought compositions. The laws of musical form must be obeyed unless mere chaos is to be the result. Let any one who doubts this study the construction of Schumann's fantasia in C major, one of the grandest expositions of romantic thought and free method. He will find that some of the most subtle and beautiful processes of thematic development are employed in it, and that in its fundamentals it follows the laws on which the sonata rest, although in outline it is altogether different.

It is because of these facts that absolute music appeals almost wholly to the truly musical, and the superficial do not like it. In the opera most of the forms in which it is possible to write absolute music are worse than useless. The music must follow the text. It must become simply a setting. Hence it must sacrifice its power of independent development. It cannot reach its highest forms. Thus the opera is distinctly a low form of music, for in it music ceases to be supreme, to exist for its own sake. It is no longer an end, but a means. Why is it, then, that the opera is the most influential of all forms of musical production?

Almost might this question be answered by saying, because it is not the highest form. Popularity is never associated with the loftiest things in art. To court the favor of the multitude art must descend from the level of its ideals and seek to tickle the fancy of those who are seeking amusement and not necessarily edification. To meet the demands of these the intellectual element in music must be reduced, or at least thrown into the background. What then is to be brought forward? Plainly the power of music to awaken emotion.

While there are still many who deny that music has power to express emotion, there are very few who refuse to perceive its ability to arouse it. And this power of the tone art is that which is to be employed with tremendous influence in opera. In all the music of the modern romantic school there has been a constant and definite effort to convey to the hearer the train of emotion felt by the composer in the conception of the work. The whole character of the romantic school is determined by the constancy and the breadth of this effort. But the movement fails to reach the end which the average listener desires. The reception of a large and indefinite mood picture is not easy to the average hearer. What he wants is detail, and that is just what music cannot give. It is not possible to tell a story in music, nor is it possible to give the antecedents of any particular emotion. The composer is limited to the expression of a mood. He cannot convey to the hearer the causes which produced the mood.

In absolute music, then, the large mood picture is the most definite achievement of the musical creator. If the listener be content to accept the intellectual elements of the art with which the moods are embodied, the composer is appreciated. If the hearer possess sufficient imagination to follow the composer into the conception of his emotional schedule, there is an appreciation heightened by love and a perfect sympathy.

But the average hearer is neither imaginative nor intellectual. He is merely fanciful, and if he finds himself in the midst of indefinites, he might as well be in the midst of infinities. For this reason programme music becomes at once a pleasant and an easy method of conveying emotional moods to the mass of hearers. Given a definite scheme which can be indicated either by a title referring the plan of the piece to some well-known play or poem, or a programme note telling the story of the source of the composer's inspiration, and the imagination of the hearer is assisted to a correct conception of the emotional content of the music. Every one knows how general is the habit of imagining some kind of a story behind a piece of music. Ask a dozen persons to tell you what an andante by Beethoven suggests to them, and almost every one of them will construct for you some fanciful little tale, which he thinks he has discovered in the music.

How much easier, then, it is for the mass of unmusical listeners to enjoy and even to reach something like appreciation of the music of an opera. For here is a work in which there are no musical forms that need to be comprehended, though such comprehension adds to the enjoyment of the thing. If the listener gets the full benefit of the emotional power of the music, he is stimulated and fascinated. And how is he to miss the composer's emotional intent? For the play proceeds before his eyes; the actions which the composer seeks to put into the emotional schedule of his score are set forth in the text. The story of the music is told with all the potency of dramatic art, and the listener is spared all effort of the imagination. He receives to the full all the details for which in absolute music he hungers in vain.

And he is insensibly guided to a right point of view of the music. The business of music in opera is to set forth in tones the moods which are to be found in the text. The very best test to which operatic music can be submitted is that of the meaning of the book. If the music is suitable to the spirit of the text, it is well conceived and its aim is artistic, though it may not always be successful in combining true musical beauty with appropriateness. In general, however, when the score does faithfully convey to the hearer the emotional content of the text, it is a good score and is prolific in genuine musical beauty. When the composer produces pretty tunes at the expense of fidelity to the text, he makes a confession of weakness, and in removing music from its true sphere in the opera he deprives it of its artistic reason for existence. The business of music in opera is the creation of mood pictures of a higher potency than those which can be produced by the employment of a spoken dialogue.

The popularity of the opera, then, is plainly traceable to the fact that the hearer is provided with the definite images which he is anxious to receive from all music, and which, through indolence or ignorance, he strives to substitute for a perception of the working out of an intellectual design in absolute music. And singer worship is chiefly due to the belief on the part of the public that the performer is the creator of the emotional power which is so plainly felt. But the lever which moves the operatic world is not the singer; it is what he sings.

The musical editor of THE TIMES receives a great many curious letters, most of which are read in silence and tears for the ignorance of the writers. An old reader, however, wrote one a few days ago which did not seem to the editor to merit either silence or tears, although at first glance it appeared to contain a strange request. The correspondent desired the musical editor of THE TIMES to publish a list of piano pieces which are considered the most difficult of interpretation, compositions which, while requiring the utmost technical skill, also test the poetic and musical temperament of the player in the highest degree. "If," says our correspondent, "the greatest artists in the world (piano virtuosi) were assembled to pass an examination to decide the championship, what programme would the musical editor select for this purpose?"

This form of the question simplifies the matter. As stated first, the problem is almost impossible of solution, because the most difficult pieces technically are not those which include the demand for high interpretative ability. For example, one of the most difficult tests of technical skill is Balakireff's "Islamey," and another is the Brahms variations on a theme by Paganini, but no one would think of including these in a list designed to test the interpretative powers of any pianist. Furthermore, it is unlikely that all judges would agree on the same list of compositions. But if our correspondent desires to know what pieces the musical editor of THE TIMES would select for a competition for the championship in piano playing the answer is not difficult to give. Here is the list:

Concertos with orchestra—Beethoven in E flat, Chopin in F minor, Rubinstein in D minor, Brahms in B flat.

Piano solo—Bach, Chromatic Fantasia and Fugue; Beethoven, sonatas Op is 106 and 111; Chopin, B minor scherzo and G minor ballade; Schumann, Fantasia in C major; Brahms, F minor sonata; Tschaikowsky, G major sonata.

This is by no means a wholly representative list nor an exhaustive one, but any pianist who can play it in a completely satisfying manner must be entitled to a place in the first rank; he who would play it best of all would surely win the championship. The technical demands of the list are sufficient to test the ability of any virtuoso, while in the respect of interpretation it calls for the highest intellectual and emotional power and a vast reserve of artistic repose.

ANNOUNCEMENTS FOR THE WEEK

SUNDAY—Popular concert, Metropolitan Opera House, 8:15 P. M.
MONDAY—"The Beggar Student," American Theatre, 2 and 8 P. M.
"Il Barbiere di Seviglia," Metropolitan Opera House, 8 P. M.
WEDNESDAY—"Don Giovanni," Metropolitan Opera House, 8 P. M.
FRIDAY—Oratorio Society, public rehearsal, Carnegie Hall, 2 P. M.
"Carmen," Metropolitan Opera House, 8 P. M.
SATURDAY—"Romeo et Juliette," Metropolitan Opera House, 2 P. M.
"Il Trovatore," Metropolitan Opera House, 8 P. M.
Oratorio Society, Carnegie Hall, 8 P. M.

OPERA FOR THE WEEK.

At the Metropolitan Opera House the usual Sunday night concert will take place this evening. The soloists will be Mme. Suzanne Adams, Mme. Schumann-Heink, and M. Plançon. The programme of opera for the week is as follows: Monday, "Il Barbiere di Siviglia," Mme. Sembrich, Signor Campanari, M. E. de Reszke, and M. Salignac. Wednesday, "Don Giovanni," Mmes. Nordica, Adams, and Sembrich; Messrs. de Reszke, Salignac, and Scotti. Friday, "Carmen," Mmes. Calvé and Adams; Messrs. Alvarez and Campanari. Saturday afternoon, "Romeo et Juliette," Mmes. Eames and Olitzka; Messrs. Saleza, de Reszke, and Plançon. Saturday evening, "Il Trovatore," Mmes. Nordica and Mantelli; Messrs. Dippel and Campanari.

THE ORATORIO SOCIETY.

The traditional Christmastide performances of Handel's great oratorio, "The Messiah," are to be given at Carnegie Hall on the afternoon of Dec. 29 and on the evening of Dec. 30, by the Oratorio Society, under the direction of its leader, Mr. Frank Damrosch. In spite of the brief period of time which has elapsed since the complete reorganization of the chorus, that body of singers is in far better working order than it has been for years. Mme. Gadski, Miss Grace Preston, Mr. Hamlin, and Dr. David Bispham are to fill the solo parts, and a good performance of the oratorio may be anticipated.

THE AMERICAN THEATRE.

The American Theatre will be reopened next Monday, Christmas Day, when the Castle Square Opera Company will give a special matinée, at which "The Beggar Student" will be sung. Those who enjoyed this charming work when it was first presented to the public will be delighted at its revival, and those to whom it comes as a new composition will find easy the explanation why it has retained a lasting place in the favor of the operagoer. The opportunity to enjoy again the well-written, tuneful music of the standard operettas is not the least among the several pleasures the presence here of the Castle Square Opera Company makes possible. Compared with the general run of musical farces and musical spectacles of the present day, the martial Milloecker's rollicking opera comique, with its stirring and sentimental music, may be viewed as a refreshing novelty. The story of "The Beggar Student" need not be retold. There is a fund of comedy to keep interest alive, and Milloecker has not only devised solos with a facile, romantic touch, but has been equally happy in the construction of ensembles with an infectious swing. The management has made an unusually lavish outlay and has prepared a superb spectacular production, with all the aids of mechanical marvels and elaborate electrical effects. The cast which will reintroduce the light opera favorites of the company has been arranged as follows: Symon, William G. Stewart; Jantzky, Reginald Roberts; Ollendorf, Louis Casavant; Enterich, Frank Moulan; Ononphrie, Charles Meyers; Laura, Eloise Morgan; Bronislava, Gertrude Quinlan; Palmetica, Bessie Tannehill; Poppenberg, Belle D'Arcy. These will be supported by "the best light opera chorus in New York," a large orchestra, and a military band. A feature of the performance will be an Amazon march, which will employ over one hundred supernumeraries, garbed in picturesque attire. "Die Fledermaus" will be sung for the first time by the Castle Square Opera Company at the American Theatre for the week beginning Jan. 1. This will be followed by other novelties in light, romantic, and grand operas.

NOTES OF MUSIC.

The first Seidl Society concert will be given at the Academy of Music, Brooklyn, on Thursday evening, Jan. 4, 1900, at 8:15 o'clock, Mr. Emil Paur, conductor. The programme:

"New World" Symphony.....Dvorak
Concerto, E flat.....Liszt
August Walther.
Scherzo.....Bizet
Valse des Sylphs.....Berlioz
Rakoczy March.....Berlioz
"Lohengrin's" Narrative.....Wagner
Dudley Buck.
Overture, Leonora No. 3.....Beethoven

The annual concert in aid of the Workingman's School will take place on the evening of Tuesday next, Dec. 26, at Carnegie Hall, under the direction of Mr. Sam Franko, who will also conduct the orchestra of fifty. The soloists announced are Mme. Gadski and Mr. Alexander Petschnikoff.

W. J. Henderson will deliver his second lecture on the "Classic and Romantic in Piano Music" at the New York College of Music on the afternoon of Jan. 3. Miss Florence Terrel will illustrate at the piano.

BERLIOZ'S OPERA AT MILAN.

"The Taking of Troy" Given Before a Critical Audience—New Oratorio Building—Royalty to Meet.

Foreign Correspondence NEW YORK TIMES.

ROME, Dec. 1.—An event of unusual interest in the Italian musical world has been the representation at Milan of Hector Berlioz's little-known opera or "lyric poem," "The Taking of Troy." Following close upon the recent performances of "The Trojans" in its entirety at Paris, the work has created much interest and comment in this country.

Although the work as a whole can hardly be said to have made an enthusiastic success, on account of its unevenness and its many eccentricities, its varied beauties were fully appreciated by the critical audiences which attended the first performances at Milan last week. The theatre chosen for the representation was the Lirico, and the orchestra was under the direction of M. Colonne, who had come expressly from Paris for the purpose. The part of Cassandra was given to Mme. Bourgeois of the Paris Opéra, who met with the warmest and most insistent applause throughout the evening.

The parts of the opera which seemed to make the deepest impression were the duet between Cassandra and Cerebo in the first act, the scene of the wrestlers in the second, the lament of Andromache, the apparition of Hector, and the beautiful chorus of the women in honor of Cybele in the third. This last-named piece aroused a storm of applause and M. Colonne was obliged to order its repetition.

The chorus singing was one of the features of the evening, exceptionally fine as it was. As to M. Colonne's management of the orchestra, no comment is necessary here. All in all, the performance of Berlioz's work was a distinctly artistic event, and although "The Trojans" was never destined to become in any way a popular work, the promoters of the representations at Milan have been well repaid for their pains by the gratitude of the Milanese musical public at being afforded an opportunity of hearing at least the first half of the great French composer's work.

The anxiously expected première of Maestro G. Puccini's new music drama "La Tosca" has been unavoidably postponed until Jan. 10, 1900, and is to take place at the Costanzi Theatre and not at the Argentina, as was first given out.

Don Lorenzo Perosi has finally found the place he has so long sought for, in which to give special performances of his oratorios. The old and semi-abandoned church of La Pace at Milan has been fixed upon by the composer and his friends. The cost of adapting the building to its new uses is estimated at 150,000 francs, and will be covered by shares at 100 francs each. The new hall, with the side chapels turned into sitting rooms, and with a long gallery at the end of the building, will, when finished, have a seating capacity of 2,200, and will be inaugurated next May with a grand performance of Perosi's new work, "The Massacre of the Innocents," directed by himself.

The four famous Gobelin tapestries belonging to the late Duchess Grimaldi-Pallavicino, which were put up for sale together with so many other valuable works of art last week at Genoa, on account of a division of the Duchess's property, were knocked down to the well-known dealer Seligmann of Paris for the large sum of 585,000 francs. It is believed that Seligmann bought the celebrated works as an agent for the Rothschilds.

The sale lasted two days, and was attended by agents from every country in Europe as well as from the United States. A large number of pictures by some of the greatest artists of the Late Renaissance, as well as of more modern times, were sold at prices not exceeding their worth, but the centre of interest was the bidding for the tapestries.

The report has been confirmed here as to the projected visit of King Humbert and Queen Margherita to San Remo this coming March. It is to be remarked that Queen Victoria will be at the neighboring town of Bordighera at the same time, and the visit of the Italian King and his consort is undoubtedly planned as a token of respect and greeting to the ruler of the British Empire. King Humbert will remain some days on the Riviera, and will probably extend his visit to the neighboring towns.

MUSICAL MATTERS ABROAD

On Jan. 13 the famous clarinettist, Mr. Mühlfeld, will appear at the popular concerts in London, and, with Miss Fanny Davies, introduce a new clarinet sonata (MS.) from the pen of Mr. Gustav Jenner, who is an Englishman by nationality, though in music probably a German. It is interesting to know that he is of the family to which the discoverer of vaccination belonged. Dr. Jenner, by the way, had musical tastes, and cultivated the art as far as the limited opportunities of a general practitioner, living in a rural district, permitted. It is said that the sonata is "very nice, simple, clear, and melodious." The composer, who studied under Brahms, now acts as Musikdirector at Marburg.

It is announced that the Commissioners for regulating musical performances at the Paris Exhibition include Saint-Saëns, Reyer, Massenet, Dubois, Lenepveu, and Paladilhe. These are all members of the Institute. Other composers on the board are Bourgault-Ducoudray, Bruneau, Gigout, D'Indy, Joncières, Marty, Pierné, Rousseau, and Vidal. It is to be hoped that so many eminent cooks will not spoil the broth.

Nearly forty years ago Gounod's "La Reine de Saba" was provided with a non-Biblical story and made to bid for English favor under the name of "Irene." Favor did not come, and for a long time the work has been known among the English only by one or two numbers. Yet the other day, in Leicester, the entire opera—English version—was performed with great success under the auspices of Mr. J. Herbert Marshall. It occupied three hours, and a report states that most people remained to the close.

According to an article in The Musical Herald, her Majesty's Inspector of Schools in Aberdeenshire is by no means satisfied with singing as there taught. It seems that 15 per cent. of the schools sing by ear, and in order to get at the cause of this defect The Musical Herald issued a circular of inquiry to fifty of the smallest and most isolated schools in the district. Of these twenty-five replied, eliciting the curious fact that many schools earn a bequest, according to the terms of which the teacher must be a university graduate, and "university graduates are often out of sympathy with singing," preferring to teach subjects that pay better. In one case the report is: "The majority of headmasters in Aberdeenshire are university graduates, who have never seen the inside of a training college, and, unless naturally fond of music, they neglect what they do not care for."

That was a genuine Nikisch programme which the Berlin Philharmonic played on Dec. 11. It was made up of Beethoven's works, the First Symphony, the E flat piano concerto, and the Fifth Symphony. The soloist was the little giant of Beethoven interpreters, Eugen d'Albert. It must have been a good concert to hear.

George Henschel's opera, "Nubia," was produced in Dresden on Dec. 9. Competent German critics summarize their impressions of the opera as follows: "The music is not popular, partly because it seldom follows any modern fashion, least of all the Wagnerian. But it is work of a very high character. 'Aristocratic music,' as a great singer who filled one of the leading rôles expressed it. In this respect it offers some parallels to the work of Brahms. Things in the opera which recall previous compositions rather in the manner of their introduction than in their essential character do not detract from the originality of the whole. As Brahms once said, when accused of plagiarism: 'Yes, I have taken that from Mendelssohn, but the amusing thing is that every ass can discover it.' Mr. Henschel's opera, according to the opinion of very competent judges, will not achieve an immediate conquest of the wider public or of the barrel-organs, but it will win more attention and admiration the more it is heard and studied, and its high merits will probably one day command warm recognition."

Recently music lovers in Parma celebrated the sixtieth anniversary of the production of "Oberto, Conte di San Bonifacio," Verdi's first opera. The officials of the city were present in force, a bust of the venerable master was decorated, speeches were made, and so on, according to customary procedure. These ceremonies were followed by a concert, at which extracts from the youthful opera and other works were performed. In answer to a congratulatory telegram, Verdi wired thanks to all who took part in commemorating his "first musical offense."

The performance of "Die Meistersinger," recently in Vienna under Gustav Mahler's direction, is said to have been the finest ever given. It was sung without cuts, continued for more than five hours, and was provided with entirely new scenery and costumes.

Hungary has just lost one of her most prominent composers, Dr. Ivan Greizinger, whose name, however, is not so well known elsewhere as the number of his works might lead one to suspect. There are no fewer than 100 songs, 165 transcriptions for violin, two masses, three quartets, and a great deal of dance music similar in character to that of Delibes.

Gluck seems to be enjoying a renaissance just now. "Iphégénie en Tauride" has lately been revived at a private lyric theatre in Paris, and the Opéra is to attempt "Armide." It was with this same opera that Jean de Reszke was to open that magnificent opera house of his in Paris. Jeanne Raunay, a young singer hitherto unknown, won a triumph as Iphégénie.

The London Covent Garden authorities have already issued an incomplete list of the engagements for the next opera season. M. Jean de Reszke is not yet certain, although there is reason to think he will return, while nothing seems yet to be decided about Eames, Nordica, Lehmann, Calvé, and other stars of previous seasons, and concerning the reported negotiations with Sig. Tamagno the prospectus is silent. The rumors about the engagement of Mme. Patti never were, of course, considered serious.

In spite of the fact that Verdi has frequently said that he will write no more operas, the old story of his composing a "King Lear" on a libretto of Boito again comes from Milan.

Maud Powell in England.

Maud Powell played the Tschaikowsky violin concerto in Manchester, England, not long ago, and her passionate reading of this passionate work overcame the musical critic of The Guardian of that city to such an extent that he was displeased. He wrote as follows:

"Miss Maud Powell, the violinist who so thoroughly succeeded in astonishing every one, seems to have been a pupil of Dr. Joachim in Berlin, of some other celebrated master in Paris, and of a third in Leipsic. Under these varied influences she has developed a most extraordinary art. It is doubtful whether Sarasate himself is more nimble on the finger-board or has greater mobility of the right wrist. Miss Powell did not yesterday indulge in any technical display of the non-legitimate kind, and we are not aware that she ever does so; but she is nevertheless the most sensational violin player that we have ever heard. She cultivates a kind of demonic style, laying about in a continual frenzy where there are rapid or complex passages to be played, and where, as in the opening part of the canzonnetta forming the middle movement of the Tschaikowsky concerto, there is only a simple melody to be brought out, her tone is, with the aid of a mute, made weird and witch-like to an extraordinary degree. The basis of this peculiar style is an astounding technical facility. Even the most formidable passages in the concerto came out with a rip and a snap that were always eloquent of the performer's fiery energy, correct musical ear, and thorough grasp of the composition. The defects of Miss Powell's playing are the necessary defects of sensationalism in art. No technical ability will compensate for the absence of artistic repose, for the failure to let melody come singing out with simple roundness and sweetness of tone and with its own natural eloquence instead of something clever and peculiar. Miss Powell's playing was indeed clever beyond words, but it was tormented playing, much more astonishing than charming."

To those who know Miss Powell's artistic restraint these remarks are strange. The lady herself may be quoted in reference to her idea of the proper manner of playing this concerto. She once wrote to the musical editor of THE TIMES thus: "The adequate expression of the surge, the passion, the anguish of the first movement of the concerto and the madness of the last movement must be deeply and firmly rooted in an underlying repose, stern and awful in quality—and I might add hair-whitening to achieve." There is not much danger of her going far astray when she conceives the spirit of the work in such a manner.

MUSICAL MATTERS AT HOME

A friend of Willis E. Bacheller, the tenor, has offered to defray the expenses of a three years' course of instruction under him, provided he can find a poor student with a voice worth cultivating.

The prize of $250 offered by the Musical Art Society for a work suited to its uses was not awarded this year. Among the competitors was Louis V. Saar, who, under the nom de plume of Yerab, sent in a six-voiced a capella work called "Life," with text by Barry Cornwall. In reference to it, he has received this letter from Frank Damrosch, the conductor of the society: "Your composition has impressed me very favorably, and I regret that my fellow-judges were not able to share my preference for it, and to award it the prize. As it is, I wish to express to you my appreciation of the dignity, musicianship, and artistic conception of the work, and to say that, with your permission, I will be pleased to place it on one of the programmes of the Musical Art Society."

Friends of Mrs. Anton Seidl, widow of the eminent conductor, are much annoyed by the publication of the story that she had given her late husband's library to Columbia College, and also that arrangements had been made by which she had as large an income as she desired. The programme of the seventh concert of the Pittsburg Orchestra yesterday was as follows: Beethoven's overture to "Egmont," Berlioz's song; "The Captive," Dvorak's American symphony; Grieg's "In Spring," and the waltz from Volkmann's F major suite, songs by Thomas and Henschel, and Liszt's symphonic poem, "Les Preludes." The soloist was Marguerite Hall.

"What is popular music?" said Mrs. Thomas, in a lecture in Chicago a few days ago. "The man who never enters the concert hall will answer, 'It is music like "The Star-Spangled Banner" or "Home, Sweet Home," or "Marching Through Georgia," stirring, familiar strains such as we all know and love.' A second man, who went to the old Summer-night concerts of bygone years, will reply: 'It is music like the Largo, the "Spring Song," "Traumerei," tender flowers of melody, which touch our hearts and which we know and love.' Still a third, more advanced than the foregoing, will say. 'It is music like Beethoven's Immortal Fifth Symphony, great thought expressed in simple, direct form, which appeals alike to heart and brain, and which we all know and love.'

"And thus, as a musician recently said in my hearing, 'You will always find that each person will describe as "popular music" that which is most familiar to him, and if all the symphonies were as familiar to the general public as the composition, just mentioned, they would at once be classed as "popular music."' The programmes that are usually considered popular include five symphonies—Beethoven's Fifth, Tschaikowsky's Fifth or Sixth, Schuberth's Eighth, or Unfinished; Dvorak's 'New World,' the other numbers being really all short single pieces such as the 'Tannhaeuser' overture, the Chopin Funeral March and Polonaise, the 'Peer Gynt' suite, "Overture, 1812," and the like."

First-Rate Fiddleresses.

In The London Spectator women who play the violin or other instruments form a topic.

Many of Tartini's pupils were women, and an orchestra of female performers existed in Venice more than a hundred years ago. On the other hand, no woman adopted the calling of the "traveling virtuoso" of the violin before the two Italian sisters, Theresa and Maria Milanollo—the "little Milanollos," whose presence in Frankfort, where they created a regular furor, effectually checkmated Berlioz, as he tells us in his "Memoirs," on his concert tour in 1841. Ten years later Lady Hallé, then Wilhelmina Néruda, had made her appartition as a Wunderkind. By the "seventies" female violinists had become comparatively familiar objects on public platforms, and by the "nineties" the cult of the violin had penetrated to Mayfair. The number of first-rate fiddleresses may to-day be reckoned by scores; in our academies and colleges of music female students of stringed instruments outnumber the male by at least three to one, while in the Handel Festival Orchestra of 1897 there were upward of fifty ladies as compared with ten at the meeting of 1891. Hitherto, if we mistake not, though the spectacle of ladies playing the 'cello and double bass is familiar enough to London amateurs, no woman has appeared at any of our great orchestral concerts as a solo performer upon any other instrument than the piano, violin, or harp, but the incursion of the musical Amazon has already passed these limits on the Continent and in America, where quite recently Miss Elsa Ruegger, a most accomplished violoncellist, made her début at the Boston Symphony concerts. If, however, our symphony concerts are conducted on more conservative lines than those of America, the enterprise of our amateurs probably outstrips that of all other nations in the effort to dispense with male assistance. When, some fifteen years ago, a Viennese ladies' orchestra visited London the wind instruments were almost without exception played by men, discreetly arranged at the back of the platform behind the serried ranks of the strings. But within the last ten years ladies—mirabile dictu—have taken seriously to wind instruments, not merely flutes and cornets, but the more arduous and exacting members of the wood and brass family—clarinets, oboes, bassoons, horns, and even trombones.

Women as Instrumentalists.

In an article entitled "Musical Amazons," found in The London Spectator, women as instrumentalists are thus described:

"Turning to the vital question of the quality or efficiency of the women players, one is first of all struck by the fact that no woman of this generation has exerted an influence comparable with that wielded for many years, and in less emancipated times, by Mme. Schumann, who, as an executant, interpreter, teacher, and upholder of the noblest ideals, was worthy to be ranked with Dr. Joachim. Of living female pianists and violinists, though the list includes many superlative executants, it cannot be said that any one possesses the magnetism of a Paderewski, the transcendental agility of a Rosenthal, or the exquisite urbanity of a Sarasate. Viewed orchestrally the woman player of to-day has every good quality—purity of intonation, musicianship, intelligence—and is only alleged to fall short of her brethren in breadth and volume of tone. The relative efficiency of the sexes, in fact, seems to be very much what it was when Plato said that men and women differed not in kind but in degree; that the same natural gifts were found in both, but that they were possessed in a higher degree by men than women. There are two facts, in conclusion, which ought to be borne in mind in connection with the multiplication of female executants. It is a mistake to suppose, as we so often are told, that the profession is going to be swamped by the enormous number of accomplished performers 'turned out' by our leading academies. The truth is that a very large number of girls go in for what is practically a professional musical training who have not the slightest intention, or even need, of making a livelihood out of music. The other fact is the serious drawback to which all female instrumentalists are subjected from the enormous numerical preponderance of the female auditor at all concerts. Even an incompetent boy prodigy will excite raptures where a first-rate adult Amazon of the keyboard is greeted with frigid approbation."

Paderewski and The Saturday Review

No more amazing piece of musical comment has appeared in recent years than this, by Runciman, in The Saturday Review:

"Paderewski has always been a great favorite of mine. When he first came here he impressed me as a genuine artist and a fine one. He went on playing just the same, just as well, while we were all trying to prevent the public attending his concerts. When the crowded hall showed us how great a pianist he really was, and we stated in cold type that he really was great, he not only played as well as before, but perhaps better. When the fairest society dames were tripping over one another's fair toes to secure seats for him at a guinea apiece, even then he continued to improve. His playing became less sensational, and gained in breadth. But though I still admire him enormously, I could not admire enormously anything that he did the other day, and some of the things he did I could not admire at all. His rendering of the Beethoven sonata in G, for example, (the G belonging to the second period,) was in parts very good, but it never rose to the topmost heights. He treated the tender decorative passages in the slow movement as mere bravura passages, and tried to show how fast he could play them; he made them stand out, to speak figuratively, clothed in gleaming gold and silver against the melancholy grays and dead greens of the principal themes. The finale was better; it was even, broad, dignified, and filled with the right strong yet restrained emotion.

"But when he came to the Chopin he absolutely filled me with annoyance in the first item, the ballade in A flat. Here his endeavor seemed to be to play every semiquaver passage as if it had been written in demi-semiquavers or even smaller notes; so that whenever one of these passages occurred the music suddenly went galloping ahead at a pace that left one dumfounded and mystified. Moreover, the contrasts were exaggerated to a painful degree. Every forte became a fortissimo, every piano a pianissimo. The one thing left quite unexaggerated was the rhythm, although rhythm is one of the most important elements in this particular ballade, and although, indeed, rhythm is of necessity one of the most important elements in any piece of music written in the ballade form.

"In fact, all of his Chopin that I heard was hopelessly de-Chopinized. There are, broadly speaking, two ways of playing Chopin. Esipoff is the finest exponent of the one way, and Paderewski used to be the finest exponent of the other way. Esipoff used to browbeat the gentle, sensitive composer, used to play him with stupendous force, until at last, somehow, one was made to feel the true Chopin atmosphere. It was as if a lovely flower were crushed in a 'mailed fist' and the odor necessarily came out and spread through the hall. The other way is the caressing way. Paderewski used to caress every phrase with the utmost tenderness, and gently press its sweetness out. Now (judging by his latest exhibition) he neither smashes nor caresses the flower; the flower indeed seems to be nothing to him; all he apparently wishes to do is to turn the decorative passages into bravura passages."

The Essentials of Church Music.

Sir C. Hubert H. Parry, in the course of a recent address in London on "The Essentials of Church Music," said that the old composers aimed at securing loftiness and appropriateness. But the secular influence invaded the musical department of church service, and music gave up being devotional and in time became everything else that man could think of. By degrees it grew so confused that composers and performers seemed to have aimed, at all events at one time, chiefly at amusing the congregation. Church music, instead of maintaining its individuality, became a sort of hotch-potch, sometimes savoring of the opera, sometimes of the drawing room, sometimes of the concert room, and sometimes, more recently, of the military band and the music hall. [Cheers.] What with arrangements from oratorios and operas, tuneful ditties, all the ineptitudes of complacent mediocrities, [laughter,] people seemed to have lost a sense of fitness, of what music was meant for, and the feelings it represented. Surely, it was bad enough that aspiring amateurs without any knowledge of grammar, with no conception of artistic method of any kind, should supply their feeble warblings for occasions when only the noblest works of art could possibly be adequate; but it was much worse when the object was merely commercial [Hear! hear!]

Music very often seemed to be chosen for its effectiveness, without consideration of whether the effectiveness was of the music hall or the domestic fireside. It was often chosen to attract, without consideration of whether the congregation attracted came to be amused or for more appropriate reasons. [Hear! hear!] No doubt it was very nice for whoever was responsible to see churches well filled, but was it not worth considering, after all, whether, if they filled churches with people who came only for a little entertainment and pastime, it was not very much like sowing cornfields with weeds. The very music such congregations hankered after showed what spirit they were of. If they came with a full sense of what the conditions implied they would not be satisfied with anything that was not perfectly apt to the situation, perfectly noble, and perfectly pure. [Cheers.]

Then there would not be such a hankering after sensuous excerpts from foreign masters; they would not see churches, which prided themselves on their music, showing, as quite exceptionally virtuous, a list that comprised, should they say, twenty-three foreign composers, who never wrote a note with any view to its fitness for the English church service, and twenty English composers, who might have attacked the latter from the artistic and sentimental point of view, but did not, owing to confusion of mind. [Laughter and "Hear, hear!"] Would any one deny that it was essential for church music to be lofty and pure and noble? [Cheers.] Would any one say it was right for it to be enervating, demoralizing, artistically bad, and imperfect? Music must play an ornamental part for those who took an ornamental view of the church service, at least the ornaments might be such as were genuinely appropriate, and did not suggest levity and secular tastes of an inferior description.

To pure devotional music the world would return no more, and he was sorry for it, [hear, hear,] but a base and ignoble standard need not necessarily be chosen to fill its place. [Cheers.] The responsibility of those who ordered and controlled the choice of church music really needed to be faced. To them, of all others, it ought to be easy to maintain a noble and dignified standard. They could do without what was ignoble, without what was frivolous, without what was base. They could do without arrangements and importations. [Cheers.] They could have forms of art which the conditions of church music indicated sufficiently clear to those who cared to think about them.

They could have music which elevated, music worthy of the most disinterested moments of men's lives and of their finest aspirations. Till they could make up their minds to stick to these higher standards of art—which, despite a remark of the Bishop of London, it would always be for the experts to indicate—and not to insist on the gratification of their own weaknesses, they would not arrive at the achievement of the essentials of church music. [Cheers.]

"It is easy to speak of nationality in music—to explain definitely the meaning of the term is difficult enough," writes an authority in The Contemporary Review. "As often as not the quality betrays itself more in the spirit of the work than in its outward form. We are perfectly aware of its existence, but it seems almost too subtly indefinite and intangible to express in words. We think of Chopin, Glinka, Smetana, Dvorak, Grieg, as the composers who have most prominently displayed this nationality. In reality, Bach, Beethoven, Schumann, Brahms, and Wagner were, to all intents and purposes, as intrinsically national as any of these. Who but Germans could have composed the 'Matthaus' Passion Music, the C Minor Symphony, the 'Carneval,' the Nibelungen Trilogy, or the Brahms Requiem? Only we have had so close an acquaintance with Germany, her people, and their history for generations past, that we have become completely familiarized with her modes of expression. For years her giants in music dominated the whole musical world, and her school served as an exclusive model for other nations, consequently its type became universal, and we have long ago ceased to individualize it as purely German. So entirely, too, had Germany become mistress of the musical field, that musicians of the standard, conservative order, of whom each decade is bound to produce its quota, distrusted their ears when anything was heard outside the orthodox German range. Thus the independent utterances of Chopin and his followers could for a time be treated as inferior, merely because their authors were true to their birthright, preferring to express themselves in their own language rather than in borrowed, foreign conventionalities. Germany has had her musical day, and truly a magnificent one. Even now she has in her midst one or two undeniably great composers. That most powerful force, tradition, will also probably stand her in good stead for years to come. Nevertheless, the opinion that Germany is the one and only musical nation in the world is decidedly on the wane.

Music in Chicago.

The Chicago Evening Post says: "The opening of the ninth season of the Chicago Orchestra, under the direction of Theodore Thomas, is the event of the week in the world of high and fine art. Thousands are felicitating themselves upon the rare and splendid prospect of a long series of delightful and exalting concerts. There are few institutions Chicago has as much reason to be proud of as she has of her great, permanent orchestra for the proper interpretation of the noblest and most perfect music.

It requires little penetration to conclude that Mr. Thomas's first programme is a concession to the wide demand for more popular and intelligible compositions. There is no compromise of the ideal, no pandering to crude and vulgar taste, but we may justly regard the first offering as an admission that the patrons who are not sufficiently educated to enjoy the most scientific forms of absolute music should be gently led and encouraged, instead of being consigned to the outer darkness. Perhaps it is true that lovers of music are born, not made; but love is not the only condition of comprehension. The symphony is a complex product of evolution, and to appreciate its beauties and marvels—where they exist—one must have underg

The War in South Africa:

Some Expressions of Public Opinion.

As Shown by Letters from Readers of The New York Times.

"MANY MEN OF MANY MINDS."

We print in the following columns a portion of the letters that have been received in this office dealing with the struggle that is now going on in South Africa. These letters are written from persons who move in many and widely diversified walks of life, and they give expression to almost every phase of the general question involved. Such spontaneous utterances of opinions, judgments, and impressions—all intelligently if not rhetorically presented—are truly significant of the intense feeling with which the readers of THE NEW YORK TIMES regard a great question of the hour. But it is still more significant that, in seeking a medium through which to speak to the public, these writers should have made it necessary to turn several columns of this paper into a veritable forum for the exchange of views.

The spirit of wholesome criticism—of persons, ideas, and institutions—prevailing throughout the correspondence should not be lost sight of, any more than the causes which moved the writers to seek the readers of THE TIMES as their particular audience. It means that people who think and who have the ability to put their thoughts into writing desire this public. In fact, the very variety of the ideas expressed below may be said to be representative of this public.

Editorial articles that have recently appeared in THE TIMES furnish the themes of some of the communications; letters like those of Robert B. Roosevelt or Thomas G. Shearman form the bases of others; still others were apparently written because their authors could not help it. All of them, for the reasons given above, make a most remarkable feature of journalism. And it is because persons with something to say have been encouraged to express themselves in these columns that the present elaborate display of readable letters has been made possible.

AMERICA'S GREAT DUTY.

Friendship for England and Sympathy for the Boers the Ideal Sentiment of Neutrality.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Have you room for anything more concerning the tripartite relation of England, America, and the Transvaal; if so, will you publish this letter and my reply? My position was admirably expressed and sustained in your editorial on the same subject, but I have suffered so much misconstruction and have received so many reproaches that I would like to set myself right. I make no apology, having taken one, and I still think the true and logical ground from the start, but unless a man comes out blindly and wholly for one or the other to a controversy he is apt to be misunderstood and often gets abused by both.

Reform Club, 233 Fifth Avenue,
Dec. 7, 1899.

My Dear Mr. Roosevelt:

I want to congratulate you on your forcible reply to Mr. Shearman, while expressing my surprise that you continue to assert that we should be friends with England, "whether right or wrong." I can understand how one can say he'll stand by his own country right or wrong, but "it beats me" how one can encourage England in her devastating war who is not an Englishman.

For there is no doubt that the English Government counts on the moral support of the Government at Washington as her strongest hope against the opinion of the rest of the world in her determination to crush the little South African republics.

Yours truly, THEO. M. BANTA.

My Dear Mr. Banta:

While thanking you for your kind words of appreciation, I cannot help expressing surprise at your misconception of my views in regard to Great Britain. England and Amreica are the leading forces for civilization, liberty, human rights, universal manhood, and for man's upward and onward development, as well as for this more material advance in the way of trade, prosperity, and accumulation of wealth and comfort. These two nations should work together; they must or they will be overwhelmed separately.

Is America so dearly beloved of European nations that she can smile at the unpopularity of England? Think how Frenchmen actually spat upon Americans in the streets of Paris during our war with Spain, and France we thought was the most friendly because we have maintained a sentiment of gratitude incomprehensible to a Frenchman for over a century. Does Germany and the autocratic War Lord, its master, admire our free institutions and those of England? Did she not almost force a quarrel on us even before war actually broke out with Spain, and then bluffed around like a bully in the coon song or the man with the proverbial chip on his shoulder when she thought our hands were full, and no one knows how much further she would have gone but for a distinct intimation from the English Government that she had done about enough. Russia remained friendly during our civil war, and her interests and ours have not yet clashed; but there never can be sincere sympathy between a pure despotism and a pure democracy. A devotion to law and the subjection of all law to a single will. Our friendship will last as long as we do not get too near each other—but the Philippines are not far from China.

In fact, America is more respected and far more feared than she was two years ago; but Americans are loved as little as the English on the entire Continent of Europe, where there would be universal rejoicing if the model Republic should come to grief in spite of the glittering veneer of friendliness with which we are treated to-day.

Of course we quarrel with England now and then, but it is a sort of a schoolboy fight, and we are both benefited by it and better friends than ever when it is over. They occasionally behave meanly toward us, and then they are ashamed of themselves. Once in a while they demean themselves with eminent self-restraint and with more courtesy than we merit, as in the Venezuela business. England is a predatory nation.

So are we. She takes all she can get and keeps all she takes. Her word is not always quite as good as her bond. She is pledged to leave Egypt. Well, we are pledged to leave Cuba. We will both withdraw at about the same time. Her Government is as free as ours, her laws about the same, her customs, modes of thought, religious, and even her social, life are identical. An American can hardly be distinguished, individually, from an Englishman. America plumes herself on having a little more sensitive conscience than England, but foreigners possibly might say there was little to choose.

So we are natural allies, and the world is better, happier, safer, more peaceful for that alliance. Even the negroes of Africa are benefited and at least saved from the horrors of slavery, as the Egyptians have been redeemed from a life worse than death. None of us doubts that humanity is the gainer from the existence of our country, and by uniting with England we become irresistible. Now, England has made a terrible mistake; has plunged headlong into a difficulty from which she can hardly extricate herself. She needs a friendly hand. On the other side, the Boers are fighting a magnificent but a desperate fight. They are game to the heart. They will die gloriously for their rights; but are we doing them a service by breaking our relations with England?

We are to-day the only friend that both sides possess. We may bring about an end to the quarrel, both of the belligerent may in the end—indeed, may very soon—be willing to listen to us. Are we proving our good will to the Boers? Are we doing our duty to humanity by letting this cruel, foolish, unnecessary battle go on. A moment longer than we can present a battle not representative of the better sense of England, but of the self-complacent, egotistical, supercilious, narrow-minded Colonial Secretary. We want to help both sides, and can only do this by keeping our friendship for both sides.

We say frankly that the war was uncalled for, we do not justify it, we deplore it. Perhaps it is not as justifiable as was our war with Spain, but as England did not take that as a justification for breaking with us, so we should not use this as a reason for breaking with her.

ROBERT B. ROOSEVELT.
New York, Dec. 18, 1899.

THE REAL FEELING HERE.

Characters of the Modern Briton and "Old-Line" American Contrasted.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

As an American of English, Scotch, and Irish descent, whose forefathers fought the British at Eutaw Springs, at King's Mountain, at Yorktown, and at New Orleans, I wish to thank you for your able leading editorial of this date. I can agree with you that the time has not yet come when the British nation shall cease its work of developing and civilizing the waste places of the earth. There are some features in the Englishman's character which the old-line American does not exactly like. We are not pleased with his hauteur, with his air of self-conscious superiority, with his ill-concealed or not all concealed disdain for most things not English, and many times with his gross ignorance of the geography and internal affairs of these United States. Chiefly for these reasons, there have been times when most of us have viewed with great composure a little unceremonious manipulation of the British lion's caudal appendage.

But at the present juncture, when the Continental enemies of England (who were just as open enemies to ourselves in 1898) are rejoicing in her reverses and prayerfully abiding in the daily hope and expectation of greater disasters, the heart of the great American people goes out in sympathy to our kinsmen beyond the sea. In spite of our own past quarrels and fights with Great Britain, we cannot forget that we owe to the little group of islands in the northwest corner of Europe our laws, our language, our customs, our civilization, and at least four-fifths of us our being itself. Humiliation of Great Britain means humiliation of the English-speaking people throughout the world. In the remote quarters of the earth, aye, on the Continent of Europe itself, the difference between the English and the American traveler or sojourner is quite infinitesimal.

The Londoner, the Chicagoan, the Dublinite, and the Edinburgher all look alike to the average Frenchman, the Turk, and the Transvaal farmer. Let sporadic blatherskites, with good old Anglo-Saxon names like Sulzer, howl as they listeth in Congress or elsewhere, but their yawpings should bear no token of the genuine American feeling to our transatlantic brethren. Blood is still thicker than water. And just here, Mr. Editor, while we venture a prediction. When British commanders learn to avail themselves a little more of Boer tactics, when they cease to walk blindly and disdainfully in the traps laid for them by their enemies, when they cease to ruthlessly expose their men to the concentrated fire of concealed Boer sharpshooters, we shall get different news from the Cape. A few dozen Kit Carsons or Capt. Batsons would be of greater service to the British arms in South Africa than an additional army corps.

THE BOERS AS PIONEERS.

What They Have Aspired To and Achieved in South Africa—Their Present Status.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I read with interest the letter of Mr. Thomas G. Shearman in your issue of the 21st inst. on the Boer question, but I am inclined to think that his arraignment of the Boers is too bitter to have any effect on fair-minded and unprejudiced Americans. In Paragraph No. 1 he states that Mr. Krüger was in London in 1884, and was too poor to pay his hotel bill, while in Paragraph 2 he has sold one of his farms to an Englishman for $500,000. Paul must have got rich quick. I agree with Mr. Shearman that the Boer Government is not a model of perfection, and that Oom Paul sorely needs the services of the Rev. Dr. Parkhurst, but has not England been practicing for centuries, and is to-day, what she now finds fault with in the Boers? Let us suppose for the present that Mr. Shearman's arraignment is a truthful one, but you can take every paragraph in his letter, and what is therein complained of has been practiced by the British Government in Ireland from time immemorial.

In Paragraph No. 4 Mr. Shearman calls attention to the excessive taxation of foreigners in the Transvaal, but for years the people of Ireland have protested in vain against paying more than their pro rata share of the taxes of the British Empire, and a few years ago the Government was compelled to appoint a royal commission to investigate the question of taxation in Ireland, and when this commission (which was composed exclusively of Englishmen) reported back that the people of Ireland were annually paying over £2,000,000 in excess of their pro rata share, the Government refused to redress the wrong or take any further action in the matter, and that same Government is to-day waging war on the Boers because of the wrong system of taxation there. In Paragraph No. 10 Mr. Shearman complains that the foreign settlers in the Transvaal are not permitted to bear arms; the same is carried on in Ireland at the present day. It is true that the representatives of the alien Government carry arms, but let a poor peasant be caught with a gun in his possession, and he goes to penal servitude for twenty years.

In Paragraph 12 Mr. Shearman states that the right to hold public meetings is denied to the foreign settlers in Boerland, but right now at the present day public meetings being held in a peaceable and constitutional manner in Ireland are dispersed and the people clubbed by the police, who recently received the order of a Bench official: "Don't hesitate to shoot." And that same Government is now waging war on the people in the Transvaal for doing the same thing.

Paragraph 15 complains that the English language is not taught in the schools, but the barbarous Boer-Dutch is forced on the English-speaking children. Why, during the last century the British Government put people to death in Ireland for speaking the Irish language, and the same price was paid for the schoolmaster's head as that of the wolf, so as to keep down the education of the people.

In Paragraph 16 Mr. Shearman charges that President Krüger resisted the introduction of railroads into the country, so that the miners would be compelled to hire his private ox teams at enormous prices. Doubtless Mr. Shearman is aware that for centuries Ireland's industries were wiped out by the penal enactments of the British Government, so that the people would be compelled to purchase all manufactured articles from England. In Paragraph 18 Mr. Shearman states that the foreigners in the Transvaal were so disgusted with the Government, that they conspired to subvert it by force of arms. "They collected," he says, "rifles, gunpowder, &c., but did not commit any overt act." Of course, they did not, because they did not get a chance, but they were arrested and tried, and finally released on the payment of a large donation for public charities. Well, they may thank their stars that it was not in Ireland they were arrested with rifles and gunpowder, trying to subvert the Government of England. They would not get off on the payment of a donation for public charity. Their sentences would cut short the thread of their existence. They would be consigned to such a bloody and ignominious death as would leave their bodies mutilated corpses, from which the rites of Christian burial would be withheld.

The whole matter in a nutshell is simply this, that those poor people immigrated into the interior of South Africa, and after years of hard work reclaimed that land from a howling wilderness into a paradise of fertility, and now since the discovery of their gold mines England was waiting for some excuse, for some pretext, to rob those poor people of their lands, their mines, and their possessions. I hold that the sympathy of every good American should be with the Boers, who are during this holy season of Christmas so valiantly fighting for their republic, their homes, and their firesides. May God strengthen them to repel the invaders.

ENGLAND STOOD BY US.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

As an Englishman by birth and an American by adoption, I thank you for your editorial in yesterday's issue of your valuable paper on the Boer and English trouble.

Every word you said was true, just, honorable, and magnanimous, so that for one I fail to see how even the most ultra pro-Boer sympathizer could take exceptions to it. You have acknowledged that during our war with Spain England was our friend. It seems to me she was the only friend we had in Europe. The moral aid she rendered us and her action of neutrality was greatly to our advantage.

During our Spanish war no one heard of resolutions being offered in the Houses of Lords or Commons offering sympathy to Spain, which we have done in Washington. Nor were public meetings held to raise funds to aid Spain, such as have been held in Chicago to aid the Boers.

"A friend in need is a friend indeed." England stood by us; we should stand by her now, by at least giving her our moral support. To do so would only be paying our debt to her.

Suppose for one moment England was blotted off the map of the world, would it benefit us in the least particle? Would liberal ideas, the arts or sciences or human progress gain any greater momentum were such a thing to occur as the extinction of England?

Pause for one moment. If the German Emperor, (Me and God,) with France and Austria, had the control of affairs, how much consideration would we have at their hands? Indeed, if this trio did have the control, they would show to the Boers as little consideration as they would to us.

But with England as the watch dog, these countries have to be careful; they can go so far, and no more.

While England is not perfect, yet she carries civilization with her wherever she plants her flag. Although she has met reverses in Africa, be assured she will, like the phoenix, arise stronger and eventually overcome her foes. Then she will go on planting civilization and honest government the same as heretofore.

Thanking you in advance for the privilege of expressing my views in your paper.

OUR DUTY TO GREAT BRITAIN.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Permit me to express through the medium of your letter column my admiration for your timely editorial in this morning's issue entitled "The British Defeats." It is quite characteristic of THE TIMES fearlessly to express an independent opinion, when too many journals and their readers are ready to pose as critics of Britain, and to cavil at England's policy in this her hour of need.

England's greatness and England's mission, as the one power pre-eminently suited to further the march of civilization, are justly appreciated and frankly avowed by you; throughout there is a realization that permanent British reverses in South Africa and her withdrawal therefrom mean the checking of progress and the development of the country for many years to come. That she has been unadvisedly hurried into the maelstrom of war her greatest men deplore. Admitting that possibly it might have been avoided, now that the dire struggle is waging, let all thoughtful Americans give to the mother country their sympathy and moral support.

When the nations of the earth look hungrily toward her many possessions, when her strong arm is temporarily weakened, let us give forth a full clear note, claiming kinship with our cousins across the sea. Now is the time, before it is too late, that our voices should be heard sounding friendship. Let us remember how much we owe to England. But for her generous stand, who knows what might have been the outcome of the Spanish-American war? Let us remember our recent protestations of good-will and show now that they were genuine and more lasting than fickle writing in the sand.

LEADING TO THE BOER WAR.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I am informed that the following occurred in the Transvaal during the present year, viz.:

July 8—The Volksraad appointed a committee of five to draft a suffrage reform act.

July 18—The Volksraad adopted a bill constituting every Outlander who should prove a residence of seven years a burgher and giving him the right to vote for members of the Volksraad, President and Commandant General.

July 19—Also a bill permitting sons of Outlanders to be naturalized at the age of sixteen years and to become voters at the age of twenty years.

July 26—Said laws promulgated.

Thereafter, I am informed, Mr. Chamberlain stated said laws would be a satisfactory settlement, if, upon investigation by a mixed committee, they should be found satisfactory.

Sept. 2, the Volksraad accepted the proposal of a mixed commission to investigate the probable effect of said laws.

Sept. 25, Mr. Chamberlain notified the Government of the Transvaal that Great Britain terminated negotiations and would formulate an ultimatum.

Oct. 4, Parliament appropriated £15,000,000 for the movement of troops to South Africa.

Oct. 5, British reinforcements began to arrive in Natal.

Oct. 7, mobilization of British reserves ordered.

Oct. 10, Transvaal demanded that massing of British troops on the frontier cease.

I also am informed that large numbers of the Outlanders are voluntarily serving with the Boer armies.

Will you kindly say if the foregoing were actual occurrences?

A WORD TO AMERICANS.

Apparently Growing Sympathy with the Boers Misplaced—England Will Never Betray Her Children.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

If one considers the vast numbers of letters and articles with which the press of this country is flooded touching the South African question, and the perverted ingenuity of the majority of the writers thereby revealed, one is tempted to imagine that there is at work in our midst a Mephistophelian spirit which is playing sad tricks with the public mind in making the worse appear the better argument. It cannot be denied that the rising tide of popular opinion is running in the direction of the Boers. Even in the case of thoughtful men whose sympathies on general grounds are with England, there is, in this particular instance, a feeling that there is something rotten in British politics, and that the Boers are being unjustly pressed to the wall. Now, let us ask what are the causes lying behind this condition of public sentiment. Let us look them frankly in the face, adjudge them at their proper worth, and thereby value the opinions which they create.

First of all, there is the belligerent Irish element in this country, for which, as everybody knows, England stands as the incarnation of all that is cruel, tyrannical and despotic; whereas, in reality, a judicial spirit will probably charge England, at worst, with a kind of woodenness, of incapacity to meet the sentimental, mercurial Celtic mind on its own level. My distinguished fellow-countryman, the Lord Mayor of Dublin, has been here on a brief visit (with this chain of office). It would not, perhaps, be seemly to subject the utterances of this high functionary to that curious criticism which might fairly be applied to the speech of persons in humble station. And yet, surely, when he tells the reporters that the Irish people are opposed to the war, that they are pro-Boer in their sympathies, that England's line of action has been wicked and iniquitous, he might have thrown light upon these Delphic sayings by going on to inform us as to what he meant by the "Irish people," whether the phrase included the educated classes, or, in this case, might properly be predicated only of the ignorant peasantry and the political parasites of a sectarian movement; whether, also, it was not a fact that Irish soldiers are at the present moment shedding their blood for England's cause. On these points my Lord Mayor was silent. Gathering his robes around him, (with his chain of office,) he silently lifted his tents and as silently stole back to Dublin. Is it any wonder, then, that the American mind, not wholly impervious to the charms of high municipal office, should for the moment be flung off its balance, unduly impressed by the florid rhetoric and oracular manner of Ireland's Chief Magistrate?

In the next place, many of our best citizens are of Dutch descent and these excellent men believe that the fact that the Boers are also Dutch should outweigh all other considerations and should kick the beam in favor of the Transvaal. Take our worthy Governor, for example. What is the mental picture that stirs his generous instincts and makes him a pro-Boer? Is it not something like this: A handful of brave, God-fearing, pious Dutch peasants brought to bay, threatened with extinction by the sheer brute strength of a great empire—a strength enlisted on the side of greedy capitalists and gold-hungry speculators anxious to annex the sturdy little republic in order to fill their already well-plenished coffers. Such, too, is the vision that floats before the mind of a John Morley and a Frederic Harrison. But is it true? Does it correspond to any reality? Or is it not rather colored by the enthusiasm of overgenerous natures that are the victims of their own high-flying chivalry? That the Boers are Dutch is of course true; but what kind of Dutch are they? Do they represent the better mind of modern Holland, or do they belong to the seventeenth century, and is not their whole conception of national life an anachronism at the present time? It is safe to predict that if Col. Roosevelt were a citizen of the Transvaal, while his doctrine of a "strenuous life" might commend him to the warlike instincts of President Kruger, his utterly heterodox opinions as to political liberty, purity of municipal life, progress in religious and social ideas, would render him as obnoxious to Boerdom as Socrates was to the Athenians, and he would scarcely be kept as a moral mentor at the public expense.

The fact is, the Transvaal Dutchman has no more in common with the modern Hollander or his kinsmen in America than has the New Yorker with the contentious dwellers among the Kentucky mountains. The Boer represents a stage of civilization that belongs to an earlier era. His thews may be as those of the sons of Anak, but they are powerless against the supreme power of human progress and development, and whether through British or other instrumentality, their doom is registered among "the fixed events of Fate's decrees.'

Let it also be cheerfully admitted that the Boers are a pious and church-loving people. If we are to judge by his fluent and accurate quotations from the Bible, he must be a much more industrious student of the Scriptures than is Mr. Dillon or Mr. Redmond; and yet it would seem as if he confined his study to the Old Testament, for the type of piety evoked by his painful preachings belongs rather to that stage of religious culture which finds expression in the far from pious benediction, "Happy shall he be that taketh and dasheth thy little ones against the stones." And in yet another point Boer piety reveals its ancient Hebrew spirit. While anxious about the other world, it has its feet firmly planted on the solid soil of this one, holding that the favorites of Providence have an exclusive claim to such mundane and incidental advantages as may arise from dynamite monopolies, high foodstuff tariffs, and unlimited taxation, without the attendant drawback of adequate representation.

And now, as our last concession, we will agree that England is heartily hated on the Continent, and that no words are violent enough for the German and French press to describe British plans and manners. It is not necessary to discuss the causes of this unpopularity. Suffice it to say that, much as John Bull is detested by his neighbors, Uncle Sam need not lay to his soul the flattering unction that he is anything more of a persona grata. The popular idea of an American in France or Germany is that he is a crude and uninformed being to whom Providence in a strangely ironical way awarded a larger share of this world's goods than falls to the lot of the chivalrous, cultured, and picturesque races of the Old World, and who therefore is useful as a kind of good-natured Philistine, a hewer of wood and a drawer of water, for the more spiritual and romantic peoples.

The hatred of the Englishman is largely grounded in a healthy fear; the hatred of the American is edged with something worse than hatred—a tolerance born of contempt. Do any of my American friends quarrel with this account of the impression they make on the Teuton or the Gaul? Let them reflect in the words of a genuinely British philosopher: "Things and actions are what they are, and the consequences of them will be what they will be; why, then, should we desire to be deceived?"

So far we have not pierced to the heart of the matter. The real question does not hinge on the primitive virtues of the Boer or on the exact terms of the London Convention or on the precise significance of that worn-out word "suzerainty." These things only hide the authentic issue. It is put in not the fact that the Boer is a tyrant, that his republic is a sham and a make-believe, that he has consistently denied the elementary rights of civilized society to the Anglo-Saxons resident in his territory, that he has used all the resources of primitive cunning to destroy British prestige in South Africa, that he has mocked at the pretensions of the British Crown to protect the interests of British subjects, and that, as a culminating insult, he has impudently flung down the gauge of battle to a patient and much-enduring nation. What would the world think of the United States did she permit one of the Southern republics to inflict wrong after wrong upon a colony of her people without striking a blow in their defense? And what would the world think of England did she continue to see men of English blood unjustly and corruptly taxed, and denied the right of public meeting, compelled to teach their children a foreign language, refused a voice in the election of Government officials whose salaries they are forced to pay?

The average Englishman will stand much. He is a phlegmatic soul. Tell him that London is a foggy and dirty place, and that you wonder how any sane being can live in it, he will agree with you, and probably call it a "beastly hole"; inform him that the aristocracy is going to the dogs, that England is on the decline, and that the age of republics is at hand, he will take a polite interest in what you say. Denounce his most cherished convictions, and he will tolerate you in mild wonder. But treat him unjustly, deny him the rights of a man, say he is no longer king in his own home, and then you have roused the Berserker rage that lives in him. Injustice is the thing that he will not tolerate. "Yes," says a great historian, speaking of the English nation, "just so Godlike as this people's patience was, even so Godlike will and must its impatience be. Away, ye scandalous practical solecisms, children actually of the Prince of Darkness! Ye have now broken our hearts. We can and will endure you no longer. Begone, we say, while the play is good! By the most high God, whose spans and missionaries true men are, ye shall not continue here. You and we have become incompatible: can inhabit one house no longer. Either you must go or we. Are ye ambitious to try which it shall be?"

"War is hell." Never was truer word spoken, but even in that last home of misery there are (so theologians say) divers grades. The lowest depth of all, the hell of hell, is reserved for the traitor. England may have to spill the blood of her noblest; she will are not betray her children and hand them over to the mercies of ignorance and barbarism.

BRITISH CAUSE UNJUST.

Significance of Outlander Claims If Made in the United States.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I am of the Americans who feel grateful to England for sympathy and good wishes during our late war with Spain, and I do not care whether her attitude was prompted by love for "her cousins" or by pure self-interest. But I cannot agree with the position you take in the editorial about the deplorable reverses of the British. That is to say, I do not believe that our gratitude should go to the extent of sympathizing with Great Britain in an unjust war, and I cannot see that her contention with the Boers is based upon any principle of right. There never was a more righteous war than ours with Spain. It was for the emancipation of a neighboring people long oppressed and unable alone to throw off the foreign yoke.

There is nothing of this kind to justify England's attempt to subjugate the two Dutch republics in South Africa. As I understand it, the British Government contends that Englishmen who went to the Transvaal gold hunting—not with any intention of settling there permanently—must have all the civil rights of the Boers, whether they forswear or not allegiance to the British crown. That position is un-American; it does not deserve "the sympathy and good wishes" of the American people; it is not sanctioned by any principle of international law, nor is it to be obscured by any quibbles about the right of representation with taxation.

To put it in another way, England assumes the right to dictate what shall be the municipal law of another Government. This is stating the case in very few words. Suppose Englishmen were to come here and demand full citizenship without the necessary probation prescribed by our law—without the necessary formality of forswearing allegiance to her Britannic Majesty—would you think it right? Suppose, further, that England should back up the audacious claim of her subjects to citizenship on their own terms, and, in fine, declare war against the United States to enforce such claim and compel modification of our municipal law at the point of the bayonet, would you consider it just for Europe to extend "sympathy and good wishes" to the invading armies? Would you consider it right for France or Germany or Russia to cry out about the dangers to civilization likely to result from disasters to British arms? Most certainly you would not.

I do not wish to take up unnecessary space in your columns discussing points which to me appear to be so clear. I will merely ask you in conclusion to correct me if I have not stated the case exactly in accordance with the facts. Most certainly I wish to be temperate and accurate in my statements, and, as I have already observed, I am actuated by no hostile feeling toward the British Government.

If you will read again the long speech of Mr. Chamberlain in the British papers on the 20th of last October, I am sure you will admit I have stated the British Governmental position correctly.

A GRATEFUL AMERICAN.
New York, Dec. 18, 1899.

WOULD SEE BOERS FREE.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Very few of your readers will, I trust, sympathize with you in the leader of to-day, "The Deplorable Reverses of the British," in which at last you plainly show your colors and hoist the English flag against the Boers. While naturally we all grieve for the great loss of life and consequent suffering on both sides, there is no heart truly American or worthy of the name that does not go out to the cause of the Boers, and send up prayers for their success. A handful of plain people, farmers and miners, whose powers were altogether underestimated by the insolent enemy, they irresistibly bring to mind our own Revolutionary fathers. They sought a home and set up a Government in the wilderness, only asking to be let alone. But this, in the interests of "the higher civilization" and the richest diamond fields in the world, could not be granted them. It England, in the actual sense of the word, does "want the earth," and means to pull the chestnuts out of the fire she must sometimes expect to have her hands badly burned. She gave us her moral support during our late war, but it was from self-interest rather than any other motive, and if we owe her a measure of thanks for this, it certainly does not follow that from gratitude we must side with her in every unholy war into which she may choose to plunge.

We do not wish for her downfall and humiliation, the dismemberment of the empire, or anything of that sort, but if the Boers, true to all the traditions of their heroic race, should succeed in wresting their independence from this grasping world power, it would be the grandest victory for freedom and republican principle this century has seen.

I, for one, cry from my very soul, God grant it! and whatever be the ultimate fate of the brave strugglers, they too have surely fired "a shot heard round the world," and made for themselves an immortal place in history. FREEDOM.

FOR LIBERTY AND EQUALITY.

How Common Aims and Common Dangers Should Bind the Briton and American Together.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I wish to commend your recent editorial utterances with regard to the war in South Africa and the attitude of the United States toward Great Britain during the continuance of that struggle. The United States, with abundant reason, has had her grievances against England in the past; but England has made noble atonement. Among the great nations of the world she has been the only friend of the United States since the breaking out of our late war with Spain; the only one to appreciate our motives and applaud our aims. But suppose we choose to ignore her friendship and help, what then? We are still a great Nation, and, as becomes a great nation, we should be magnanimous. We must, if true to our principles of Government, favor democracy as against oligarchy. We must—if we are partial to either—stand with the Government that stands for enlightenment, self-government, and progress. It will be a sad day for liberty the world over when America turns her back upon democracy to flirt with despotism.

What is the issue in the present struggle in South Africa? It is not the wisdom or folly of Mr. Chamberlain's "pushful" diplomacy; not the question whether with reasonable prudence on both sides the war might have been prevented, nor the further question whether the British War Department has furnished improper equipment or incompetent Generals. Back of all these now subsidiary matters this fact stands out with terrible distinctness: The war must end either in the granting of equal liberty and equal opportunity to all white races in South Africa, or it must end in the subjugation of the progressive and liberty-loving race at the hands of the backward and the retrogressive. It is nonsense to say that the cause of the Boers was the cause of the American colonies in their revolt against England. The colonists stood for liberty and for Anglo-Saxon ideals. The Boers, on their own confession, would extend their despotic system over all South Africa. It is a far cry from the freedom of the American colonies to the despotism of Pretoria.

But there is a very practical reason why we should give England at least our moral support. Wherever the British flag goes American traders and American goods are sure to follow. The other day Kitchener reconquered a great region to civilization. Immediately an American bridge spans the Atbara, and American locomotives run on the Cairo-Khartoum Railway. This is not because the British love Americans more than they love themselves, but because in British territory there is free competition, and the American has demonstrated his superiority. Why are we to-day clamoring at every chancellery in Europe for written guarantees that our trade rights shall be respected?—guarantees which we know would not be worth the paper upon which they are written were it not for the fact that our navy is growing to alarming proportions, and that the American people are determined they shall not be worsted in this game of world politics. It is because our friends the French, our friends the Germans, and our very good friends the Russians have a most inconvenient way of going in and shutting the door after them. Unless we ourselves are prepared to undertake the government of Africa, of India, and of China, it would be a disaster irreparable to the United States to have England lose her prestige as a world power.

We occupy to-day toward England something the same position as a year ago she occupied toward us. Perhaps as our friends at Pretoria indicate, should we hint that we might look on with favor, or even with complacency, a coalition of the European powers might attack Great Britain. In that case "the weary Titan," "the bowed Colossus," to whom our wise editors, in their gush of rhetoric so pityingly refer, may sink under the repeated blows of his enemies until at last he is crushed, and his wealth has become the plunder of the nations. It might, on the contrary, come to pass that such a wave of patriotism would sweep over the British Empire that she might be revived and recreated, and out of the carnage of battle might be born the new empire, the "Greater Britain" which it is Mr. Chamberlain's dream to create. In either case the outcome would be distinctly unfavorable to the United States.

There is no denying the fact that there has existed in the past a well-grounded and widespread dislike of England among the American people. It is also a fact that this feeling is rapidly disappearing as we come to realize, as we have not hitherto, our common aims and common dangers. There are, however, two sections of our people among whom the hatred of Great Britain shows no abatement. One is that section of our people who have come from Continental Europe, where England's very good qualities have made her hated. The other section is made up of people who have come from Ireland, as I myself did. Theirs is a hatred born of real grievances, but the hatred has survived long after the grievances have disappeared. To these of my countrymen I would recommend that they mark the splendid gallantry of the Irish regiments now in South Africa, and the further fact that it is to two Irishmen, Roberts and Kitchener, that England has intrusted her task of maintaining the prestige of her arms.

FAVORS ENGLAND.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I wish to congratulate you on the manner in which you are treating the South Africa situation in your editorial department.

Your articles of Sunday and to-day state the case with simple truth, appreciating the relation of events to one another in a manner commendably just.

The excitement of conflict and our natural sympathy for a race struggling for its home may confuse our mind about the justice of England's course, but it will be not the least of your titles to public gratitude that at this time you held the light above the doubts where all who wish may see.

It is one of the functions of a great journal to keep the light on the path which makes for the goodness of the world. It is so easy to confuse the public conscience, so easy to lead it through wrong ways to undesired ends, that the task of blazing the right way becomes very difficult, but very noble.

The answer to the question as to the righteousness of the Boer war admits of no doubt if the principle be fairly stated. It is as much a contest for liberty of action under the law as was the conflict against slavery in 1861-4. For not only are the rights of the Uitlanders refused, but also the freedom of the British to ameliorate the condition of the South African tribes is questioned and contested and crippled. Any one who makes these principles sound in the public ears will do a great public good.

I take greater pleasure in writing this letter, because I have not been able recently to lend my approval to all of the utterances of your editorial staff. A. G. J.

A SCOTSMAN'S PATRIOTISM.

England's Friends in This Country Ready to Stand by the Empire.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have read with the keenest pleasure the letters of Mr. Bleecker Miller and Mr. Shearman. I think the former's suggestions most valuable and such as should be promptly carried out in their entirety. Certainly the Boer press agency work is the finest thing of its kind ever done internationally. That much has been apparent to all for the past two months and more. Mr. Shearman's masterly synopsis of the situation as between the Boer and Britain I consider faithful, moderate, and well-timed, as well as absolutely unanswerable.

It is England's greatest pride—a pride which, times without number, has benefited white English-speaking men of other nationalities throughout the world—that she protects her citizens wherever they are. She has given a nobler, grander meaning to the proud "Civis Romanus sum" of the ancient Roman, and if ever the day comes when she no longer casts the mantle of her protection over her citizens, it will be a black day for civilization as well as for England.

Mr. Shearman has fully explained and justified England's position in South Africa, but if—from the Boer standpoint—she were undoubtedly wrong, she would still be right from her own, since the issue involved in the present struggle is beyond a peradventure her integrity as an empire.

Apart, however, from these questions of which is right or wrong, the first principle of good government everywhere is the greatest good for the greatest number, and I think the claim of the English race is universally allowed that under Great Britain's rule there is more protection and freedom for the individual than under any other Government, with the sole exception of the United States, and when the English union jack flies over South Africa, as fly it will, it will simply mean the survival of the fittest.

I notice a great talk about recruiting of Boer sympathizers in this country. Great Britain's friends are largely silent because their "withers are unwrung." Were the time ever to come when England should need help from her kin on this side, I can promise her the physical support of my four sons and myself, and there are many thousands here with like feelings and intentions. ENGLAND AS A COLONIZER.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The editorial in your issue of the 10th inst. entitled "England's Friends and England's Enemies" is so admirable and well timed that I wish it could be read by every intelligent American in our land.

As a native American, and having carefully examined both sides of the causes bearing upon this conflict personally, I have already in spirit offered England my sword, and would gladly do so in person did not international treaty obligations forbid its being done, for, notwithstanding her record as the great land-grabber of the universe, yet no man can truthfully refuse to accord to her the palm as the colonizer thus far among the nations, (the Fates apparently decreeing this to be her Heaven-ordained mission,) her best blood and treasure freely backing every such enterprise, and the benign influences of civilization always quickly following her arrival upon the scene.

Let us not fail to recall the two good old sayings, "Honor to whom honor is due" and that "Fair play is a jewel," the latter commodity being in my humble opinion (e. g., on the lines of strict impartial justice between man and man, rich and poor alike) more fully obtainable throughout the boundaries of Great Britain than in any other portion of the globe.

BRITON, BOER, AND BULLY.

The Views of a British Resident on the Forces and Aims of His Native Land.

For the benefit of those of your readers who "rush in where angels fear to tread" and forecast the downfall of the British Empire through the war that Great Britain is now waging against the South African Republic, permit me to say that the numerical strength of the British Army, according to the most reliable data published by the British War Office, inclusive of volunteers—a branch of the service similar to the National Guard—aggregates nearly 700,000 men.

This total, for a nation where military service is not compulsory, should be enough to impress the mushroom prophets of the day, those who already see Macaulay's New Zealander standing on London Bridge surveying the ruins of the British capital, that, even though 200,000 men take the field in South Africa, there are enough left to protect Great Britain's possessions and interests in other parts of the world. But in the event that the 500,000 men now under the control of the War Office should not be deemed enough to cope with other eventualities, it may be interesting to note that Great Britain has a large male population on which she can draw whenever the empire is menaced.

According to the census of 1895 there was in the United Kingdom a population of no less than 18,000,000 men—one-sixth of whom would prove available in an emergency. It is true that few, if any, of these have had military experience, but it is equally true that during the war of the rebellion—a struggle which most Americans will admit was for the preservation of the Union—a large number of men drafted in the Northern army who went to the front lacked this essential qualification, yet the Northern arms were triumphant.

There is little doubt that in case of necessity the male population of the British colonies would also be patriotic enough to rally round the flag for colonial defense.

If there exists among the European powers a sinister desire to strike a blow at Great Britain now that about one-third of her effective army is on active service, that power, or, if need be, those powers, would pause before they would invite the attention of the British Navy to their shores, especially as it is generally admitted that that navy is more powerful than those of any other two nations combined, and as Great Britain has coaling stations enough and to spare throughout the world.

That the conditions which brought about the present deplorable situation in South Africa are not without parallel in history any student of the progress of the world must know. Take, for instance, the events that led to the independence of Texas. A number of American colonists who settled in this region were placed under great hardships by the Mexican Government and by the administration of Mexican laws. Lieut. Augustus W. Magee, who conceived a plan of revolutionizing Texas, took possession of Nacogdoches July, 1812; reached Goliad and took possession Nov. 1; Gov. Sal and the incredibly short time they have taken to put 50,000 men in the field.

Wherever a Briton is allowed to place his foot and invest his money and the product of his labor, his Government stands ready to protect him. What better proof can be asked than in the war against Abyssinia, when $100,000,000 was spent to rescue three missionaries? What other nation would do it? Further, if the Government of Great Britain was not of the broadest and most equitable character and the colonies in every respect satisfied, would they rally as they have done to the standard, and would peer and peasant move as one man if the Government of England was what these ignoramuses would have us believe?

Events have shown the Boers meant war from the first, and, while all deplore it alike, it must be fought to the finish. The Anglo-Saxon race must inevitably come together for their own preservation and the world's progress, and let them not forget the foes of their own household, more potent for evil than those from afar. Secret forces are planning the overthrow of this most progressive of races, and it behooves them all to be wary and watchful.

SALUTES THE BOER FLAG.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

What is the flag of the Transvaal Republic? If the present war keeps on as it is now going, it will soon be in the list of the flags of nations. Poor old John Bull. He is brave with the bravery of the lion by which he is typed. But he is still laboring, after a hundred years or more, under the same old disability of the times of the American Revolution. He cannot understand the word resistance, where he is concerned. He seems to imagine that all must give way before his advance and in his presence. The victims of a hundred years ago of overconfidence were at Saratoga, Trenton, Monmouth, Yorktown.

Now, White, Methuen, Gatacre, Buller, fall victims to this overweening confidence that whatever is British must sweep the field. John never could comprehend how any one could stand up before his famous redcoats. Braddock's fate, brought about by this same lofty contempt for a shifty foe, was probably never comprehended in England.

The Boers are only farmers, are they? Well, Napoleon's Old Guard was composed of the children of peasants. It was the shots from farmers' muskets at Lexington which, "heard round the world," foretold to this same blind British courage of what was to come at Bunker Hill. But they could not see the shadow cast before, and, well, they bravely paid the penalty.

London and all England are aflame! Well, let them flame. That is also what they did a hundred years ago. But the flame of the firing line from men who can hit takes precedence over dress parade.

It begins to look as though the independence of the Transvaal is guaranteed. Of what sort is their flag? Will some one run it up so we may salute the new colors?

MR. KRUEGER'S INVITATION.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have read the remarks of Mr. Thomas G. Shearman in recent issues of your paper and also the replies thereto with great interest—and some profit. But there is one point I am puzzled over, and that not a little. Mr. Shearman lays great stress upon the so-called "invitation" extended by Krüger in 1884, when Krüger was merely a Commissioner in England endeavoring to perfect a treaty with Great Britain. If my understanding is correct, that "invitation" was extended before the treaty was signed and ratified. It is familiar law here and in England that all talk indulged in prior to the signing of a contract or written instrument, even when repugnant to the provisions of the instrument, is presumed to be merged therein, and if it was agreed verbally that thus and so should be done, and the instrument omits that, then it is conclusively presumed that the parties changed their minds. The maxim: "Parole evidence will not be received to vary a written instrument." Therefore Krüger's invitation, so-called, was merely so much emptiness unless its substance appears in the treaty subsequently negotiated. Hence all dragging in of that invitation by the heels is merely so much effort to obscure the real point.

Again, in international law, "the law of the land may without injustice place them (the aliens) in an inferior position to the native-born subject. Thus they may be obliged to pay a residence tax, may be restricted as to the power of holding land, may have no political rights, may be obliged to give security in suits where the native is not, may be forbidden to enter into certain callings, may be subject to special police regulations, without any ground for complaint that they are oppressed." Woolsey's International Law, Sec. 66, fifth edition.

It would seem therefore that much of what Mr. Shearman says is without sound basis in law.

TO AID THE BOERS.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

An American woman desires, through the columns of THE NEW YORK TIMES, (her daily paper,) to give expression to her sympathy with the cause of the oppressed Boers.

She wishes to head a subscription for their hospital needs, making the amount so small that every lover of liberty and justice among the people may have a chance to express his sympathy with and admiration for the noble struggle that the South African Republic is making for its freedom.

We have seen that the "Four Hundred" and the moneyed aristocracy of this country have given substantial aid to impoverished England. We are also quite sure that the unarmed British "pig" will never be pierced by the savage lances of the Boers. It remains for the people of America to say and do something for the weak side.

We live to learn, and we have already learned something from the manner in which "Old Krüger" (I quote here from an American lady of note supposed to belong to the Four Hundred) has treated the wounded and prisoners of the English Army.

Inclosed please find $2, covering four subscriptions. ANNA BACH.

SYMPATHY FOR THE BOERS.

But "as Americans of True Blood, We Stand with England Against Continental Europe."

To the Editor of The New York Times:

That is a fearful arraignment of the Boers in Mr. Thomas G. Shearman's letter addressed to you, published in this morning's TIMES. Its bill of particulars is so lengthy and so specific that it impresses one with the conviction it must be correct. And yet, like many a similar effort, in its very force (apparent) lies its weakness. In the first place, it is weakened by passing from a cold statement of facts to a rather passionate impugning of motives and a fierce denunciation of hypocrisy that betrays an animus not discoverable at the earlier stages of the recital, but which necessarily reflects back upon these earlier statements and renders them less formidable, because the writer is evidently affected by a strong bias, caused by an honest indignation, no doubt, but still a bias.

Then, in the second place, Mr. Shearman's pleading suffers from that common fallacy of earnest advocates or antagonists—proving too much. Far am I from questioning his facts as he regards them. I have no knowledge of opposing facts to neutralize them. I cheerfully take my stand as a complete ignoramus before the Boer question. Yet, even from that standpoint, in exercising a moderate modicum of common sense, I ask myself: If President Krüger and his sons-in-law are only out-and-out moneygrabbers of a very bald and common order, why is it that thousands upon thousands of Boers are cheerfully braving death upon the battlefield and risking the destruction of their State? The lust for money in leaders or rulers does not usually inspire their followers with such devotion. The lust of money in the minds of the followers themselves does not usually develop the qualities of a chivalrous and desperate heroism. A dead man has no use for money, and the man who is after money and nothing else, does not throw his life away to get it. It would seem, then, as if something else was supporting Krüger in his cause; something more akin to those objects for which men are willing to fight to the last ditch; which bid men say, as the Dutch ancestors of the Boers said in the days of Alva and of Louis XIV.: "Better a drowned land than a lost land."

Again we grow suspicious about Mr. Shearman's frightful array of facts, because it has been reserved for so late a day and so respectable a gentleman to bring them forward. They seem too rank to have kept so long without detection. There was a fine chance for their airing during the trial of the Jameson raiders. Who will accuse Mr. Chamberlain of undue delicacy of feeling or hesitancy of speech in withholding them from a British public whom he wanted to be "with him" in beginning this fight?

I admire the position of THE NEW YORK TIMES on this subject, and like the tone of its editorials. Perhaps, however, the emphasis of a slight distinction would make its position clearer to some minds. When it comes to outcries against England on the part of the press of Continental Europe, we in America are all on the side of England to a man. She deserves this for the stand she took in our favor during the Spanish war. She deserves that, apart from this, for the moral or material aid oppressed communities and liberal measures have ever had from her as against oppressors or reactionaries. This is the secret of the hatred which comes so unblushingly to the fore whenever she meets with some slight humiliation. As Americans of true blood, we stand with England against Continental Europe in this clash of prejudices.

But this should not blind us to the mistake she is making in South Africa. Every cool and candid observer will say that this war would not have been but for Chamberlain. Every such impartial and conscientious student of history will also say amen to the conviction that a strong upright statesman at the head of English affairs would stop the war to-morrow. But no such man is to be found in England to-day—for Gladstone is no more, and his mantle has not fallen upon any prophet worthy or able to tread in his footsteps. Apart from all sentiments—humiliation, revenge, what not, excited by the events in South Africa—the war is an iniquitous war, and for iniquity there is no remedy but a turning away from it, a turning back short and sharp upon the tracks already made.

And it is this feeling that, however imperfect and blameworthy and provoking and unjust the Boers were, nevertheless they are fighting for something honorable, fighting for that which all men worthy of the name will and must fight for, or lose the name of men; and that England had no right to touch them in that tender spot where honor and self-respect are at stake; it is this feeling which has created a widespread sympathy in America for the Boers, in spite of and by the side of a genuine friendship for the English name and fame. You cannot go anywhere or before any audience in New York City without observing that a mention of the Boers in their struggle will arouse an instantaneous enthusiasm. A picture of Chamberlain thrown upon the screen at a recent lecture I attended (the subject was not the present war, but municipal government) elicited a clapping from just three persons in widely separated portions of the auditorium.

MR. SHEARMAN AND THE BOERS.

A Humorist's View of Persons and Principles.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your issue of yesterday I noticed another effusion signed by Thomas G. Shearman, a person hitherto unknown, but evidently a new star in the world of writers of humorous fiction. It seems to me that you ought to have a special heading made for his department, and label it "Laugh and Grow Fat." That would enable those who want to gain in weight to turn to the proper place without much delay. At any rate, you ought to give your readers a continued supply of his gentle, jocular ravings.

The joke about the American gentlemen who committed no wrong and were so terribly abused by the awful Dutchmen certainly is very pathetic. No doubt it will be tearfully remembered by many, even when the Artemus Wards, Bill Nyes, &c., are forgotten. Why not ask your humorist to write something on why England should immediately march into Russia and extend her civilizing influence in that country.

I am told that there is much to do along the civilizing and wrong-rectifying line—conditions are said to be almost as bad as in Boerland, and the country is so much larger! What a subject for a fertile brain such as your chief humorist! This civilizing business could be very much extended of course, and nearer home, too! As Goethe says: "Warum in der Ferne schweifen, wenn das Gute liegt so nah." Why go to Africa? What's the matter with Turkey? Why not get up a petition and ask dear England to come over here and teach our Southern friends the art-preventative of lynching? And what about Gen. Merriam's bull-pen in Idaho? Or have her finish the work in Spain? We finished the Spaniards, that's true enough; but conditions in Spain itself are said to be awful! What an opportunity! By force of arms, of course! Why do you tremble, dear TIMES? Do you feel that the task may be too great? Four hundred million Britishers are hardly a match for 18,000,000 Spaniards? Is that it? I forgot. The brave Britishers probably think it easier to try to civilize a handful of African farmers. Hang Russia, hang Turkey, hang Spain! "A burned child dreads the fire," and the child is still burning! That, of course, is bad for your humorist, as it rather upset his calculations. And suppose it "keeps on burning"! Would not that be dreadful? The though that American gentlemen could not enjoy themselves any more in the style which your humorist so much admires is terrible to contemplate! And then what about the sphere of influence of "the burning child"? No doubt it would have to be reduced. Suppose its right arm burned off entirely. The left will be sorely needed at home. In Ireland, for instance. To protect "Pushful Joe" from violence, for instance. To protect your chief humorist when he travels abroad, as "the European papers" are so awfully sour on him, according to one of his earlier funny effusions.

And the dreadful Boer! What of him? Perhaps your chief humorist will buy himself an armor and horse, like Don Quixote, and go to Africa and fight the devils single-handed! That would be great! Of course, America would lose its chief humorist, but what of that! The world would be the better. Give us more of his writings now. Let's have all that is to be had before he leaves on his knighthood expedition!

ENGLAND'S RULE BETTER.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It has been a pleasure to note the long view of the South African war taken in THE TIMES of Sunday and Monday. We all lament the apparent lack of tact and patience of Mr. Chamberlain, but he is possessed of more information as to what has been going on behind the scenes than his critics. The ample preparations of the Dutch may indicate not caution, but a long-cherished intention to force the issue. Leaving aside the immediate occasion of the war, which has become immaterial, is it not true: First—That the English is a better form of administration than the Dutch would be likely to give? Second—That under the English more of personal liberty is likely to be enjoyed? Third—That economic freedom is nowhere so complete as under the English flag? Fourth—That those who are praying and plotting for England's overthrow are also the enemies of the United States, with the exception of hypocritical and despotic Russia?

Do we wish to see England humiliated and her possessions partitioned, and to stand alone among the nations? I regret that industrial Germany does not see that she has everything to gain from the unrestricted trade opportunities with countries under English rule. Is she so far from the Russian border as her recent policy would seem to indicate? I fear that the yellow journalism is making the nations a little Frenchy and touchy and too likely to fly at each other like a crowd of armed bullies. We are becoming dangerously self-conscious. D. COLLIN WELLS.

THE ANGLO-AMERICAN ENTENTE.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have enjoyed, in common, I believe, with a large majority of your readers, your exceedingly intelligent and well timed editorials on the conflict between the British and the Boers. I think they reflect the views of all large minded Americans. Britain was our friend when her friendship was of value to us and certainly at the cost of making for herself enemies among the European powers. Shall we be less brave and generous to her in her hour of adversity? The true heart of America will not outrage her high ideals of honor and chivalry by an ungenerous or ungrateful act.

The two English speaking nations are marching side by side toward the common goal of a broader civilization and a nobler manhood for the race, and the yelping of the small American will be lost in the resounding tread of the combined legions of the old world and the new.

THE BOER NOT FOR SALE.

President Krueger and His People from a Financial and Industrial Point of View.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Mr. Thomas G. Shearman, in his letter in your journal Dec. 21, seems—perhaps unconsciously—to be writing to prove that the Boers are either a nation of idiots or the most patriotic people on the face of the globe. In his numbered arguments I omit No. 1 as of no moment. No. 2 says that Mr. Krüger sold one of his farms for $500,000, paid in gold; his friends and neighbors sold other farms at even greater prices, they in all receiving many millions of dollars from (Uitlanders) foreigners. No. 3. These foreign settlers produce every dollar's worth of wealth which can be exported from the Transvaal. No. 4. The taxes levied annually in the Transvaal have exceeded $20,000,000, nine-tenths collected from foreigners. No. 5. If this sum were equally divided among all the Boers it would furnish an annual income for each family of $2,000.

No. 6. This has not been done; one-half of this income has been spent in war preparations, and the other half in enormous salaries to, and jobs for, Mr. Krüger, his sons-in-law, and friends and political supporters. Mr. Krüger himself has avowedly received $35,000 a year salary, and additional sums of $15,000 and $25,000 for his benefit.

No. 8. The foreign settlers built Johannesburg, formerly of 50,000 inhabitants, and all badly governed and badly policed, and all resulting in a higher death rate than even in badly governed New York. (I thought New York enjoyed a low death rate.)

No. 17. The whole Transvaal Government was corrupt.

No. 18. Having remonstrated in vain against corruptions, &c., the foreigners, among them many Americans, conspired to overthrow the Government.

No. 19. This conspiracy was discovered.

No. 20. They pleaded guilty to a minor offense, as they supposed.

No. 21. Four of the leaders (one of them an American engineer who enjoyed an immense salary) were sentenced to death.

No. 22. Even the Dutch settlers of South Africa were horrified. (Is it possible that the Dutch were horrified at sentence of death for treason.) But so it seems! Englishmen would never have been; (think of the Canadian rebellion and 500 years of Irish history, with some Scotch thrown in.)

No. 23 to 25. The criminals who attempted to subvert the Government were let off with a fine for charitable contributions of $1,000,000, our high-paid American being among them to the handsome tune of $100,000, or a year's salary.

No. 26. Both the British and American Governments submitted meekly to these outrages, (against plotters and traitors.) No wonder Krüger described both Englishmen and Americans as "dogs."

This, Mr. Shearman says, was before the Jameson raid. Were the Jameson freebooters executed? Nor was John Hays Hammond worthy of any grace anywhere, and yet he was let off with a fine.

It seems to me that Mr. Shearman is designedly or otherwise proving the wonderful patriotism of Mr. Krüger, his sons-in-law, and the Boers in general.

Have they not driven out with ignominy and contempt those base slaves who were paying them $20,000,000 per annum, and, like the children of Israel in Egypt, building their cities for them. In scorn and disgust or for other reasons, these Boers have seen fit not only to free these slaves of foreigners, but have sent them away. I have seen somewhere an account of these foreigners who worked in the mines; the very scum of all the earth. A vision of life at Kimberley and Johannesburg was said to have been fit for Satan's kingdom. Anyway, the Boers have thrown away the $20,000,000 a year, Mr. Krüger cannot sell farms now for $500,000, nor his sons-in-law nor his friends. No. Voluntarily, as the Russians did at Moscow, they have burnt their city of wealth.

Only in tremendous trials do nations do such things. We can only imagine why these men have thrown away wealth and ease and comfort for wounds or death, for hunger, disease, and all which follows in the wake of war. As Mr. Shearman has shown with what lavish hands the foreigners scattered their wealth among the simple farmers of the Transvaal, we must know that none but fools would throw such wealth away. Unless—there are some things a brave man, a patriotic man, will not endure! What those things are we can only imagine.

As Mr. Shearman has shown, no man was executed for the two attempts at revolution. But they pondered in their hearts what might come next. Imagine a John Hays Hammond, a Jameson, a Cecil Rhodes, triumphantly in power in Pretoria. Perhaps wounds and death, hunger, disease, and all that war brings, as I have said—all this might be preferable to living under the rule of such men as have made Johannesburg and Kimberley a hell for many years. Let any one read an account of the life led in those places by the godless miners, and then think of simple farmers, who believe in the Bible, in the Church, as they undoubtedly do. It is idle for us to call them otherwise. Americans who have Puritan blood know how for 300 years their religion has been called cant, that they have been called whited sepulchres, &c.

I believe that Mr. Shearman has shown the Boers as entitled to our distinguished consideration. All the gold of the Rand, all the diamonds of Kimberley, cannot buy them. More, they have chosen—as their ancestors chose—to let in the waters of the Atlantic, cut the dykes, let in destruction and death, rather than temporize with wealth when it means submission to godless foreigners, to national extinction.

THE BOERS' DEFENSE.

Moral of an Alleged Episode in Mr. Shearman's Career.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It has been quite amusing to me to read the several letters of Mr. Thomas G. Shearman, which have appeared in your columns lately. He seems to see only the worst character of a few Boer politicians, such as we find wherever we may go.

He also dwells only on the recent developments, but does not enter into any discussion about the earlier history of the Boers, which easily explains the distrust and hatred the inhabitants of the two South African republics have toward their English oppressors. It took years of just such hatred to finally incite the old New Englanders to overthrow the English rule in the colonies, and nobody will now say that it was not for the good of our country.

As for the conspiracy of a certain Outlander clique, Mr. Shearman says that they had never committed an overt act against the Transvaal. Now we certainly would consider the collection of arms, gunpowder, &c., for the purpose of overthrowing the Government a very serious crime, considering that the leaders had been in communication with an armed force of another country and were only prevented from more serious acts by the timely discovery of the plot. That the jail was filthy and the treatment of the prisoners was bad, I cannot contradict, but the impression I received at the time from illustrations in The London Graphic and The Illustrated News certainly disproved such assertions, for there was drinking and gambling a plenty.

As to the mortality in Johannesburg, I hear it from a former inhabitant of that city that it is mainly among the young men, caused chiefly through omission of the proper care for health and body, as also through the terrible dust, which often covers the city during the dry period and is bad for the lungs.

The cheerful description from the pen of Mr. Poultney Bigelow of the better traits of the Boer character certainly contradicts, if only indirectly, the many assertions of Mr. Thomas G. Shearman. The former writer has seen the country and people, while I can only see your correspondent quote from other people's books. There was a certain evening in Gloversville, N. Y., in February, 1894, when I had sympathy with a Mr. Thomas G. Shearman. At the invitation of a few Democrats he delivered a speech about free trade, which he finally had to cut short, having been interrupted continually, not so much by loafers or workmen, as by manufacturers themselves.

At the conclusion there came upon Mr. Shearman a perfect hail of missiles, such as rotten eggs, &c., and the speaker had to be escorted to his hotel by a detachment of police, being threatened with bodily violence for having spoken against the sacred convictions of those protectionist manufacturers. This incident was described at the time in New York papers. Now, if this had happened in Johannesburg, what a howl Mr. Shearman would have set up. It would be much safer for him to do it, because he is far enough away. So let Mr. Shearman sweep before his own door before criticising the affairs of another country, which has taken up arms in a righteous cause, the defense of its homes and liberty. And this cause is by no means diminished because the Boers are fighting it out in the enemy's country. It simply shows that this corrupt Government had laid the plans shrewdly and had carefully prepared for war. And who can blame that Government if it considered the defense of its country a charity worthy to receive the $1,000,000 which the conspirators had to contribute.

OUR DEBT TO ENGLAND.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your editorials of the 18th and 19th sympathizing with Great Britain in her reverses—or repulses—is very opportune, to say the least. There is no kind of doubt but that a very large majority of the American people are in deep sympathy with England at this time. Our interests are so interwoven with England's in every way, as has been well said, that we cannot do otherwise than sympathize with her unless we are ingrates, and there are always some of those in every country, and this country is no exception to that rule, and, too, the ingrate always makes lots of noise; on an average one of them will make noise enough for fifty ordinary individuals. But the sensible, quiet people don't say much, but they can be depended upon every time to do and say the right thing by any individual or nation.

And who dares say we (the American people) would not have had to eat crow during our trouble with Spain had it not been for the brave stand which England took in our behalf, and now some men calling themselves Americans (a misnomer, I fear,) have the ingratitude to come out against England.

"O wad some power the giftie gie us, to see ourels as ithers see us!" Some, yea many, of these anti-Englishmen are so small you would need a microscope to see them on the point of a pin. But thank God the anti-Englishmen don't cut much ice and never did. They are always blatting, though.

Great Britain can have her own row; a few repulses will only tend to spur her on to victory. Look at her colonies, the best governed in the world and the most prosperous. Yea, in many respects we Americans are loath to admit, her laws are better than our own.

Dear Editor, you have always been noted for having the courage of your convictions. God bless you; stand up for right, don't slunk and be an ingrate.

HOLDING THE CAT'S TAIL.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Mr. Shearman's arraignment of facts as to the Boers of the Transvaal, and incidentally of the Boers themselves, for their pertinacity in holding what they have conquered and earned, is followed in THE TIMES of Dec. 21 by one of your "Nuggets"—

"The Cat Did the Rest.

"Mother—Stop pulling the cat's tail, Reggie.

"Reggie—I ain't pullin' it; I'm jes' holdin' it.—Syracuse Herald."— which is an amusing retort to Mr. Shearman, whether intended or not; most likely not.

Paul Krüger and his fellow-Dutchmen have been and are just holding on; the Outlanders have been and are doing the pulling. The cat and the tail belong to the Dutchmen. Whether the valuables pulled out of their soil have manifoldly enriched the Outlanders or not Mr. Shearman omits to state, probably because it is a manifest fact; if otherwise, the Outlanders wouldn't want to remain.

Can the Dutchmen be blamed for holding on to at least the tail of their cat? Thousands of Americans, descendants of our early settlers, are hoping that Chief Krüger may hold its tail now, and in time succeed in again tucking the whole mercenary cat under his arm, where it will be safer than if given its own head. IN DEFENSE OF KRUEGER.

Mr. Shearman's Questions Answered in Favor of the President of the South African Republic.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I am very sorry that I did not see Mr. Shearman's questions on the Boer war, in your issue of Dec. 10; if I had I would have endeavored to have answered them. I will now try to answer some of his very authoritative statements, although he admits that they are taken "chapter and verse" from two anti-Boer writers:

1. Was it a disgrace for Paul Krüger to be poor? Was it not right for the "generous" Englishmen to pay his hotel bill?" I think it is not a disgrace to be poor, and if Mr. Shearman is a rich man, he is not justified in speaking in contempt of a poor one. The Englishman who helped Mr. Krüger was a true Englishman, and not like the ones that are now in the Transvaal.

I think this is the first time it has been stated that Krüger "publicly" invited people to settle in the Transvaal, but I have heard that he, as well as his people, were opposed to having foreigners come into the country. They certainly show it now.

2. It is very possible that he sold one of his farms to an Englishman; any man has the right to sell anything that is his own, if he can obtain a fair price. I fail to see what the selling of Krüger's farm has to do with the present position of England.

3. Certainly, the foreigners do export most of the money they dig out of the Transval's soil, and that shows that they are there for the money they can get. The money Mr. Krüger and his "sons-in-law" receive is a very small percentage of what is sent to England.

4. The tax levied on the "poor" Englishman is not to be compared to the money they are placing in their own pockets. Again Mr. Shearman says "invited into the country."

5. The Boers are the ones who are suffering, by having the worth of their land taken away, and they should have just a little compensation for it.

6. A little while ago Mr. Shearman "run down" the poor man, now he does the same to the rich man; this does not count, as it is a trifle contradictory.

7. I have heard of such things as "bribes" in England and in our own country. "People who live in glass houses should not throw stones."

8. It does seem a little hard about the government of Johannesburg, but we must consider that the honest people here in New York do not have much to say about the government; then the assertion will lose some of its edge. Instead of receiving orders from Pretoria, we receive them from Fourteenth Street and Third Avenue.

9. I fail to see what good government has to do with the death rate. Our death rate is not very large for a big city, and have we good government?

10. The Boers showed their good sense by not allowing the miners to carry arms; no decent man would want to carry two or three revolvers. They are meant for the "Diamond Dicks."

11. If the newspapers were anything like our "yellows," it was a commendable thing for the Boers to pass censure laws.

12. I think our own government has the right to dissolve open-air meetings, if conducted without a permit, and we know what a permit here in New York means.

13. There have been several instances where Outlanders have petitioned for redress, and that has happened very lately. Therefore, if a law was ever passed, it could not have been strictly enforced.

14. Here our friend lapses into that "invitation" again. If an Englishman comes here and wishes to become a citizen, he certainly has to renounce allegiance to England, and I believe that he would be obliged to serve in the army on twenty-four hours' notice if [illegible] drafted, and in time of war he could be [illegible]ted. We must remember that this is a large country, and we probably would not call on foreigners to fight. The Transvaal is a small country, and beset by dangers on every side; therefore it is only right that the foreigner who makes a living there should defend her. As to what kind of food they would receive, I cannot say, but I certainly hope that it would not be "embalmed beef."

We cannot talk about the treatment of soldiers after our last war, nor can England after the Crimean war.

15. The Boers were willing to allow the Englishmen to instruct their children in schools of their own, and they rightly refuse to pay for the teaching of another language. Does it occur to my learned friend that they might refer to our language as "barbarous" English?

16. President Krüger probably saw that the English capitalists were planning to grab through the medium of the railroad. This talking of a leader giving the profits to his relatives and "hangers-on" is altogether out of place when we consider the state of politics here and in England.

17. My friend reverts to the arguments of a cart-tail squibbler when he speaks of a government being merely "rotten."

18. Here our learned friend clearly shows that the people who style themselves "poor, ill-treated beings" are nothing but a lot of rascals. They say that Burr plotted to overthrow this Government once, and certainly some people in Russia are forever plotting along that line.

19. Here we have our city's government again. The Boers were merciful to even give them a chance for life; a traitor deserves no mercy.

20. No answer needed.

21. No matter who a man is, even if he is an American, he should be punished with death if he is a traitor.

22. Mr. Shearman here uses a name that he has no right to use as he does. I think that that spoils the statement.

23. The Boers were human and this they showed by not taking the lives of these men, but still they were stern and punished.

24. My friend likens the English unto the chicken, and that I do not deny, as they are receiving the blow in the same place that the chicken generally receives it.

25. Perhaps the "charitable contributions" will now be used to help these people repel the attack on their liberty. It certainly could not be used in a better cause.

26. Krüger should have said: "Dogs, who, if they were bad, would feel his boots."

I do not wish to try to picture the Boer as an ideal man; he has his faults, and I admit that he has done wrong. Neither do I wish to picture the Englishman as a "bloody" villain. I admire a true Englishman, but I submit that these Outlanders are not to be classed with Englishmen. They are outcasts and rascals, who are drawn to the gold fields as were the miners of '49. They would as quickly turn on the flag of England as on the flag of the Transvaal. These are what England claims to be protecting.

I would but ask my learned friend if he would like to call any of them his bosom friend? Sifting all facts, it plainly shows that England is running another of her famous land grabs. I cannot more fittingly close this letter than by quoting the words of a New York lawyer, John Nicholson, Jr. He said: "We will pat England on the back and say, 'Old man, we'll stand by you to the last, but still we think you are wrong.'" A. TRUDEAU SMITH.

SOUTH AFRICAN ADVANCE.

How the Results of the War Will Benefit Both Parties.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Permit me to thank you for your recent editorials on the British defeats and Transvaal question in general. They will indeed commend themselves to all lovers of justice. England's isolated position is due to the moral support she afforded this country during the Spanish war.

To Americans I would say do not be misled by England's enemies at home and abroad, and do not talk in a spirit of levity of the "passing of Britain," for as sure as that takes place the ultimate destruction of your Republic is assured. As I have spent many years in South Africa, and know something about England's dependencies, I would like to say a few words in answer to an "Old Toronto Boy," who must indeed be very antiquated and not conversant with modern history to have written such a very nauseating epistle. Though not perfection, (and who is?) I defy any one to point the finger of scorn at England's administration of good government in her various dependencies. Read South African history of twenty-five years ago and contrast with now. If "Toronto Boy" could read "Impressions of a Tour Through South Africa," taken by the writer in 1880-81, and then get a present-day glimpse of South Africa, I venture to say he would not be anxious for England's failure in that country.

To an "Old Toronto Boy" I would say it is not a bloody trespass in South Africa. England's right to South Africa is unassailable. The Boers are not fighting for their independence and liberty, but for an unscrupulous band of robbers at Pretoria. "Toronto Boy," it is not the manifest destiny of mankind to perpetuate a rotten system of illegal taxation and non-representation upon humanity. They (the Boers) are fighting the best friend they ever had or ever will have, and they know it.

They are not a freedom-loving people, and God forbid that an American should be so blind as to say that they are imbued with the American patriotic spirit of 1776. Thank God for a NEW YORK TIMES, for a Dr. Savage, and thank Him trebly that there is in this country an intelligent, truly American, God-fearing people, who will stand shoulder to shoulder with their kinsmen across the seas in this dark hour of her trial, a country which will never bolster up an oligarchy and never by any means stem the onward march of civilization.

I speak from a personal knowledge of the Boer and South African situation, and although deploring war at any time, I know that the present one will ultimately be for the benefit of Boer and British alike. One people, one flag, one United States of South Africa, religious freedom, political equality, government of the people by the people, for the people, and above all proudly flying the Banner of Progress.

ENGLAND, OUR ENEMY.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have been a reader of your paper for about twenty years, and have read it with a good deal of satisfaction, and no doubt considerable profit, and still read it, and expect to do so, but there comes over me a sense of great weariness when I read your editorials of recent date regarding our relations with Great Britain in connection with the South African war.

England has ever been our most bitter enemy among the nations of the earth, while other nations have shown their friendship toward us in ways that could not be mistaken.

A few years since, during Mr. Cleveland's Administration, you will remember he took occasion to send a message to Congress on Venezuelan and British affairs, which had the unanimous indorsement of the United States Congress.

The morning you published that message patriotic Americans stood more erect, and seemed to have grown taller. And after the scream of the Eagle and the roar of the Lion had quieted down, the latter became as gentle as a kitten, and has since exhibited the greatest friendliness toward us, and especially during the war with Spain treated us with a fairness of which she could scarcely be thought capable. We simply command her respectful treatment and attention.

She had no right, only on the ground of might, to make war upon the Boers, and it is to be most sincerely hoped that all her armies meet the fate of those already in South Africa, until she is compelled to cease her invasion with a chastisement so severe that she will be more considerate, and she may then deserve some of our "gush" and sympathy. But of all the nations on the face of the earth of which we should be on our most vigilant guard, it is "perfidious Albion." WESTLEIGH.

FAIR PLAY AND RELIGION.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your issue of the 21st inst. one T. G. Shearman, in twenty-three cantos, as it were, gives his opinion of the Republic of the Transvaal in such form that if the illiterate, ignorant rigmarole did not bespeak the writer's status, moral and mental, one would be led to think the Dutch race (our own respected founders) should never have supplanted the hottentot Kings of Southern Africa. It would take too much of your valuable space to notice his allegations against the Boers from his No. 1 to his 23d, and I will summarize. Boers refuse ragtag and bobtail of the British overflow of convicts, broken bankrupts, and "ne'er do wells" to become citizens and vote until a probationary lapse of years. So does the great United States. Uitlanders (foreigners) are forced to pay taxes in proportion to their numbers; so are the same sort of immigrants forced to do in New York City, or, by Heaven, we would drive them elsewhere!

This G. Shearman is especially down on the President of the Transvaal Republic for exclaiming "For the dear Lord Jesus' sake," insinuating the acme of hypocrisy, though I have read of President McKinley using similar words, and I feel sure that over half the people in the United States have abiding faith in the Lord Jesus. And so on, everything he objects to is the legal rule in the United States. But I don't think the United States would have cheated the gallows of Jameson and his "Ancient Pistol" squadron. Who the devil is Shearman, and who pays him? JOHN MECHAN.

ENGLAND'S REAL POSITION.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Being a regular reader of THE NEW YORK TIMES, it is with much interest I have read the editorials and letters regarding the war in South Africa. Being an Englishman by birth, but at the same time an American citizen, I have a deep feeling regarding the war now in progress, having relations in business and other friends in regiments.

The article "What Boer Government Is," by Mr. Shearman, is one of the most convincing letters I have read, setting forth very clearly the underhandedness of the Boers. I should like very much to see the same in pamphlet form and distributed throughout the States; it would give the general public a better knowledge of how our citizens were treated in Africa, and they will perhaps appreciate more fully the just cause the British have undertaken. I would be glad to give my share toward the printing of the same. EDWARD C. J. FINCH.

A QUESTION OF LIBERTY.

The Varied Issues that Go to Make Up the Principles on Which the War Is Fought.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Mr. Shearman, in to-day's TIMES, sets us Americans thinking anew about the South African war. He quotes freely from Fitzpatrick, Britain's partisan, but to the Boers' facts scarcely more than refers. It does him credit to suppose that, like an upright Judge, he has lent an impartial ear to both pleas. Where lie his sympathies, to begin with, is as plain as day. The Outlanders, in his eyes, make out a strong case, and so they may—from the English point of view. But that is not our view. Being neither Boer nor English, our view must be purely American. The items set forth by Mr. Shearman so cleverly, fail, except with the special pleaders of England in this country, to convince the people of the United States that the Dutch Republic is altogether in the wrong. To Americans, this Transvaal business is an abstract one; simply a question of liberty and self-defense. They think they see a republic fighting for existence against a greedy empire—the former resembling our own colonies in 1776, and the latter, as always, bent on conquest and acquisition, not merely for territory, but solely because the land coveted happens to contain the ever magic metal, gold.

That the Boer is undesirable, despotic, and selfish; that he resists encroachment, resents all outside interference and insists upon doing what he will with his own, and who is inferior to the foreigners, who wish to conduct his political affairs more after their own style than his—this the American does not weigh when he ponders on the justness of this war. Americans here make their own laws, to which Englishmen must submit or stay aloof; and naturally while they may suppose that the Boer and the Outlander are both wrong, yet the error and the injustice are not all with the Dutchman. In his own eyes, the Briton cannot err; and if we look at the Boer as he does, (as his friends here are doing,) to give the Transvaaler any hearing is sheer folly. But why should we? If, in every dispute not ours, we must side with the biggest army, the greatest navy, and the richest treasury, it will be a gross waste to study the moral side of the various questions sure to come between the big and the little powers of the earth. The logic of that can lead to but one outcome—the survival of the biggest. Between gush and spite there ought in this matter to be some middle ground for sane Americans to occupy.

One class believes England infallible because of her vast strength, and the other distrusts her on that very account. If the latter is of Irish or French or German origin—here we find cause and effect. As for the average American, he could not if he would forget 1776, 1812, and 1861. Every schoolboy knows what Britain then tried to do, and what she thought she had the right to do, to the land of his birth. I hope that we are not a vengeful or vindictive people.

But it is simply human nature for Uncle Sam to believe that he owes nothing to England which he has not earned and fought for; and he perceives how the Outlander covets the Boer country, and why England means to take it for its gold—not that it is right, but because she thinks she has the guns to take it. The Boer fights and dies for his country, because he found it a wilderness and made of it the cradle of a republic, like our own Pilgrims who, driven from England from love of religious liberty, were no more tolerant of Church Outlanders than the Boer is of the Outlander of politics.

In South Africa the contest is not for territory long in dispute, as the life of a republic. Britain openly makes of it a issue of endurance. Americans understand that the Boer has been cunningly nagged into open war. The contention of the Outlanders, as set forth by Mr. Shearman, seems to be a dangerous one when carried to its logical issue. That they are required to be citizens of no country for fourteen years before becoming voters in the Transvaal seems to us a real hardship, provided, of course, that they are anxious to forswear their allegiance to the Queen in a much shorter space of time casion to discuss the personality of Mr. Chamberlain.

Turning to your criticism of his South African policy, permit me to say that, reasoning from the generally accepted facts, I reach a distinctly opposite conclusion. Having watched the career of this incisive, resolute, progressive man of the people for nearly thirty years, I can unhesitatingly affirm that at no period has he stood higher in my estimation than at this hour. In some of your comments on the war now raging between the Boer and the Briton, you seem anxious to convey the impression that of all men involved in that momentous conflict, Secretary Chamberlain is the most culpable. He himself would be the last to shirk responsibility for his acts, and I have no intention of doing so on his behalf. On the contrary, I contend that, among British statesmen, he has been the first to see that opposing elements were irreconcilable, and being so, to insist that the time had come for a settlement that would endure longer than the one entered into eighteen years ago. Such settlement cannot come too soon, but when it does come it will be thorough; for it must be based on the laws of nature—of human nature, if you will—"the survival of the fittest."

The fittest, in this case, has just been described by your brother of The Tribune, in words to which, I think, you would subscribe, "the greatest and most beneficent empire the world has ever seen." Her present apparent weakness as a military power only proves the beneficence of her rule, and recent disasters will make her mightier than she has ever been. Her people are united to an extent unknown within the memory of living men. Her colonies are sending their best and best-beloved sons to risk their lives in her behalf. For much of this she has to thank Mr. Chamberlain, who was the first to breathe life into the dull routine of the Colonial Office—the first to turn and face the now defunct "peace-at-any-price" members of his party, who had exclaimed, "Perish the colonies!" That mighty mother of nations is not yet calling for help outside her own borders. But should any of her ancient enemies make further help necessary let me tell you that a whisper will suffice, for she is not without friends among the citizens of this Republic.

No, the Lion has not been dead, has been sleeping these forty years, despite the pin-pricking and tail-twisting to which he has been subjected. He woke up yesterday. To-day he takes a survey of his domain. To-morrow, unless all signs fail, he will be rampant.

Just now the spirits of two departed statesmen hover over the scene—one a death's head, the other an inspiration. One is stained by the blood of brave men, and his memory is dimmed with the tears of many a humble, and many a noble household—Boer as well as British. The ill-timed "magnanimity" that followed Majuba was not understood, therefore not appreciated, by those on whom it was worse than wasted. That it would be wasted was foretold at the time, and has since been retold on ten thousand platforms. But the most unanswerable demonstration of all was reserved for the two months that have elapsed since civilization rubbed its eyes after reading Mr. Krüger's unpolished ultimatum. His thirty thousand poor, peace-loving people have developed into an invading army of a hundred thousand warriors, armed to the teeth with destructive weapons of the latest model, and officered by graduates from some of the best military schools in Europe, an army apparently equal to the requirements of a population of twenty millions if placed on a war footing. The money by which all this was made possible came from the overtaxed, unrepresented Outlanders, whose capital, enterprise, and actual toil had rescued the bogus republic from bankruptcy. Truly, this year's crop of dragon's teeth has been wonderfully prolific. It has already "staggered humanity."

The body of Disraeli had been laid to rest a year before the seeds of this harvest were scattered broadcast by his wordy antagonist. Had he been spared, that infamy might not have been consummated. But his name is untarnished, his memory is held in high esteem, and the genius of his statesmanship is now being seen in true perspective.

He is not dead, if unforgotten still
Of that great-hearted England whom he led
Not to forget herself. He is not dead.
If she be high and happy. And should God will
That she go down, by banded fraud and skill,
And might of emulous empires encompassed;
If she make earth and sea her dying bed,
And the rent world her monumental hill,
He is not dead. But when her blood runs slow,
And chills for fear at every fiery breath
Of braggart peoples, when to avoid the blow,
She waits on every word armed Europe saith,
Content to buy and sell, then shall ye know
Him dead, indeed, and fortunate in his death.

THE BOERS' RIGHTS.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In reading your editorial of this morning, (Dec. 19,) entitled "England's Enemies and England's Friends," I was astonished to find any paper in this "land of the free and home of the brave" advocating sentiments so contrary to all our traditions and the principles upon which our country was founded.

The Boers are fighting for liberty and freedom quite as much as our forefathers in the Revolution. How any of their descendants or those who inherit the rights and privileges for which they fought and died can wish the Boers subjugated to British tyranny is strange indeed.

I can only believe it is the greed for gold which has so perverted the opinion of freemen. The times are bad indeed for this country when reputable newspapers, which are supposed to voice public sentiment, advocate the cause of tyranny and oppression exercised by a stronger toward a weaker nation.

English newspapers may be pardoned this course, on the ground of patriotism, falsely so called, but American papers have no such excuse when they are carried away by false interest, belying all the principles of justice, equity, and humanity. Whatever may be said for England, right and justice are on the side of the Boers. If any one doubts this let him read the able articles in The North American Review for December, especially the one by Mr. Bryce, author of "The American Commonwealth." Alas, alas, how are the mighty fallen! Pecuniary interests sway and rule our judgments. We may exclaim with the Scripture, Who is this that darkens counsel with words? Let God be true and every man a liar.

Shall we do evil that good may come?

Boer Sympathy and Prejudice.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your recent editorials on the British defeats are "all right," and have won you new friends in this city. So far as my observation goes, about 90 per cent. of the pro-Boer sentiment is based upon prejudice and ignorance. A few more broadsides from THE TIMES and from such men as the Rev. Dr. Minot J. Savage ought to stimulate men to do more thinking and less kicking.

WAR AGAINST INDEPENDENCE.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The greater part of the article "England's Enemies and England's Friends" may be true; none the less is it true that in the present difficulty with the Boers England is warring against a fundamental American principle—independence.

She has brought upon herself humiliation and defeat, and needlessly caused suffering and death, not only to her enemies, but her own people. No right-spirited American is justified in extending sympathy to England in her present position. C. G. CULIN.

Krueger Lived High.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I have read in to-day's issue of THE TIMES the communication of Mr. Thomas G. Shearman setting forth the bad conduct of President Krüger and the wicked Boers. There is something Mr. Shearman has omitted which should be added to the list, viz.: One Jameson, with the aid of the virtuous Outlanders, made a raid to capture the Transvaal. Jameson and his good men were defeated and most of them captured. According to English precedent, the prisoners were all hanged, except such of them as were blown from the mouths of cannon. President Krüger thereupon, made a claim for £50,000 damages for the raid, and the English Government cheerfully paid this sum without arbitration or demur. Whereupon President Krüger spent all the money in riotous living. J. W. M.

THE BOER CASE REVIEWED.

"No Justification for the Shocking War Between Two Christian Nations."

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your issue of Dec. 20 you publish Mr. Shearman's twenty-six articles against the Boers, but with all the legal ability of the writer he makes out a poor case. His twenty-six articles furnish no justification for the shocking war between two Christian nations, who instead of fighting should at this Christmas season be rejoicing in the advent of the Prince of Peace.

Allow me briefly to review the case. The points are as follows:

1. That Mr. Krüger was at one time so poor that he could not pay his hotel bill. Possible, but doubtful. But what has that to do with the war? That he invited Englishmen to come to the Transvaal. No doubt he thought they would behave themselves. He now knows he made a mistake.

2. That farms were sold at high figures. What is the harm?

3. That foreign settlers produce the wealth of the Transvaal. Again, what harm? We have thousands of foreigners among us who are doing the same.

4. That foreigners pay a large part of the taxes. It is in a measure so with us; especially with the taxes on tobacco and liquor. Foreigners surely cannot expect to avoid the tax regulations?

5. That no appreciable part of the taxes is expended for the benefit of the foreign settlers That is simply not true; the benefits of government are for all alike, except, of course, that the foreigner cannot vote. (Mr. Shearman's arithmetic in this paragraph is in need of correction, or would he have us believe that there are only 10,000 families among the Boers?)

6. That much of this is spent for war preparations. It is evident that this money has been well spent; the Boers have ammunition, and know how to use it. As to Mr. Krüger's income—possibly Mr. Shearman's is more than that, but therein is no cause for war. Mr. Krüger seems to be worth a good salary.

7. That there has been bribery among Boer officials. Well, we have a little history of our own like that. We cannot say much.

8. That foreigners cannot rule Johannesburg. But foreigners cannot rule New York—before they are naturalized.

9. Is a case for an investigating committee.

10. That foreign settlers are denied the right to bear arms. Evidently a measure of necessity. So are articles 11, 12, and 14.

13. If true, this is a piece of unwise legislation. But, dear me, where are all the laws perfect?

14. The difficulty concerning the Outlander franchise is serious. But who can blame the Boers because they are unwilling to be swamped by foreigners who are there not as bona fide settlers, but only as traders and miners, and who will leave when the mines give out? We deal far worse with the Chinese.

15. That English speaking children must take their education exclusively in Dutch. Well, bona fide settlers cannot object to the use of the language of the country, can they? How is it among us? We expect that the children of the Italians, Dutch, Danes, &c., shall attend our schools and use our language. But as a matter of fact a reliable informant says that where ten families request it instruction is given in English. That is far more liberal than we are.

16. About monopolies. But again we have a few here! I paid 75 cents per gallon for kerosene in Colorado a few years ago, and my friends of the Standard Oil Company paid dividends. Perhaps Mr. Shearman can think of other monopolies.

17. That the whole Transvaal Government was corrupt from top to bottom. If that were true, could Mr. Krüger have the love and confidence of his people? Evidently this statement is drawn from "the anti-Boer" side. Mr. Shearman admits that he draws information from that quarter.

18-24. Here we have a frank statement of conspiracy for treason, for which sentence of death was pronounced. Perhaps the sentence was too severe; but it was not executed, and the offenders were pardoned after paying various sums. They may be thankful that they came off so easily. What would England have done in such circumstances? Of course England and America did not intervene; for such a crime that was impossible.

25. This is unworthy of Mr. Shearman, inasmuch as it contains a slur upon Mr. Krüger's piety. Krüger is pious; so is Mr. Shearman; both are men prominent in their respective churches, and both are unquestionably sincere, though probably neither of them is perfect.

26. The outrages were not perpetrated upon British and American subjects, but by them. Mr. Shearman's point of view is erroneous.

We may all agree that the Boer Government is not perfect, and that some of their laws are burdensome to some of the people. Some of the British laws are burdensome to Klondikers. But where shall we find a country where there is not room for improvement?

The pith of the matter is in the greed of the Outlanders and the British. If the Outlanders do not like the Transvaal why do they stay there? The Boers were satisfied by themselves until English greed for gold and diamond mines and dominion stirred up trouble. For this, after the peace conference, England is sullying her flag in a most wicked war, compelling the Boers to fight or be swallowed up. What a pity that Joseph Chamberlain and the other men guilty of this outrage upon a small nation cannot be compelled to face the guns of the Boers, instead of the innocent men and boys of the English Army, who are offering their lives with heroic but mistaken devotion. England may succeed by her power, but might does not make right. The Judge of all the earth keeps record.

BEACONSFIELD'S BEQUEST.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In commenting on the mischievous policy of Charles Townshend, who, as Chancellor of the Exchequer in the Ministry of George III., framed the famous laws of 1768 for the regulation of commerce in the American Colonies, among which was the provision for the imposition of a duty on tea that subsequently acquired so grave an import in the quarrel between the King and his American subjects, Prof. Fiske has written:

"The feeling by which the King's party was guided in the treatment of the American question was very much the same as the feeling which lately inspired the Tory criticisms upon Gladstone's policy in South Africa. Lord Beaconsfield, a man in some respects not unlike Charles Townshend, bequeathed to his successor a miserable quarrel with the Dutch farmers of the Transvaal; and Mr. Gladstone, after examining the case on its merits, had the moral courage to acknowledge that England was wrong, and to concede the demands of the Boers, even after serious military defeat at their hands. Perhaps no other public act of England in the nineteenth century has done her greater honor than this. 'But,' said the Jingoes, 'all the world will now laugh at Englishmen and call them cowards.' In order to vindicate the military prestige of England, the true policy would be, forsooth, to prolong the war until the Boers had been once thoroughly defeated, and then acknowledge the soundness of their position. Just as if the whole world did not know, as well as it can possibly know anything, that whatever qualities the English Nation may lack, it certainly does not lack courage or the ability to win victories in a good cause! All honor to the Christian statesman who dares to leave England's military prestige to be vindicated by the glorious records of a thousand years, and even in the hour of well-merited defeat sets a higher value on political justice than on a reputation for dealing hard blows!"

Does not the present Premier of England possess some of the prescient judgment of Gladstone, or is he, like the stupid and obstinate George III., to be hurried along the dangerous and destructive path that a mere administrative subordinate has pointed out to him? And are the brave men who are so heroically hurling themselves against the unseen to be ruthlessly sacrificed at the flippant and ambitious behest of the modern Charles Townshend in the British Colonial Office? WANTS THE BOERS TO WIN.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

As an American citizen, I was amazed at the editorial in your paper of Monday, entitled "The Deplorable Reverses of the English." Do we believe in the Declaration of Independence, do we admire patriotism, or do we think William the Silent made a mistake when he fought against the "superior civilization" of the Spaniard, and that George Washington was wrong when he rebelled against the English, who were just as sure then that Americans "were not fit to govern themselves" as they are to-day that the Boers need their "civilizing" influences?

Unless we throw to the winds every principle which heretofore has been deemed American and adopt instead the European notion that the weak are the legitimate prey of the strong, we exponents of the belief that no man is "good enough to rule another against his will" must offer up peans of thanksgiving that God has "cast down the mighty from their seat and exalted them of low degree," while our sympathies and our money should go to help the brave, heroic farmers who, like those of Lexington and Concord, but with infinitely greater provocation, are fighting for "God and home and native land."

For selfish purposes that since have become most apparent, England posed as our supporter in the Spanish-American war, but does that hollow interest bind us to extend our co-operation in every deed of iniquitous robbery which "perfidious Albion" may care to perpetrate? I believe that the vast majority of American citizens, entirely outside of those with Irish blood, were filled with rejoicing by the glorious news of last week from South Africa, while boiling with indignation that such awful carnage and suffering should be brought about by the towering ambitions of a few politicians in England who took care to stay far away from the posts of danger into which they sent their helpless tools. No greater blessing could come to true civilization, as distinct from the spurious variety which England always trumps up when she desires to rob a weaker nation, than the expulsion of the red flag, stained with blood, from South Africa, and the foundation of a United States in that country, filled with the spirit and aims of the United States of the Netherlands and the United States of America.

OUTCOME OF BOER WAR.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Please accept my hearty thanks for your excellent editorial, "England's Enemies and England's Friends." It is a pity that your correspondents who criticise you will not read history aright, and appeal to reason rather than to prejudice. Can any one deny the justice, cold truth, and common sense of your remarks:

Where on the map of the broad earth can any map put his finger and say "There the United States would profit by the destruction of the British Empire?" It is not that we have any reason to wish ill to the Boers, but that we have every reason of the head and of the heart to wish England well.

She is our friend. In the highest and best sense she is our ally and we are hers. Nothing that the Boer race can ever do in the future history of the world, no idea that they will ever stand for, no impress that they will ever make upon civilization would compensate us for the loss at this time of England's sympathy and effective help.

What will be the outcome if England succeeds? Doubtless a great federation of States covering all South Africa, as democratic in their government as these United States, subject to England in little more than name, with an open door for all, and the equality, security, and general good government which prevails in all lands dominated to-day by England. Can your correspondents point to a single colony or dependency of Great Britain to-day which is not well and honestly governed? Would the honest Boers be any worse off than they are to-day? Would the natives and foreigners be any better off than they are to-day? Undoubtedly, for the Boers have treated both atrociously. It is said the Boers are fighting for their homes; what about the Uitlanders whom the Boers induced to go and settle there, buying Boer lands, and are now kicked out unceremoniously—is England not fighting for their homes and interests?

New War on Old Issue.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The present generation of Englishmen and other supporters of the divine right of Kings both in Europe and America possibly may appreciate the spirit and determination of mankind to free itself and fight for freedom now that they daily read the accounts of the wonderful defense the Boers are making against the once thought-of great British Army.

At any rate, this present war is in many respects like the defense those noble patriotic men and women made to cover the best part of this continent with God's mantle of liberty and give mankind a goal not poisoned by royalty. The American homes of to-day no doubt more keenly appreciate the great sacrifices our forefathers made for the born we never enjoy as they read of the patriotic spirit of the Boers.

The Fickle Boer.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Thanks for your splendid article by T. G. Shearman. It is perfectly true. The Boers have been false to every principle of honor from then until now. Canting, brutal, hypocritical is their true character.

READERS LOST AND FOUND.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

After your just and fearless editorial on the propriety of Anglo-American friendship the inevitable happened, of course.

"Constant Reader" was speedily joined by a motley band of "Rough Readers," who, brandishing their pens dipped in crimson ink, charged en masse upon your columns.

The impact has proved you to be a Gibraltar of Journalism. One reader bitterly upbraided you for an expression of opinion which compelled him to retire from your list of subscribers. That same day I changed my standing order at my newsdealer's, and THE TIMES now graces my breakfast table.

I venture to say that you could prove me to be but one recruit out of a large contingent to join your colors.

Children's Entertainment at Wallack's

An entertainment for children is to be given at Wallack's Theatre on the 28th of December at 2:30 o'clock, under the auspices and for the benefit of the New York Exchange for Women's Work. The programme is to consist of exhibitions of trained animals, marionettes, ventriloquists, prestidigitateurs, &c. These different attractions have been secured through the kindness of Mr. F. F. Proctor. A similar entertainment given last year during the holidays proved a great success in every way. Tickets are now on sale at the Exchange Building, 334 Madison Avenue, or can be secured by application to any of the managers.

IN FOREIGN LANDS.

M. LOCKROY, FRENCH EX-MINISTER OF MARINE, ON THE RESULTS OF THE WAR.—M. Lockroy, who has twice held the Portfolio of Marine in French Cabinets, sees in the war in South Africa a lesson which he places before his Government and his compatriots in a statement made through the press of France. The result of the war, he says, will force upon Great Britain the maintenance of a large regular army, brought into existence by the same means of conscription that are employed by the Continental powers. Concerning the effect of the reorganization of the British Army on France, he says, "Thanks to the valor of the little Boer people, we have several months, perhaps several years, to prepare for war with Great Britain, and this precious time must not be wasted."

He points out that, although a French Army Corps could be mobilized in two hours in the Vosges, English cruisers would not take two hours in menacing French ports. He therefore asserts that the frontier system of defense should no longer be applied to the coast service. Steps must be taken at once, he demands, which shall make protection of French colonies and coasts absolute, and this can only be done by increasing the naval strength of France. He concludes as follows:

"The present situation must not be allowed to continue. We must spend 300,000,000 or 400,000,000 francs on our navy, and we must take troops, if necessary, from our army to cover our coasts. Lastly, we must understand that the danger for us is no longer in the east of France, (from Germany,) as in future there will not be any more wars for ideas or races, but simply wars for the supremacy of commerce and colonization. Colonial expansion is now a condition of vitality for European nations, so we must be able to defend our colonies against British Chamberlainisms."

ENCOURAGING STATE OF ITALY'S FINANCES.—Even the Opposition press in Italy is congratulating the Government on the encouraging financial outlook. The report of Signor Boselli, the Minister of the Treasury, was recently presented to the Italian Chamber. It is composed of only about 15,000 words, or forty-six pages of printed matter, and is said to be a model of its kind. What has astonished and pleased everybody is the fact that an expected deficit has been turned into a surplus.

Prior to 1893 it was a well-known fact that Italian finances were going from bad to worse. In the strong hands of Baron Sonnino, however, the Treasury made a determined effort in 1893-4 to bring about a financial equilibrium, an effort which was successfully maintained for the two succeeding years. His successors for two years more were equally successful, until last year Signor Vacchelli found himself obliged to forecast for the year 1899-1900 a deficit of 31,000,000 lire, ($6,200,000,) following the deficit of over 15,000,000 lire for 1898-9. But Signor Vacchelli omitted to take into account the economic reawakening of the country, which, as expressed through the normal fiscal channels working at relatively low pressure, has converted the expected deficit for 1898-9 into a surplus of more than 15,000,000 lire, and has already refuced his estimate for the deficit in the current year by more than one-half, and will, if the ratio of the increase shown since June 30 last be maintained throughout the next eight months, completely cover all deficit and suffice for the extinction of more than 12,000,000 lire of redeemable debt.

For several reasons the immediate outlook has been regarded with some apprehension, since the revenue from the sales of ecclesiastical property will cease, railway construction will demand more than 20,000,000 lire, the land tax revision will cause a considerable loss, redeemable debts will claim nearly 13,000,000 lire, the navy will require an extra 10,000,000 lire, the production of native sugar will diminish the customs revenue, while subsidies to the merchant marine will demand several million lire more than was originally contemplated. These and smaller demands induce Signor Buselli to forecast a deficit of some 22,000,000 lire. But even this deficit he hopes to wipe out by the increase in import duties and by keeping the expenses within reasonable limits.

He proposes three innovations, affecting the navy, the sugar industry, and premiums to the merchant marine. He proposes that the Treasury should advance to the Admiralty 10,000,000 lire a year for the next four years, such advances to be repaid by economies to be effected in the personnel of the arsenals and other branches of the service during the next fifteen years. He proposes a new system of fiscal control for the sugar industry, which will reduce the present enormous premium of practically 38 lire per hundredweight. And as to the premiums for the construction of merchant steamers, he proposes that a maximum of 10,000,000 lire a year be fixed.

THE BAGDAD RAILWAY AGAIN.—The Turkish concession to Germans for constructing a railway through Bagdad to Basra, a distance of 340 miles, still continues to be discussed in European financial and diplomatic circles. The Novoe Vremya of St. Petersburg, in what is supposed to be an inspired article, says that the concession is the confirmation of an agreement concluded between Great Britain and Germany, by which the former is to have a free hand in Africa and the latter in Asia Minor. The Frankfurter Zeitung, also in an authoritative article, declares that the conditions of the concession have been accepted by the German group. According to the agreement, the fact is made obvious that the rights possessed by the Anatolian Railway Company will revert to the German syndicate. The fact that the Turkish Government reserves to itself the right to purchase the line at any time after completion, which must not take longer than eight years, is said to have no important significance, for, even if the Turkish Government were able to make the purchase, it must, according to another clause in the agreement, allow the syndicate's officials to operate the road. But the Zeitung, together with the Neuste Nachrichten of Berlin and the Cologne Gazette, asserts that there is no truth in the statements that British capital is to have a hand in the matter.

This last statement is contradicted in Berlin financial circles, on the authority of Baron Marschall, the prime mover in the German group. The Berlin Exchange Circular announces that 40 per cent. of the capital required will be subscribed by French investors and a large proportion of the remaining shares will be allotted to English capitalists. According to the Circular, German capital will be obliged to be content with considerably less than half the shares. The contents of the Circular are said to tend to confirm the statement made by the St. Petersburg journal.

INCREASE OF GERMAN TRADE WITH PERSIA.—In the light of the progress which German enterprise is making in Asia Minor and Arabia, the following details of Germany's trade with Persia may be of interest, as the control of industrial Persia is the aim and end of all German, Russian, and British movements in the Levant and on the Afghan frontier: In 1898, according to a report just published by the German Government, Germany imported from Persia goods to the value of 1,376,000 marks, as compared with 773,000 marks, the value in 1897. These imports consisted, for the most part, of mother-of-pearl, dates, currants, carpets, gum, walnut wood, sesame, and maize. In the last two years, taken together, German exports to Persia had a value of 747,000 marks, of which textile goods accounted for 500,000 marks, chemicals for 60,000 marks, machines and hardware for 55,000 marks, and sugar for 72,000 marks. The report also publishes for the first time the text of a recent secret commercial treaty made with Persia, in which Germany is assured the most-favored-nation rights.

WOMEN'S SUMMER SCHOOLS.

Annual State Meeting of Champlain Assembly.

The Alumnae Auxiliary Association of Champlain Assembly, an organization designed to promote the interests of the Summer school among woman academy and college graduates, holds its annual State meeting Friday, Jan. 29, at 2 P. M., in De La Salle Hall, 108 West Fifty-ninth Street. The afternoon session will be devoted to planning and discussing the work of the administration for the coming year. In the evening a reception and entertainment will be given in honor of visiting Directors and officers, at which the following will speak: The Very Rev. James P. Kiernan of Rochester, Moderator of the association; the Rev. Dr. D. J. McMahon, President of the New York branch of the Champlain Summer School, and the Rev. M. J. Lavelle, President of the Catholic Summer School of America.

Admission tickets may be had of any of the local Directors or officers or of A. R. Ryan, private secretary, 123 East Fiftieth Street.

Women Here and There—

Their Frills and Fancies

Money does not always make for happiness at Christmas time. There is one wealthy family living in a suburban town near New York where enormous sums of money are spent every year to celebrate the holidays. There is a large family, married sons and daughters, who come home for the occasion; there are hosts of presents for the servants, clothes for practical gifts, shoes that are purchased almost by the case, and, it would seem, everything that can be desired to make the day a happy one. But guests who are invited there come away with an un-Christmaslike feeling, for there is never a Christmas that passes that some member of the family is not in tears because her presents were not satisfactory. A long-suffering husband one Christmas presented his wife with a generous check that she might buy her own present and see if in that way she could not be suited. But that was the unkindest cut of all. The wife's feelings were sadly frayed by this practical gift, and there were more tears than ever.

So Mr. H. K. Bush-Brown, member of the Sculpture Society, is afraid that the members of the Rainy Day Club may take offense at the way the papers quoted his remarks made before that amiable organization the other day. And he proceeds to explain. In the course of his explanation he remarks:

"Let me advise the Rainy Day Club to change their entertainment committee. Her mistake, the mistake of the entertainment committee, was in taking them seriously." That is a little blind in wording, but plain in meaning—the Rainy Day Club takes itself too seriously. "They are not a reform club," he continues, "but an entertainment society, of which there are many of a similar name. They serve an excellent purpose and are the substitutes of this generation for the sewing circles and reading circles of our grandmothers."

Oh, Mr. Bush-Brown, oh, Mr. Bush-Brown, some men are so funny sometimes! No reporter would ever have dared to make such a statement as that.

An up-to-date, end-of-the-century woman's club a substitute for the old-time sewing circle, and it takes itself too seriously!

He was a very small boy and he was speaking a piece. It was the very first one he had ever spoken, so that either from stage fright or because he did not know how to use it his voice was so low that it was only the people in the front rows of the audience who could hear a word he said, while those behind knew only by the presence of the small boy on the platform and the movement of his lips that a "piece" was in progress. Naturally, therefore, at the end of the piece there was only a little uncertain applause. Whether or not the small boy minded this no one knew, because he did not say, but a little girl cousin was grieved to the heart.

"Do you know," she said, telling about it afterward, "Dicky didn't get a single 'core."

The Fudge Christmas tree celebration is over. It was at the house in town, where all the nice people board, so they say, and consequently it was a great success. It will always be called the Fudge Christmas tree because the two enterprising young women who arranged the affair made the money to do it by taking orders for Fudge, and chiefly from the people in the house. They spent exactly $3.75, entertained seventeen people, and feel that they did very well. Mysterious invitations were sent out, in the first place. They were typewritten and each signed "Fudge," and invited the guests to be present in the parlor of the house at 8 o'clock sharp on Saturday evening, Dec. 16. It is needless to say that every one came and came "sharp."

The doors into the back parlor were closed, but when the guests had all arrived they were thrown open and disclosed the two young women dressed as Fudges, who recited a little rhyme à la kindergarten:

Two little Fudges sweet are we,
Just as cunning as we can be;
We know how to stir, we know how to beat,
And some folks say we know how to eat.

These words were accompanied by appropriate gestures by the two Fudges. The costumes for these consisted of caps and aprons, the young woman who represented the chocolate Fudge having hers made of chocolate-colored cambric and the maple Fudge young woman wearing one of maple color and a string of walnuts around her neck, because her Fudge usually had walnuts in it. The chocolate young woman had a bowl and chocolate can hanging at one side and a cup and spoon at the other, while the maple Fudge young woman had the same, with the omission of the chocolate can. The dishes were used in beating and stirring in accompaniment to the introductory verse. The aprons were made long, with square bibs and straps going over the shoulders, and the caps with a band crown, similar to a baker's cap. They were very becoming.

After this verse the exercises of the Christmas tree began, which was to be seen standing lighted in behind the Fudges. There was a big roll of parchment on a rod, and this was gradually unrolled as different guests were called up, and for each one there were special verses which referred to a gift that was on the tree. After the reading the guest was presented with a wand and invited to find his or her gift, and the presentation was then made. The presents usually had reference to some peculiarity of the recipient. For instance, one young woman who numbered among her art treasures an antique cowbell, which she rings at times to notify musically inclined members of this big family that she disapproves of their endeavors, received a small brown cow on wheels, with the verses:

When strains of music echo beneath our chandelier
And sweetly warbled melodies fall sweetly on the ear,
A quiet peace steals over us. But what is that we hear?

Crash! Clang! The charm is broken. A hideous, awful din
Is heard, and some one whispers "Miss Soundgong must be in."
You'll find to-night a better use for your old bell of tin.

It was all the work of home poets and consequently appreciated. Really astonishing results were attained with the small amount of money expended. The tree might have been more elaborately decorated and had more candles, but not a cent was spent outside the legitimate fund of $3.75. Forty cents of this bought a tree, which reached nearly to the ceiling, 10 more a standard; the presents, none costing over 10 cents, were bought; there was a paper cap for each guest, a little pocket calendar, advertising, to be sure, but extremely pretty, and there was a stick of peppermint candy for every woman and a candy cigar for each man and two pounds of nuts for refreshments. After the distribution of gifts there was music and dancing. The guests, with their paper caps, had a festive appearance, and when the evening wound up with a Virginia reel every one said that it had been an uncommonly pleasant affair.

"It always gives me a feeling of real satisfaction to see a man lose his head," said the woman, "and I saw it at one time when there was a fire a short distance from me and where I had a full view of it from my windows. No, it was not in New York, but in a smaller place, where I could see some one besides my next-door neighbor. The fire was in a store with apartments above it, and every effort was made to get the furniture out of these rooms. To do this some men got sheets and held them under a window, to catch anything that was thrown out, and you would never imagine what was one of the first things that came—an iron cook stove, that the men in the rooms above dropped out with great deliberation. But that is not as bad as the man at the great Chicago fire, of which a man I know tells. He was there at the time and became interested in this man, who was making a strenuous effort to get a barrel of beans out of his shop, but when he found it was too heavy for him to move he emptied the beans and threw out the empty barrel."

An interesting undertaking begun by two young women recently is the opening of an art students' exchange. They are art students themselves and they know something of the difficulty there is in getting work before the public. Their idea is to become the medium between influential people and business men and the students. They began with a sale in a studio in New York and have had one since in Brooklyn. A large quantity of work, including sketches in pen and ink, water colors, iron and leather work, and anything new in the way of decorative art is exhibited. Needlework and china painting they exclude. They have a committee pass upon the work, and it must come up to a certain high standard or it is not accepted. The aim is to get people to appreciate good work even when it has not a well-known name on it. The exchange is for the benefit of men as well as of women. The promoters say that the men students have a harder time even than the women in becoming recognized, as there are not so many openings for the disposal of their work. At the first sale there was work valued at $2,000 on exhibition; also a large attendance and many sales. The young women will endeavor to have the work sold at the lowest possible prices, at first at least. They make a commission to pay them for their efforts, and expect to make the arrangement profitable on all sides and a convenience to the people who become purchasers.

"Never," said the Barnard graduate, "have I seen so many men at any entertainment as there are at the undergraduate teas at the college. The college men come, the professors come, and it looks as though most of the men outside of the college in New York come as well. I don't know the feeling men usually have for co-education, but from the appearance of these teas it looks as if they had firm faith in some kind of a 'co' in a college."

During the last two or three weeks they have been having missions in the Roman Catholic churches in Brooklyn, and while the women's missions were in progress one woman who visited one of the churches regularly attracted some little attention. She was a sweet-faced old woman, but the people who saw her at church came to the conclusion that beneath her amiable exterior there was hidden some shrewdness, if there is no stronger word to apply. The church was a large one, but for these services it was packed, and only those who came in good season were able to obtain seats. The amiable-looking elderly woman, who is a well-to-do woman with a grown family and a good property in real estate, always came late, but she always had a seat, and wherever she chose to take it. Her method was this: She would select a pew, go to it, and ask the occupants to make room for her. This they always refused, for the pew was filled, and the late-comer was stout and matronly. The refusal did not trouble her, and she would then amiably kneel for her devotions at the end of the pew. She would remain there quietly until the others at some special part of the service also knelt, when she took the coveted seat and kept it. On three successive nights she was seen to do this, the third night taking one of the seats inside the altar rail for the occasion, and, as there was not possibly room for another to squeeze in under any circumstances, the woman she displaced had to stand, or look for a seat elsewhere while the sweet-faced elderly person, to judge from her expression, pursued her devotions with holy calm.

"With tears in my eyes I have read many beauty receipts saying that no woman who is clean need have those unsightly blackheads in her skin," says a woman who is the personification of daintiness. "At one time I was troubled with them and I scrubbed and scrubbed to get rid of them, but without effect. Those face brushes they recommend for the purpose are good for scrubbing floors, but for the face they are ruinous. They roughen the skin and cause eruptions that are worse than the evil they pretend to cure. A physician, a celebrated physician, too, finally gave me some advice.

"You have ruined your complexion with too much bathing," he said. "Water is a good thing, but we do not want too much of it. It is massage and a healthy stomach that you need. The fats and the milk that you take into your system are not digested, and your circulation is poor. Eat plainly and regularly for a time, use a good deal of massage, and you will find that your complexion with ordinary care will look out for itself."

FEMININE FRILLS.

It is all very well to have one of those little thumb purses that every one is carrying, and they certainly are most convenient, but it makes all the difference in the world as to where they come from. To be really swell they must come from some swell place where saddles and other horsy things are made. There they are made of the same pigskin from which the saddles are cut, and with the big two-inch interwoven initials of brass—silver is not in it this time with the baser metal—they are just the thing. At one of these places last year on the night before Christmas they sent out between six and seven hundred of the little purses, and this year there have been more of them, and all the orders could not be filled for Christmas.

The pigskin watch chains—what is a watch chain called when it is not a chain?—made of straps of the pigskin with a snaffle bit of silver in the centre, an exact copy of a real bit, is another thing that has made a number of men happy this year. Scarf pins were exact reproductions of different varieties of bits and horseshoes, and an attractive one was a stirrup with a strap.

One jeweler's edition of a "horsy" ornament was a fob made of a strap of light leather, the width of the ordinary fob ribbon, and with a good-sized stirrup of gold hanging at the end, the bottom of the stirrup being finished, seal fashion, with a bloodstone. These are a few of the things that some men really appreciate as gifts.

Many of the handsomest umbrellas have long mother-of-pearl handles with gold or silver trimmings. There is a broad tip at the top of the handle, a band around the centre frequently, and more of it at the lower part where it joins the umbrella. Sometimes the metal work is in fine tracery. Many parasols which are shown now have the tones of the color of the cover, yellow, pink, or violet, in the handle.

Many pretty little velvet jackets are seen with cloth gowns. One pretty girl has one in red to match her cloth skirt. This skirt is one of the new ones, with clusters of narrow kilt plaits the space of a narrow gore apart. From the waist down to the knees these plaits are stitched on both edges, giving them the appearance of horizontal bands of cloth, but below that they are free and give the flare to the skirt. The velvet jacket has a collar and broad lapels of chinchilla extending to the waist, and the weather has not yet been cool enough for the girl to find it necessary to close the front of the coat and to hide the pretty fluffy white front of the bodice she wears beneath it.

A heliotrope gown with a plain cloth skirt has a double-breasted jacket of velvet to match. There is a collar and lapels of chinchilla to this coat also. The lapels, however, only reach to the bust line, leaving a pointed vest and straight choker inside. This is made very attractive with steel embroidery which matches the double row of steel buttons. The wearer of this gown is an older woman.

There is really a little more finished look to a short jacket which basques a little below the waist than to an Eton jacket. One very pretty girl, a fresh young brunette with a bright color, was on one of the shopping streets last week, and with her suit case was evidently about to start off for an over-the-holiday trip. Her coat was of sealskin with a broad collar of most beautiful chinchilla, the lapels extending to the lower edge of the coat. There was a touch of the chinchilla at either side on the pockets, and this girl, too, was warm blooded enough to leave her jacket open, notwithstanding the cool air, and the effect of the broad revers of chinchilla over the black velvet bodice that she wore was charming.

It was another older woman who wore a cloth suit of a rather delicate shade of heliotrope trimmed with bands of silk and with a new skirt. This was a genu

To-morrow will bring again the Happy Morn. Christmas bells are ringing, and even the busy world of trade has stopped its wheels, and the world of society has turned its attention for the nonce to the enjoyments of the home, and to the keeping of the festival. On this Christmas eve, the last but one of the present century, it is interesting to glance at the retrospect, and to compare the atmosphere and the conditions of this year's Christmas with those of the past two Christmastides, so that with the spirit of Christmas present one may bravely summon up the ghosts of Christmases past.

The Christmas of 1897 was a bright and clear and very cold day. There was no snow on the ground, and this made the country parties miss the sleighing that had been anticipated. Ex-Secretary Whitney and Mrs. Whitney—who died only last June—had departed for Aiken a few days previous, where they gave on Christmas eve a large dinner, and Dr. Seward Webb and Mrs. Webb entertained a large party of the Webbs and Vanderbilts at Shelburne Farms, Vt. The largest entertainment of the Christmastide in town was the dance given at Delmonico's by Mr. and Mrs. Lanfear Norrie for Miss Barbey, where Mr. Worthington Whitehouse led the cotillion with Miss Barbey, and where Miss "Fifi" Potter was the belle of the evening.

Christmas last year fell on Sunday, and as the religious significance of the festival obtained therefore the greater hold on every one, the result was a very dull day, even for a Sunday, in the height of the season. Many of the Christmas festivities were held on Saturday evening, and among these were Mrs. Astor's annual family dinner and the children's Christmas tree given by Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs, which this year will be given to-morrow afternoon. There was a Christmas tree at Mrs Charles Oelrichs's on Christmas afternoon. The weather was cold and gloomy and there was skating at Tuxedo, but there was no snow. The grip, which fortunately has delayed its coming this year, was very prevalent last Christmas, and there was much sickness in consequence. Wall Street was enjoying a "bull" market and there was more prosperity than for many years past—a great contrast to this Christmas. The Spanish-American war was well in the past, the treaty of peace with Spain had been signed, and there was little thought that the Christmas of 1899 would come with a war in South Africa and the military prestige of Great Britain dimmed.

The week which opens to-day will be very largely devoted to family reunions of all sorts, and particularly to family dinners. The children and young people will really make the gayety of the week, and in fact the entire Christmas holidays, which, as the majority of the country schools and colleges do not reopen until nearly the middle of January, extend much longer than was their wont in old times. There are few households where there are little children in which Christmas trees will not be set up and the usual Christmas tree party given. It may perhaps be unkind to strike a jarring note in this advance glance at Christmas week by any extended reference this morning to the day after Christmas, the family doctor, &c., and so may the festival be to all a merry day, and may it be followed by the happiest of New Years.

It is a little too early as yet to cast the horoscope for the nine and one-half weeks of the season which will follow Christmas Day. There will undoubtedly be a flight of prominent people, among whom will be Col. John Jacob Astor and Mrs. Astor, to Egypt, the Riviera, and the southern coast resorts after the new year, but the season promises to be gay, with its unusual number of débutantes, for whom numerous entertainments will be given. It is reported that Mrs. Astor, Sr., will give her annual large ball on Jan. 29, and it is safe to say that there will be dinner dances at several of the new and beautiful palaces in New York's court end.

The past week, although less lively than its immediate predecessors, still had an unusual number of events for the generally socially dull week before Christmas. The first night of opera—on Monday, which, owing to the panic that day in Wall Street, was not as socially joyous as customary, the remarkable entertainment given at Lakewood by Mr. and Mrs. George Gould, and which signalized the adoption by the leading fashionable set of Mr. and Mrs. Gould; the first Cinderella cotillion, and Mrs. Crocker's musicale, which opened another new and beautiful palace in New York society, and Mrs. Astor's first dinner, were all events of more than ordinary interest.

The opera on Wednesday and Friday evenings, and again at yesterday's matinée, had a full representation of society. Society has become so extensive in New York that on each night of the opera last week there were, with a few exceptions, almost an entirely different set of people in the parterre and grand tier boxes. Perhaps Monday was the most brilliant of the three evenings, as the opening night would naturally be. Although it was feared that, owing to the number of well-known people in mourning, the first night of the opera would fall off somewhat in fashionable interest, there were a sufficient number of new people to take the place of those absent, and there was not a vacant box in either parterre or grand tier. On Wednesday at the re-entre of Calvé the house was scarcely less brilliant in appearance, but one of the boxes in the parterre, No. 13, was vacant. This was the one which Mr. Henry A. C. Taylor had taken for the season for Wednesday evenings, but, owing to the recent death of Mrs. Taylor, he and his family are unable to occupy it. On Friday night the house was far less crowded, owing to the change of bill and the substitution of singers.

The color notes of the costumes worn by the women of fashion at the opera thus far are drab and gray. Very few brilliant colors are used, and the prevailing taste seems to tend toward gowns of gray and black, elaborately embroidered in jewels or covered with silver paillettes. In several cases where definite colors were worn the gowns were at once thrown out by the background of more sombre toilets. Mrs. Edmund L. Baylies on the first evening wore a peculiar shade of blue, which seemed under the brilliant electric light to change into green. Miss Clews and Miss Bartlett on different evenings wore vivid pinks, which were almost shaded into salmon or orange. Mrs. Frederic Benedict, Miss Coudert, and Mrs. Whitelaw Reid also wore gowns of shades more or less pronounced in contrast to the general neutral tints.

On Friday evening Mrs. John R. Drexel, Mrs. Jules Reynal, and Mrs. Egerton Winthrop, Jr., were among the matrons who were the most noticeable. Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs chaperoned Miss Eleanor Thomas on Monday evening, and on Wednesday was the guest of Mrs. Joseph Stickney. She left early in the evening, overcome, it is said, by a slight indisposition. Mme. Calvé, who made quite a sensation on Monday night in the Grau box with her extraordinary gown of black covered with large gold medallions, wore in the last act of "Carmen" this same costume op Wednesday. Her appearance in this gown was greeted with such applause as to show that a greater part, at least, appreciated the modiste's art as well as that of the singer herself.

The Saturday matinées this Winter are frequented by quite a number of boxholders whose term of mourning for deceased relatives does not allow them to be present at the evening performances. It has been decided, passively, that the matinée is one of the social diversions permitted even in times of deep grief. It has also been noticed this Winter that New York society has adopted the rules of the English in relation to mourning and half-mourning, and that a year is considered a sufficiently long period in which to wear crêpe and sombre garments for even the nearest and dearest, while shorter terms are permissible for collateral relatives.

It is at Christmas time that the elders stand aside and give the younger generation their inning. Beginning on Thursday, when a special carload of St. Paul's boys came cheering into the Grand Central Station, who were followed the next day by the Croton boys, and later by those more sedate from Harvard and Yale, the "young person" has been the subject of general attention. On Thursday the Grand Central Station was a seething mass of parents, and the scene reminded the spectator more of a large reception at Delmonico's, Sherry's, or the Waldorf than the home-coming of the youngsters. Mention has been already made of the many entertainments to be given during the holidays for the college boys and débutantes of next Winter and the Winter after next, the juveniles of a younger set and the small children. Through a typographical error, the Christmas tree to be given this year at Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs's, at which her son, Master Oelrichs, will preside, was called an entertainment for "the children of poor parents." Mrs. Oelrichs, of course, has her many charities, but this affair is one of a purely social nature, and in view of the recent disasters on Wall Street not a few were amused at the mistake, which seemed just now to be rather apropos.

The Gould house party, which lasts until Tuesday, is still the topic of the day, and the brilliant social affair of Thursday evening will pass into history as one the most notable of past events in New York society. It defined absolutely, with Mrs. Astor's dinner in town on Thursday night, the status of the different sets in New York society. The Bradley Martin and Vanderbilt masquerades, the Waterbury circus, and a few other occurrences of this nature are milestones, and fashionable people are as wont to date happenings from these social dissensions of the past as others are accustomed to refer to the year of the blizzard and other events. The Gould house party and the Lakewood people enjoyed a second performance of the pretty little plays on Friday afternoon, and golfing and a cross-country run, and, besides, last evening an informal dance.

At this writing there has been no sign of snow even in the Far North, and the New England States, and a green Christmas has interfered very much with the plans of some hostesses for their country house parties. There seems no prospect of sleighing or skating. Dr. Seward Webb and Mrs. Webb have a family party at Shelburn Farms over the holidays, and yesterday Mr. and Mrs. Francis H. Leggett took up some thirty guests to enjoy the Christmas week at Ridgeley Manor, near Kingston. It was hoped that M. and Mme. Saleza would be of this party, which includes, among other guests, Col. Schuyler Church and Mrs. Church, Miss Angelica Schuyler Church, Miss Harriette Wright, Count Mercati, Miss Walker, Miss Bliss, and Miss Whiting.

The Vanderbilt family party at Biltmore this year will be an unusually large one. Great preparations are being made to entertain the tenants and their children on Christmas Day. Mr. William K. Vanderbilt, Mr. and Mrs. H. McK. Twombly, and the Misses Twombly are among the guests. There will be some special music, but on account of family mourning there will be no dancing or entertaining of any elaborate character.

Christmas night is always a curious one at the opera, but as the festival is less observed in New York than formerly and as that day now seems to be given over almost entirely to the children, there is no appreciable difference in the audience. The parterre and grand tier boxes will be as well filled as usual, and the same familiar faces will be in their accustomed places. As the opera is a short one there is hope of longer entr'actes. On Monday evening these were woefully short, and the hurrying through with the performance divested the occasion of some of its social character. On Friday there was some improvement in this respect and there was sufficient time for the men to pay at least more than one short visit between the acts.

The most notable event on the calendar of the week is the bal poudre to be given by Mrs. Anson Phelps Stokes on Tuesday evening at her Madison Avenue residence. This will be a young people's dance and the débutantes will be out in force. The bal poudre is always picturesque, and powdered heads and patches are most becoming. There will be a cotillion with handsome Christmas favors.

Among the other events of this week will be the first of the five cotillions arranged by Mrs. Almon Goodwin, Mrs. Everett P. Wheeler, Mrs. Walter Cook, Mrs. Francke H. Bosworth, Mrs. Alfred Corning Clark, Mrs. William G. Choate, Mrs. Charles Price Britton, Mrs. Schuyler Quackenbush, Mrs. Charles Havens Royce, and Mrs. Charles Finney Cox. This class numbers about fifty young women and seventy-five young men, among whom are Miss Wheeler, Miss Goodwin, Miss Cox, Miss Cook, Miss Quackenbush, Miss Marguerite Quackenbush, Miss Thornell, Miss Herrick, Miss Hoyt, and the Misses Helen Lincoln, Ruth Emmons, Ethel Cornell, Isabelle Fowler, Edna Gregory, Ruth Guernsey, Katherine Cook, Cornelia Helen Merrill, Mary Wagstaff, and the Messrs. Clarence Smith, E. Holland Brown, Howard Baylies, Benjamin Sheffield, Henry B. Britton, Walter S. Edwards, Adelbert D. Low, Allan Wardman, Charles B. Gunn, Oswald G. Villard, Henry M. Brookfield, William D. Thompson, Herbert J. Sterling St. John, and Stephens Tilton.

Among the dinners of the week will be one to be given by Mrs. Chester Griswold of 23 West Forty-eighth Street for her sons, Messrs. Chester, Jr., and Le Grand C. Griswold, on Dec. 30, and on the same evening another dinner will be given by Mrs. H. De Berkeley Parsons at 294 Madison Avenue. On Friday evening there will be a second meeting of Mrs. Church's dancing class at Sherry's, and on Tuesday the De Covereley class will also have a meeting at Sherry's. The Knickerbocker Whist Club will hold its first meeting on Jan. 1 at the residence of Mrs. George Schieffelin, 8 East Forty-fifth Street. The next meeting of this whist club will be at the residence of Mrs. Edward Lyman Short, 20 West Thirty-seventh Street. On Wednesday, the 27th, Mrs. Artemas H. Holmes, 453 Madison Avenue, will have a cotillion for juniors. The Cinderella cotillions on Thursday evening, Dec. 29, will hold their first dance of their fourth season at Dodworth's. Among the patronesses are Mrs. Horace Ely, Mrs. George Pryor Johnson, Mrs. David O. Haynes, Mrs. Ebenezer S. Mason, Mrs. William A. Parke, Mrs. Arthur L. Root, Mrs. James K. O. Sherwood, Mrs. James Baird, Mrs. S. Charles Welsh, Mrs. Charles H. Van Brunt, and Mrs. Thomas Dimond.

A very pretty wedding of the week, which did not receive much notice owing to its being quietly celebrated, was that of Miss Gertrude Treadwell Townsend, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. William Effingham Townsend, and F. Leopold Schmidt, Jr. The ceremony took place at East Williston, L. I., the country residence of the parents of the bride, on Wednesday noon, and quite a number of prominent people went down as guests. The day was a beautiful one, and it was difficult for the guests to realize that it was the week before Christmas, so mild and balmy was the air and so bright the sunlight.

The other events of the week will resolve themselves into the meetings of the various dancing classes, a cotillion to be given on Wednesday evening at Sherry's by Mrs. Bayard Dominick for her two daughters and a dance on Thursday night at the same place, by Mrs. Frederick Edward Ballard for Miss Grace Ballard. There are some vague rumors that many fashionable people will attend in costume the Hungarian Peasants' ball on Saturday evening, but so far no confirmation of these can be obtained, and it is more than doubtful.

With the first of January will begin the annual flitting and already the greater part of New York society is restless and longing for new scenes. The season at the various resorts abroad lags. The English have boycotted the French Riviera, and it looks as if Cannes would be rather dull this Winter. The prospects are not much better for Nice, and owing to its proximity to Bordighera, San Remo has suddenly become popular. Although a pretty place, it is not cheerful, as many invalids make it their home during the Winter months. Great things were promised for Cairo and the Lower Nile, but the recent English disasters seem to have demoralized society and to have upset many plans. The English and Americans are the chief patrons of the Continental and Eastern Winter cities, and the latter are content only in the places where their Anglo-Saxon cousins, especially those who are in Burke and Debrett, congregate.

Early in January will depart Col. and Mrs. John Jacob Astor, Mrs. Adolph Ladenburg, Mrs. Fred Neilson, Mr. and Mrs. Clement Moore, Mr. and Mrs. Frederic Bronson and Miss Bronson, Mrs. William F. Burden, and Mr. and Mrs. Frank Lawrence, as well as many others who have planned Winter cruises and expeditions in the Orient. The Valiant will be placed at the disposal of Mr. and Mrs. William K. Vanderbilt, Jr., and Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs, who sails at the latter end of the month, will be one of the party. According to present plans, Mr. William K. Vanderbilt will not go abroad just yet.

The social week abroad has been the reverse of brilliant. It has been gloomy, dull, and depressing to a degree. Those on this side who had wished for a Christmas with the sports of Winter are reading enviously of the severe cold prevailing in England and on the Continent. Here the Meadow Brook hunt has been enabled to have its two runs a week even to Christmas, with a chance of the continuance of the sport over the New Year. This keeps the hunting contingent on Long Island, and the Foxhall Keenes, Mr. Van Alen, and others who hurried to England for the meets over there have found that for the present hunting has had to be abandoned. Of course, Americans are in great demand just at present, and, with the dearth of men, every new male importation from this country meets with much attention and favor.

The reported visit to Newport during the early part of the week of Mr. and Mrs. George Vanderbilt, which was not a fact, as they have been and are at Biltmore, revives the report that they intended taking a large cottage there next Summer, and of hereafter passing the seasons at Newport. Mr. and Mrs. Robert Sedgwick of New York, who have been passing the past three seasons at Newport, have rented the Lyman cottage for a term of years, and during the week went there for the purpose of arranging for extensive improvements to the cottage. Mr. and Mrs. William E. Carter of Philadelphia, who occupied the Fay cottage on Narragansett Avenue, Newport, last season, will probably lease the Tiffany cottage for the coming season, and the Wideners of the Quaker City, it is said, will also rent a Newport cottage for the coming season. It was currently reported at Newport during the week that an attempt had been made in New York to form a company to rebuild the Ocean House.

Shadow Brook, at Lenox, will be open for Christmas, and members of the Stokes family will be there for the festival. Mr. and Mrs. John Sloane will open Wyndhurst for Christmas and will entertain a party of friends. They will keep their place open for about a week. Mr. and Mrs. Giraud Foster will be in Lenox for the holidays. Mr. and Mrs. William D. Sloane are having an addition about forty feet square placed on Elm Court, at Lenox. It will contain a dining room on the first floor, with additional sleeping rooms over it. The old dining room will be added to the drawing rooms, thus furnishing a large space for entertaining. Mr. and Mrs. William H. Bradford are at the country house of Mr. Bradford's mother, on the Pittsfield Road. Mr. and Mrs. Lindsay Fairfax will spend part of the Winter at Lenox. Mr. and Mrs. Cortlandt Bishop are still at Interlaken. Mr. David W. Bishop, Jr., has been with them for a few days. Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Tower are at the Robeson place, Lenox, where they will remain for some time yet.

Mr. and Mrs. Henry A. Barclay and family arrived at Bonnie Brae, Lenox, this week, and will spend the Winter there. Mr. and Mrs. John E. Alexandre have taken the Frelinghuysen place at Lenox for next season, and will spend part of the Winter there. Capt. John S. Barnes and family went to New York from Lenox this week. Their place will be kept open, and they will be there part of the time during the holidays. Dr. Richard C. Greenleaf will keep his Lenox place open during the Winter, and some members of his family will spend most of the time there. Mr. Richard Goodman and family are still in Lenox, and will remain there until the middle of January, when they will go to New York, and thence to Florida.

The second Bachelors' Cotillion in Baltimore, which took place last Monday evening, was by no means as brilliant an affair as the first, yet was in reality much pleasanter, for, being less crowded, dancing was possible. There were two or three dinners before the german and a supper afterward. The supper was given by the Heyward Draytons, who have recently made Baltimore their home. They are Philadelphians, but business interests have brought Mr. Drayton here. The supper was a small but pretty one, the guests being Mrs. John M. Robinson, Miss Lota Robinson, Mr. and Mrs. James McShane, Miss Ella Reeves, Miss Poe, Miss Minne Huysen, Miss Latrobe, Mr. Conrad, Mr. Poulaine, Mr. Jenkins, Mr. Riggs, and a few others. The Draytons entertain delightfully, and are already prominent in all the smartest events. They are relatives of the Reeveses, and a number of dinners and teas have been given them by Mr. and Mrs. Reeves and Miss Ella Reeves.

Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert Fraser are giving a number of functions this season in Baltimore. On Thursday evening they had a bal poudre for their débutante daughter, Miss Hellen Fraser. The girls were there in full force in their grandmothers' gowns, looking very pretty and old-fashioned. Miss Munnikhuysen, who is probably one of the best looking débutantes this season, was unusually handsome that evening. There will be two interesting marriages in Baltimore just before Lent. One will be that of Miss Elizabeth T. King and Mr. William M. Ellicott. Miss King is the President of the Arundell Club. The other wedding will be that of Miss Harlet Wade and Mr. William Wallace Spence, Jr. Mrs. Daniel C. French of New York, who has been visiting Mrs. Alexander Harvey, has gone home for Christmas. Mrs. Alexander Brown gave a dinner on Friday evening in Baltimore in honor of her young daughters, neither of whom is grown. Miss Harriett Brown, the eldest, now about sixteen, resembles her mother. A noticeable change in Baltimore entertaining this Winter is the number of evening affairs, and the teas and card parties of former years, which took place in the afternoon, and excluded men, have now merged into evening functions, and are much liked. There are always a number of dinners every year, but they are necessarily confined to a few guests, and at the dinners one invariably meets the same people over and over again, for only a certain number give them. Among the women who are noted for their dinners in Baltimore are Mrs. J. Swan Frick, Mrs. Wilson Patterson, Mrs. David Stewart, Mrs. Jesse Tyson, Mrs. Alexander Brown, Mrs. Clapham Pennington, Mrs. Hollins McKim, Mrs. Ross Winans, Mrs. Lyman Josephs, Mrs. John M. Robison, Miss Mary Winter Davis, Mrs. W. S. G. Williams, Mrs. Robert Garrett, Mrs. Walter Brookes, Mrs. Thomas Buckler, Mrs. Daniel C. Gilman, Mrs. James M. Thompson, Mrs. John Gill, the Misses Boone, and Mrs. Charles J. Bonaparte. The men who might be called the popular diners out are Messrs. Walter de C. Poultney, de Courcey Thom, Thomas Shearer, Noel H. Wyatt, John McKim, Frank Harvey, Noel Poullaine, William Moale, Lycurgus Winchester, Robert Garrett, W. F. Lucas, Lawrason Riggs, Hugh Jenkins, Charles H. Carter, Redmond Stewart, Robin Brent, Gerard Hopkins, Glenn Pitts, and Carroll Poultney.

Dr. Benjamin M. Cromwell of Frostburg, Md., has sent out invitations to the marriage of his daughter, Miss Laura Lee Cromwell, and Mr. Samuel Johnston Poe. The marriage will take place on Tuesday evening, Jan. 2, at St. John's Church, at Frostburg. Mr. Poe, better known to his friends as "Jack," is one of the Princeton men, and, like his numerous brothers, a great football player. He is also a well-known and successful lawyer here. Miss Mary Bowie Johnson of Baltimore, who has recently returned from abroad, has been visiting her cousin, Mrs. Richard Irvin, in New York. Mrs. Grinnell is visiting her aunt, Miss Emma Meredith, in Baltimore. Mrs. William Osler is spending Christmas in Toronto, Canada, with her sister. The various Maryland hunt clubs still keep up their meets. Indeed, each year the hunting season grows longer. The Christmas hunt on Monday promises to be a large one if the weather is good. Among those who are faithful to the hounds are Mr. and Mrs. E. A. Jackson, Dr. and Mrs. Walter P. Smith, Mr. and Mrs. W. S. G. Williams, Miss Fannie Lurman, Miss Katherine Lurman, Mr. and Mrs. Ross Whistler, Mr. Harrison Birckhead, Mr. Samuel E. George, Dr. and Mrs. Clapham Pennington, Mr. William Manly, Miss Louise Carroll, Miss Mollie George, Mr. Carroll Brown, Mr. and Mrs. E. Gittings Merryman, Mr. Redmond Stewart, the Misses Stewart, and Mr. Gerard Hopkins.

Mr. and Mrs. George Weld of Baltimore have joined the dinner givers this season, and propose to have a dinner every week or so this Winter. The guests at a recent dinner were Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Brown, Mr. and Mrs. W. S. G. Williams, Mr. and Mrs. Columbus O'D. Lee, Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Tyson, Dr. and Mrs. Clapham Pennington, Dr. and Mrs. Thomas Buckler, and Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Garneau of Chicago. Mr. and Mrs. Ross Winans will give a large dinner and theatre party next week. The old family place, Bolton, belonging to the Spences, has been sold to The Fifth Regiment for an armory. Mr. Spence, Sr., will go abroad later in the Winter, and Mr. Spence, Jr., will marry and will join his father in the South of France.

It seems as if the old song which is made to illustrate a children's game in France is to have a nineteenth century setting. No one who has seen French children at their play can forget the favorite diversion, "Marlboro va' ten guerre," which is a Gallic adaptation of "London Bridge." The old song goes on to tell how his faithful wife watched for his return from her tower at (possibly) Blenheim, as the incident is supposed to have taken place after the Duke was rewarded by his sovereign and his country. It now looks as if Marlborough really will go to the war, not perhaps to the tune of "We Won't Go Home Until Morning," which is the one used to accompany this old-time doggerel, and his fair Duchess will in the meantime wait his return and get up benefits for hospital ships and relief funds just as the modern Duchesses and noble ladies are doing while their liege lords and kindred are fighting the Boers in South Africa. The Duchess of Marlborough has shown considerable histrionic ability, and she is said to recite beautifully. Lady Essex, who was Miss Grant, has suddenly come out as a follower of Miss Cissie Loftus, and her imitations of Yvette Guilbert are said to be as clever as those of the music hall singer. Both of these ladies will appear at the Paget entertainment, and later at another one given for the relief of Mrs. "Tommy Atkins" and the little Atkinses. This war has certainly developed strange friendships, and New Yorkers cannot help being surprised when they read that Mrs. Langtry de Bathe has been the guest of Lily, Duchess of Marlborough, at Deepdene for the week end after the departure of de Bathe for South Africa.

The splendor of the Bradley Martin's Christmas party is perhaps one of the few cheerful incidents of the week in Great Britain. The Bradley Martins always do things in a princely style, and at Balmacaan House in Invernessshire they have been entertaining some thirty guests for a stay of nearly three weeks. One of the diversions has been the roe deer shooting, and there have been also some trials at the pheasant and wild fowl. Informal dances have been given and a grand celebration for the tenantry will take place on Christmas Day and evening. All the old customs of Glen Urquhart will be revived, and the guests in kilt tartan, as well as the dependents, will reel and fling to the voice of the bagpipes.

The chatter in London has just now a strong American flavor. The indefatigable "Belle" says that the American element musters strongly everywhere. The American nurses are the present lions, (sic,) and every one has been anxious to see them. The chief nurse, Miss Hibbard, looked very well the other night at the entertainment given in their honor by the matrons and nurses of the London hospitals. She was dressed in her uniform of white cloth, with a great deal of gold braid, and the ordinary nurses wear dresses of blue duck, trimmed with white. They are all well trained and are extremely good nurses, and look like business. Lady Randolph Churchill is Lady Superintendent, but the English medical officer is what you call "boss." And this latter expression shows that Americanism has surely taken firm root in British soil. And again: "There has been great excitement over Lady Sarah Wilson's fate, and no one thinks there is any chance of exchanging her for the Dutch 'vrouw' that Krüger wants liberated. But her maid is with her, which is a great comfort even in the hard and trying time they must have been having at the 'veldt, or some other out-of-the-way place." Lady Tatton Sykes arrived at the Cape in great spirits. Mrs. Maguire and some other well-known women have been living in one of the mines at Kimberley for safety, and have been afraid to come up to earth. "Belle" expresses this by stating that "they are having a lively time." The Queen was so charming to the American nurses that she quite won their hearts. After this, "they were enchanted with their drive and tea at Cumberland Lodge."

Lord Ava, the elder brother of Sir Terence Blackwood, who married Miss Flora Davis of this city, and also well known here, has been doing much good work in South Africa. He is with Cecil Rhodes at the present time.

It has not been very gay in Paris. The death of the venerable Mrs. Walden Pell has cast a gloom over all the different little sets of Americans who make the gay capital their home. The cold has been excessive and one of the principal diversions has been the skating at the Palais de Glace. The fearful ordeal of the Jour de l'An approaches, a veritable dies irae for the Paris householder. The amusements have been restricted to a few dinners and musicales. Mrs. Ogden Goelet has been at the Ritz, and Mrs. "Plus" Moore has returned from her visit to America. There are many plans being arranged for the Winter resorts, and with Americans as with the English, the Italian Riviera will be the favorite, although there has been much complaint about the ordeal of the Custom House and the uncivil treatment of Americans and English by the officials on the frontier. There is the usual routine life at Pau. There is fox hunting followed by small dances at the Country Club, and occasional golf. Cannes is getting ready for a good season, and the carnival programmes have been arranged. Biarritz is also looking up, and there have been a number of arrivals at Mentone and Monte Carlo. The Engadine looks for a brilliant season in January.

The announcement of Lady Paunecfote that she will have as guests during February for her daughter's wedding the Duchess of Abercorn, the Marchioness of Londonderry, Lady Aberdeen, Lady Aubrey Buller, and the Countess Cadogan is somewhat surprising. Even if such an array of the peerage would come over to this country in a body—the list numbers many more—all could not be the guests of one person. The Cadogans have announced their Winter programme, and they return to Dublin in January to hold court there, so there is little chance for Lady Cadogan paying America a visit. It will be remembered that often the invitation list is given, and that does not imply for an instant that all who are asked will be present. At the Craven wedding here nearly the entire peerage was invited, as it was also at the Marlborough-Vanderbilt nuptials.

Christmas week at Tuxedo will be enjoyed by every one. The fine weather of the past week brought out a good crowd of New Yorkers, and many have opened their cottages for the holidays and the New Year's ball. All the rooms at the club have been engaged over New Year's. Many Christmas dinners will be served at the cottages and the clubhouse. Mr. and Mrs. J. Frederic Tams, Mr. and Mrs. Frederick A. Snow, and Mr. and Mrs. R. Fulton Cutting opened their houses this week for the holidays. Mr. and Mrs. C. Post Mitchell entertained at dinner a number of guests at their cottage on Wednesday, to meet Mr. and Mrs. Bartlett. Mrs. Robert Goelet spent Saturday and Sunday with the Rev. and Mrs. George Grenville Merrill at the rectory. Mr. and Mrs. P. Lorillard, Jr., entertained as usual a number of guests on Sunday night at their cottage. Mr. and Mrs. Winthrop McKim have taken Mrs. Charles Coudert's cottage, recently vacated by Mrs. Coudert.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Emmet have closed their cottage at Tuxedo and returned to their city residence, 54 West Fifty-third Street. Mr. and Mrs. Frederic Foster have also closed their Tuxedo cottage and returned to the city. Miss E. C. Whitney has rented for the Winter the James Brown Lord cottage, recently vacated by Mr. and Mrs. Lord. Mr. Richard Mortimer will open his new cottage in the Spring. The pigeon grounds have been put in order and pigeon shooting is again indulged in by many who fancy the sport. Matches will be shot on Saturdays during Winter. Mr. Westmoreland Davis broke his ankle last week. He was taken to New York.

Although the season in Philadelphia was begun so early, there has been no let-up in the gayeties so far. Last week was a gay one, and there is more to come. The week was ushered in by a large dinner given by Mr. and Mrs. Charles Whelen at their residence in Walnut Street. The table was profusely decorated with white roses and ferns, and among the guests were Mr. and Mrs. Thomas McKean, Jr., Baron Alliotti of the Italian Embassy at St. Petersburg, Mrs. Spencer Erwin, Miss Coles, Miss Snyder, Miss Cassatt, Mr. Spencer Cosby, Mr. Haglehurst, and Mr. Pinckney Norris. On the same day Miss Sophia Irwin gave a ladies' luncheon in honor of Mrs. Grover Cleveland, and Captain and Mrs. Sands gave a tea at the Navae home in honor of their daughter, who is one of the season's débutantes. On Monday evening the first of the Monday evening dancing classes took place under the management of Mrs. Frederic Thurston. It was a success, and nearly all of the season's débutantes were present.

A handsome dinner was given on Tuesday evening by Mrs. Clement Griscom at her residence. The guests, who were seated at three tables decorated with silver golf prizes and trophies won by Miss Frances Griscom, included Miss Edith Biddle, Miss Edith Meade, Miss Henrietta Large, Miss Ethel Harrison, Miss Hope Binney Tyler, Miss Virginia Campbell, Miss Florence Cramp, Miss Elizabeth Roberts, Miss Anna Lloyd, Miss Morris, Miss Dorothy Sims, Miss Sarah Gerhard, Miss A. P. Johnson, Miss Marion Pepper, Mr. J. Cadwalader, Jr., Mr. C. Hacker, Mr. Trenchard Newbold, Mr. W. Whelen, Mr. Brockie, Mr. Lardner Reakirt, Mr. W. Heyward Drayton, third, Mr. M. S. Easby, the Messrs. Singler, the Messrs. Lloyd, Mr. Spencer Cosby, Dr. J. Norman Henry, and Dr. Norman McLeod. Mrs. Jones Wister also gave a dinner on Tuesday. Lynnewood Hall, the country residence of Mr. P. A. B. Widener, at Elkins, was the scene on Tuesday evening of a house warming. Mr. and Mrs. George D. Widener aided Mr. Widener in receiving the guests in the main hall, which was a bower of exquisite roses. In the gallery the New York Symphony Orchestra was stationed. Mme. Gadsky sang.

Mr. and Mrs. William Potter on Wednesday afternoon introduced their daughter, Miss Adeline Coleman Potter, in Philadelphia. The bouquets were placed on mantelpieces and tables and were of the most beautiful flowers, orchids and lilies being the most numerous. They amounted to between sixty and seventy. Mrs. and Miss Potter received in the front drawing room, and were assisted by Miss Anna Price Johnson, Miss Ethel Wister, Miss Alice Welsh, and Miss Morgan. Miss Adeline Potter, whose début was made on Thursday, is the daughter of Mr. William Potter, who was Minister to Italy under President Harrison's Administration. On her mother's side she is a descendant of a family who for more than a century have been conspicuous in the life of Philadelphia. Her mother was a daughter of the late Mr. Frederic W. Vanuxem, and a granddaughter of Mr. Louis C. Vanuxem, who served with distinction in the War of 1812, and was a member of the First City Troop. Her great-grandfather was Mr. James Vanuxem, one of the founders and President of the French Benevolent Society, and who was visited by Lafayette when he came to Philadelphia as the guest of the Nation. Mrs. Potter's great-great-grandfather was Lieut. Col. Elijah Clark, who served on the staff of Gen. Washington during the Revolutionary War.

Mr. James Paul, Jr., gave a handsome dinner at his residence, 3809 Locust Street, Philadelphia, in honor of Miss Harjes of Paris on Thursday evening. The table was artistically decorated with American Beauty roses, mingled with violets. Mr. Paul's guests included Miss Ethel Heberton, Miss Louisa Weightman, Miss Ethel Wister, Miss Edith Stotesbury, Miss Eleanor Lewis, Mr. and Mrs. A. J. Drexel Biddle, Miss Ellen Drexel Paul, Dr. and Mrs. Arthur Remington, Mr. Robert Hare Davis, Mr. Robert Montgomery, Mr. Harry B. Hodge, Mr. George Howell, Mr. William A. M. Fuller, and Dr. Frederick Fraley. On Friday evening Mr. and Mrs. George W. C. Drexel gave a dinner in honor of Miss Harjes.

Invitations have been sent out in Philadelphia by the Benedicks for their ball on Dec. 27. Mr. James Paul will give a ball on Dec. 29, Mr. and Mrs. Alexander Van Rensselaer one on Jan. 3, and Mr. and Mrs. Charles Curtis Harrison one on Jan. 19.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Alexander Reilly will give a supper at the Bellevue, in Philadelphia, after the opera on Thursday evening, Dec. 28, in honor of the Austrian Ambassador and the Baroness Hengelmüller. Miss Elise Willing Balch will give a luncheon at the Acorn Club, Philadelphia, on Jan. 5 for Miss Eleanor Lewis. Mrs. Alexander Brinton Coxe and Mrs. Charlton Farrell have sent out cards for a tea on Thursday, Jan. 11, in Philadelphia. The cards of Mrs. Daniel Coxe and Mrs. Richard Norris Williams are inclosed.

By the death of the Duke of Westminster, who was England's richest peer, Viscount Belgrave succeeds to the title. He is now in South Africa acting as an aide de camp to Sir Alfred Milner, and it is not likely that even the Duke's death will bring him home, as he does not expect to return until the war is ended. Viscount Belgrave, who, it is said, will inherit a fortune of $100,000,000, is engaged to be married to the beautiful Miss Deila Cornwallis West, second daughter of the still beautiful Mrs. Cornwallis West, and younger sister of Princess Henry of Pless, considered by many the most beautiful woman in the world. The fiancée of Viscount Belgrave, now twenty-six, is four years older than the Viscount, and the late Duke was opposed to the engagement in consequence of the disparity in the young people's ages. It will be remembered that young Cornwallis West, the brother of the future Duchess of Westminster, was engaged recently to Lady Randolph Churchill, and that his family, including his sisters, were so violently opposed to the match that it has been broken off.

The women of the Cornwallis West family have always been noted, not only for their beauty, but for their powers of fascination, which are rarely found together. Twenty years ago the Prince of Wales was fascinated by Mrs. Cornwallis West, who was made by his attentions one of the reigning beauties, and then the Duke of York became infatuated with Miss Daisy West, now the Princess of Pless, and paid her so much attention that he was ordered back to England from a trip on the cruiser Crescent, which he made in order to be near his inamorata.

SOCIETY NOTES.

Miss Fanny S. Adam of 13 East Fortieth Street will give two teas, Dec. 27 and Jan. 3, for many young people and débutantes.

Mr. Samuel I. Ferguson of 227 West One Hundred and Thirty-fourth Street has gone to Lakewood to spend the Christmas holidays.

At the Freundschaft Club last evening Mme. Marcella Sembrich appeared in Donizetti's opera, "Don Pasquale." Dancing followed.

"PEACE ON EARTH, GOOD WILL TOWARD MEN."

It seems almost a mockery to transcribe, on the eve of this Christmas, the words which ushered in the birth of CHRIST. The Nativity was hailed as the beginning of the fulfillment of the prophecy that the nations "should not learn war any more." As a matter of fact, so large a part of the population was never, in nominally Christian countries, actively engaged in "learning war" as is so engaged now. And the two nations which boast themselves to be the most advanced representatives of the new civilization which began with the birth of CHRIST, and from which the modern world dates its origin, are engaged in bloody and obstinate wars, wars as bloody and as obstinate as any the Roman Empire was waging with the barbarians when Christianity began to be. One of the wars is a small war, and the obstinacy of it may be ascribed to a too literal interpretation on the part of the United States in the past of the injunction to beat its spear into a pruning hook. But the other is a great war and taxes to the utmost the resources of the British Empire, if it does not overtax them. It does seem as if nineteen hundred years of Christian civilization had failed in achieving one of the primary purposes of Christianity.

This is a view that must be much commoner in England than it is here, for the reason that the British war in South Africa is so much bigger and costlier an affair than our little war in the Philippines. But not much reflection is needed to show that it is a very superficial view. Islam was propagated exclusively by the sword, and the propagation of Christianity has historically been by no means so peaceful as we are apt to imagine before we inquire. The modern commercial civilization which we enjoy is a direct sequel of Christianity, and the wars that are now going on in the world are wars to extend it. That is equally true of the war in which each of the English-speaking nations is engaged. If China will not come into the commercial brotherhood of nations there is no real dispute that she must be made to do so. And so of the backward Spanish possessions which Spain has been keeping behind even her own development. Already, within little more than a year, our efforts to impose our own type of civilization upon Puerto Rico have been crowned not only with the "consent" but with the enthusiastic good will of "the governed." And in Cuba all the signs are that the opposition comes entirely from the rival factions of Cuban politicians, who expect to get their livings out of the Government and not by their own exertions, and that the industrious population is as completely reconciled to American rule as is the like population in Puerto Rico. In Luzon the task has been harder, by reason of the greater backwardness of the natives, and the distrust of the intentions of all white men which they had imbibed from Spanish rule. But even there the signs multiply and thicken that the honest purposes of our commanders are making themselves understood, and that the Filipinos will also come willingly into the circle of modern civilization when it is borne in upon them what it means.

And what is true of the Spanish colonies which Spain has been administering in the spirit of the sixteenth century is as true of the shepherds of the Transvaal who have been administering their own affairs in the spirit of the seventeenth. They are as out of touch with the modern world, the world of progress and of change, as have been the Antilles and the Philippines, as is the immemorial Empire of China itself. Now, to all these waste and forgotten places the spirit of the age has caught up. The time has come when every one of them must come in and partake for itself and extend to others the latest results of Christian civilization. There may be a question whether the inevitable transformation might not, in the case of the Transvaal, have been more safely and wisely left to time, but the transformation is none the less inevitable. The great nations which are fighting the battles of the modern spirit, in the Antilles, the Philippines, or South Africa, much as they may lament the necessity of force, need not be ashamed or afraid to proclaim that they are missionaries of Christian civilization. The end of their labors will be a durable instead of a delusive peace. And, as the work comes to be better understood by those who have required this rough instruction, they themselves will recognize its beneficence. And so it will issue in a closer approach to a realization of the Christmas motto, "Peace on earth and good will toward men."

MR. MOODY THE EVANGELIST.

Probably there is no man now living in the United States, unless very eminent in public station, whose death would affect the minds and the hearts of so great a multitude on both sides of the ocean as have felt the death of Mr. MOODY.

This is due not only to the peculiar nature of the activities in which he spent his exceedingly busy and energetic life, but to the rare character and gifts of the man. Although his early attempts to address his companions in the Church were awkward and unsuccessful, he was unquestionably a public speaker of the sort that is born as well as made, and he passed his days in public speaking to audiences larger and more varied and more widespread over America and England than those that any other speaker has reached in this generation. The subject of his speaking was one that moves the emotions and stirs the will of men and women, when presented as he was able to present it, to a degree that makes the excitement of political agitation seem pale and ineffectual. It is moreover a subject as to which the contagion of feeling in great masses of human beings is especially intense, swift, and cumulative. For these reasons the effect of Mr. MOODY'S death is undoubtedly as widely felt as we have intimated.

Blended with the influence of Mr. MOODY'S special work as an evangelist and making it enduring was the influence of his remarkable personality. Wherever he went he inspired a sense of dominating sincerity and goodness which was strongly felt by many to whom his specific doctrine and his chief avowed aim did not appeal. He was trusted and beloved for qualities that he would certainly claim as due to his religion, but which have been the source of trust and love in myriads of hearts untouched by that religion. He was consistently, because naturally, unselfish. Possessed of powers and faculties of a kind and in a degree that would easily have won him fortune in business and success in public life, a singularly efficient leader of men, an organizer of very unusual fertility, ingenuity, skill, and tact, he deliberately chose to devote himself and all his talents and varied capacities to a work that brought great fame but no fortune, and the motive for which was in the highest sense benevolence. It is the testimony of those that knew him best in all the phases of that work and in his private life that no man in modern times has come nearer to the standard set by the Founder of His religion for the Apostles He sent forth to preach and to live His Gospel.

With what he himself regarded as his mission this is not the place to deal. The actual effect of a "revival" and its permanence for good are matters as to which those entitled to authority in religious affairs differ widely. There is much about them generally, and there was something about Mr. MOODY'S methods in them, that it is easy to criticise. To men who regard their own minds as trained and to whom action and belief are more or less the result of deliberate and intelligible judgment, the appeals that he made and the form in which he made them not seldom seemed to involve something not clearly distinguishable from superstition, and this impression was by no means confined to those who rejected the substance of the doctrines he held. But there was one portion of his work that no reasonable man, orthodox or heterodox, believer or agnostic, can fail to recognize as having great value and as being possible only to one animated by lofty purposes. This was the educational, and in this we include not only the work he did directly in the schools he founded but the constant and great aid he rendered in promoting the Young Men's Christian Associations throughout the country and like work in England and Scotland. The beneficence of these associations is by no means dependent on the religious impulse they seek to impart, though it would be both unfair and foolish to ignore the immense force of the religious motive in the workers in this field. But that motive inspires them to a kind of labor that is widely and lastingly beneficent in its effect on the whole community. It helps powerfully to form citizens healthy in body and in mind, with sound standards of conduct, and with that habit of right judging and honest dealing which is at once the safeguard and the hope of any people with which it exists. In this field Mr. MOODY did a work that we may all acknowledge with profound respect and gratitude.

THE IRREDUCIBLE MINIMUM OF GREEK AND LATIN.

Prof. WEST of Princeton writes for the December Atlantic an article in praise of sound training in the classics in the secondary schools, the high schools, academies, and private schools that prepare boys for college. Prof. WEST was also a member of the Committee of Twelve of the American Philological Association, which reached the conclusion that "there is no reason why at least the four-year Latin course and the three-year Greek course may not be generally adopted as the standard of classical work in the schools of the North, the South, the East, and the West." For Latin especially Prof. WEST has a very warm place in his heart. But it cannot be taught in its full attractiveness without Greek. "Latin," he writes, "especially when toned by Greek, then helps on every side, whether in our own tongue or in the other modern languages or in its rôle as the intimate companion of history or as an element in that well-tried two-fold discipline in thought and expression, classics and mathematics."

It appears, too, that Latin is coming into increasing favor. In the last eight years the number of pupils in the secondary schools has increased 86 per cent., but the number of pupils who are studying Latin has increased 174 per cent., as against 152 per cent. for history, 147 per cent. for geometry, 131 per cent. for German, 107 per cent. for French, and 94 per cent. for Greek. This is a kind of natural selection which justifies Prof. WEST in concluding that parents and pupils have found Latin to be "of most worth." Whatever may happen to English, it is evident that Latin is in no danger of going out of fashion.

Let it is a long and dusty road that the youngster must travel to come to his knowledge of Latin. The Committee of Twelve says, in its report, that in the choice of text books there is a tendency "to emphasize the humanistic as opposed to the pedantic ideal of classical culture." Surely that is an occasion for devout thankfulness. If we are coming to a time when the Latin author is to be treated as literature and not as a cadaver on the demonstrator's table, used merely to illustrate the rules and exceptions, then we have indeed made an advance.

But have the teachers of Latin really gone far on the road to humanistic treatment of the language? What knowledge of Latin do they put into a boy's head in their four years' course and what use can he make of it when they have done with him? Can he read a Latin author with ease and pleasure? Is he emancipated from the lexicon and grammar? Has he any quotable knowledge of any Latin poet? Has he an appreciative sense of the value of Latin literature? We hope an affirmative answer can be given to some of these questions.

The programme of the four years' course prepared by the committee encourages this hope. In his first year the pupil is to have the grammar with easy reading, written exercises, and reading aloud with intelligent expression, the endeavor being to make him grasp the meaning of the Latin before translating and then to render into idiomatic English. In the second year he reads four or five books of CAESAR, or some other prose writer may be substituted for two books; prose composition based on CAESAR; reading aloud and translating from prepared and unprepared passages, with training in the correct method of apprehending the author's meaning, and memorizing select passages. The third and fourth years put him through SALLUST'S Catiline, six to nine orations of CICERO five to fifteen hundred verses of OVID, six to nine books of the Aeneid, and he has constant training in prose composition based on CICERO, reading aloud and the memorizing. This is a good solid grounding in Latin, no doubt, but it is only preparatory, for all the college Latin comes after it. It gives no command of the language, only a first acquaintance with it. And the introduction takes four years! A boy ought to have lifelong daily need of a friend whose intimacy it takes this unconscionable time to conquer.

Of course all the teachers and professors are tired of hearing about MONTAIGNE, whose father, before the first untying of his tongue, and while he was still in charge of the nurse, put him under the tutelage of a learned German who talked Latin with him, so that before he was six years old, before he could speak French even, "without a formal method, without book, without grammar, without precept, without whip, and without tears, I had learned a Latin as pure as my schoolmaster's own." Then he went off to the college of Guienne, where he lost all use of his Latin, and at the age of thirteen came out without any fruit of his studies that in his riper years he could put to any use.

This proves nothing except that Latin can be taught as a living language. Then why continue to teach it as a dead one? The unvarying answer of the teaching profession is that it is for mental discipline. It is as a gymnastic of the mind, not as literature, that Latin is treated at school and college. It strikes us that there is precious little humanism about that. MACAULAY had a thorough classical training before he went up to Cambridge, a training which was based on the old-time drudgery and drill of the grammar, but the course must have been deeply tinged with humanism, for he passed much time in reading his classics for the fun of it. Everybody remembers what a prodigious lot of Latin and Greek he read on his outward voyage to India and while at Calcutta. He wrote from Calcutta in 1834:

> I read much and particularly Greek, and I find that I am, in all essentials, still not a bad scholar. * * * I read, however, not as I read at college, but as a man of the world. If I do not know a word I pass it by, unless it is important to the sense. If I find, as I have of late often found, a passage which refuses to give up its meaning at second reading, I let it alone. I have read during the last fortnight, before breakfast, three books of HERODOTUS and four plays of AESCHYLUS.

Again he tells how nothing in PLATO'S dialogues so much struck him as the raillery. "At college, somehow, I did not understand or appreciate it." Much is here due, of course, to maturity of mind. Nevertheless, it is perfectly evident that MACAULAY had some use and joy of his classics "as a man of the world," and it is notorious that not one American college-bred man in a hundred has that easy-going familiarity with Latin and Greek which he had, or that the ordinary student of modern languages has of German or French authors after a year or two of study and practice in the class room or after six months of diligent private study.

A man with any aptitude for linguistic study will in six weeks or three months acquire a fair reading knowledge of one of the modern languages merely by devoting to the work his spare moments on trains or evenings at home, while giving his working hours to business or arduous professional labors. And in a few months more of reasonably steady reading he will have gained a mastery of the language sufficient for full literary enjoyment and the needs of practical affairs. Then why must a boy give four school years to the daily study of Latin merely to acquire a halting and most imperfect knowledge of the language and almost no knowledge of the literature?

Four years and only five authors? Surely the time is too long or the result too meagre. It is certain that Latin can be learned better in less time, learned to be read and spoken. Is the discipline of half-knowledge, gained by the drudgery of the grammar and lexicon in the old way, so precious and upbuilding that it must forever be set above thorough knowledge and mastery? The average end which classical instruction seeks to accomplish in these days and in this country is not pedantic and minute scholarship. MACAULAY'S man of the world knowledge is far better than that. It is not the course of instruction that needs revising, but the methods of teaching. May we not hope that some day the professors will be able to give a boy more Latin in less time?

THE TWO "REPUBLICS."

We observe that a good deal of the sympathy which the Boers of South Africa find in this country comes from the fact that Great Britain calls herself an empire and that the burghers of South Africa call their States "republics." Really, that was the only ground upon which Senator MASON based his resolution of sympathy with the Boers and of denunciation of the British.

It is not at all creditable to the intelligence of a Senator of the United States to be thus misled by mere names. The British Empire is, to all intents and purposes, as much a republic as these United States. It has been called "a republic with a gilt figurehead." But what real difference does it make that an Englishman uses the Queen as a symbol of his country, whereas an American prefers to use a flag? It is really childish for a Senator to talk about such distinctions as if they were vital.

On the other hand, the South African republics have the name of republics, but that is all they have. A British subject is very much nearer than a burgher of either to what an American citizen calls citizenship. There is a distinction to be drawn between the two. The Orange Free State is a republic in a much more accurate sense than the South African Republic, simply because it is a more homogeneous community. Its white population consists almost entirely of natives, either of the country itself or of Cape Colony, that is to say, of Dutch Afrikanders. So did the population of the Transvaal before the discovery of gold in the Rand. But for that event there would have been no larger proportion of Outlanders in the Transvaal than in the Orange Free State, and legislation which suited Boers would have continued to suit the whole population. But when the Outlanders came, to dig gold and do business, legislation and government continued to be, as before, for the exclusive benefit of the Boers, and the influx of immigration converted the Government from what might fairly be called a republic into an oligarchy. This oligarchy, denying the rights of citizens to the new-comers, proceeded to load upon them the burden of taxes, in the spending of which they had no voice. The taxes were levied so as to relieve the natives of their proper share. More than that, being levied upon persons who had nothing to say about the disposition of them, they produced the natural result of corrupting the officials who had the spending and reduced what had been a sort of seventeenth century patriarchal theocracy to a mixture of CROMWELL'S Commonwealth and Tammany Hall.

Of all the reasons anybody can give for sympathizing with the Boers and antagonizing the British in this struggle, the pretense that the Boer Government is a freer Government than the British, or that it is more of a "republic," is quite the most false and foolish.

TO EMBELLISH THE CITY.

The production at a meeting of the Sculpture Society of various more or less comprehensive schemes for the embellishment of the city is not a novelty among artistic bodies. Similar schemes were brought forward, a year or two ago, at a meeting of the Architectural League, and very interesting schemes some of them were. But people are just now in a mood to listen with particular complaisance to any projects brought forward by the Sculpture Society, for the reason that that society has just shown its ability to embellish the city by a work undertaken at its own motion and, so far as the artistic work is concerned, at its own expense. All sorts and conditions of New Yorkers are satisfied that its capacity for public decoration needs only opportunity.

It is odd and, indeed, anomalous that a movement of this kind should proceed from an unofficial body. And yet it cannot come to much without active official co-operation. There is no provision whatever made in the charter for any initiation of projects of public embellishments. The only provision we have is a safeguard against bad art, but it is contemplated that all art, good and bad, shall proceed from private and volunteer sources, and that our only need is to be protected against it. Of course there is no municipal office holder who is charged with any responsibility for the production of works of public art. Also there is none fit to be trusted with such a responsibility. The Department of Parks has in the past been regarded as the aesthetic department of the Municipal Government and has at times deserved that distinction. But of course it would be folly to commit such questions to Mr. CLAUSEN, who is well known to be deaf on that side of his head. And yet nothing short of official power and official responsibility can make successful any extensive scheme of municipal embellishment. To take one example only, the surroundings of a public monument must be in harmony with it, in order that it may produce its best effect. There is scarcely one of the projects brought up by the sculptors that could not be brought to nothing by the exercise on the part of a private owner, adjoining or neighboring, of his right to do what he will with his own. It would be necessary, in case he had some Vandal scheme in his mind, to restrain him, by public authority, from carrying it out to the detriment of a public monument. There is now no authority by which this can be done, unless his property is taken outright for public uses. We can never have an artistic city until we recognize the necessity of lodging somewhere a power to constrain private builders to observe public decencies. The effect of any extensive scheme of municipal embellishment depends upon the enforcement of the right of eminent domain where only the public decencies are in question.

Of course we are very far short of the point at which public opinion would sustain so drastic a measure as this. If we ever come round to it it will be because we are convinced that it pays. There are such demonstrations. One of them is made by Paris. It is not too much to say that another is made by Washington. The private building in Washington is no better than in any other American city, though means have been found there to prevent the defacement of the city by "syscrapers." But the original plan of the city is such that private Vandals can there do less harm to public monuments than in any other American city. Paris lives on its attractiveness, on the number of things to be seen there that are worth seeing. And the attractiveness of Washington as a Winter resort and residence comes largely from the same cause. When any radical and comprehensive scheme for the embellishment of New York is brought forward, when even an effort is made to preserve one street for the spectacle of the pleasure driving to be seen there, the answer always is that this is a "business city." All beauty, all seemliness, even public decency, are sacrificed to this Moloch. The only way in which the Moloch can be appeased is to convince his worshippers that municipal embellishment and an attractive city are also "business," and that it pays to have them. When we have reached that point New York will begin to put on an immensely improved appearance and to make her inhabitants prouder of her than they have ever been before, and with better reason.

THE TIMES gives an unusually large proportion of space to-day to letters from its readers on the subject of the war in the Transvaal and the rights and wrongs of the parties to it as seen by the writers. The matter itself is of sufficient importance, the views of our correspondents are varied enough and sustained with enough earnestness and ingenuity to justify this course. And it is a pleasure to find that the policy of the paper in affording opportunity for the fair expression and discussion of opinions without reference to those advanced on the editorial page is so extensively appreciated and that so wide a number and variety of its readers are more and more availing themselves of it.

Since 1888 he has been editor of The Kansas City (Kan.) Gazette.

ENGLAND AND THE PHILIPPINES

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The nauseating and fulsome flattery of this country by the press of Great Britain and, to a great extent, by its Government, a flattery which daily increases as its situation becomes more and more critical, reminds us strongly of the homely saying that "words are words and facts are facts." When and where did that Government ever pursue a truly liberal and generous policy without a selfish aim? Was it with Ireland in the time of Cromwell and up to this day? Was it when France simply asked, in 1790-5, to be allowed to choose a form of government to suit itself, which request did not meet the views and approbation of Pitt and of the English aristocracy?

Was it when during the Revolutionary War she bombarded unprotected villages and hired savages to murder and torture defenseless women and children? Was it when, early in this century, she took by force American sailors from American vessels, or when, without cause, one of her ships fired on an American warship? Was it when, against all the usages of civilized warfare, she set fire to the public buildings in Washington, or, when about attacking New Orleans, the commander of her army allowed, unrestrained, the cry of "Beauty and Booty" to be raised by his soldiers? Or was it, perhaps, at a still later period, when, moved by her habitual Christian purposes, she crammed opium down the throats of the protesting Chinese? Or, when she cajoled and patted during long years, the present Sultan of Turkey whom Mr. Gladstone had rightly designated as "the great assassin"? And after loud words, but no acts, allowed over 150,000 Armenians to be murdered, a few years since?

Were the catalogue of all the instances of Great Britain's selfishness, perfidy, and cruelty within the last 100 years to be written, it would indeed be a long one. At this very moment, look at the unjust war she is waging against the Boers, a brave but small nation.

It might be said, in answer, look at Great Britain's Government of her colonies at the present day, and at the apparent contentment of such countries as Canada and Australia. We retort by asserting that whatever is good in it is solely owing to the lesson this country taught her in 1776 to 1783. Great Britain is scarcely ever governed by incompetent men, and a continuous policy almost always follows ministerial changes. One very strong proof of the ability of her Ministers can be seen in her great and successful efforts to induce this Government to conquer and hold the Philippine Islands.

Too many Americans have apparently overlooked the fact that war between this country and Great Britain is an event quite possible at a future day, and that by means of the fortresses of Gibraltar, Malta, and Aden, of the position of Hongkong, as well as by her powerful fleet and her control of the Suez Canal, England could now or at any future time attack the Philippine Islands with five or ten ships to the Americans' one. What would be the probable result?

TURNED OUT OF CHURCH.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

It is astounding that a partisan committee of professing Christians of Stamford, of which the Chairman professed to be a servant of Christ, with two Doctors of Divinity as prosecutors and managers, could be found to render the verdict they did against William Kemp, who had been a member of the Methodist Church for many years. They turned him out of the Church. He is an aged man and uses crutches, but at that last unbiased tribunal, which all men reach, he may be found with wings, when his prosecutors and judges may be looking up to him from a lower plane, asking for water.

They turned him out. For what? Nothing wrong morally. There was no reflection against his character. He was not disloyal. This was admitted by his prosecutors. He simply wanted to offer prayer at prayer meetings, attend the Bible class, and because under religious fervor he was given to shouting "Hallelujahs!" "Glory to God!" and "Amen!" He belongs to the old Methodist school or order, and became distasteful to the later and more fashionable leaders of that sect. The attendance at churches is dwindling. It is no wonder that the pews are empty. Such verdicts and such action will make the audiences grow slimmer.

It seems to a multitude here un-Christian. It looks like a conspiracy to break an old man's heart, and send him to an earlier grave. It would be pleasant if some of this committee would let the public know where Mr. Kemp can go to worship God. To whose church? The writer does not know the names of one of the jury, and never saw the defendant in this case. The details of the trial for some reason were suppressed, but they leaked out. Neither law nor equity nor Christ's teachings had any place in this court.

Such a verdict could have hardly been reached in the mediaeval ages.

It has transpired to-day that this case has been appealed to a higher earthly tribunal, and will shortly be retried at Port Chester, N. Y. Also that Mr. Kemp and some of his defenders are meeting in the old-fashioned style from house to house.

ORNAMENTING THE WATER GATE

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Noticing that at a meeting of the National Sculpture Society this week it was proposed by Mr. J. Scott Hartley to erect a water gate at the foot of West Seventy-second Street leading to Riverside Drive, according to a design submitted by that gentleman, which comprised terraced walks from the river up to the drive, embellished with statues of Hudson and Stuyvesant, and other ornamental features, I would like to ask a few questions.

Why would it not be more appropriate to have statues of such men as Robert Fulton and Chancellor Livingston, who did so much toward making New York the great commercial metropolis it is to-day by opening up the rivers and other waterways of the United States to traffic by their successful adoption of steam toward propelling boats? What did Hudson or Stuyvesant ever do, as compared with the great work of Fulton or Livingston, to have the City of New York honor them to the exclusion of the latter?

Fulton perfected the steamboat after numbers of other inventors had failed, and through the influence and practical aid of Livingston was enabled to carry out his plans, and thus opened an era which has been productive of more good to the benefit of mankind than any other occurrence of the nineteenth century.

Previous to the advent of Fulton's steamboat many of the rivers of the United States were practically closed to navigation by reason of their currents, which precluded any kind of traffic except that which was aided by the current, and all traffic followed the wagon roads. After the adoption of steam as a motive power for boats the great tide of travel and freight traffic was diverted to the waterways, and for years they were the great avenues of commerce. The entire carrying traffic on the ocean was by sailing vessels, and the twenty or thirty day voyage was reduced to a fortnight, and in later years to the six-day trip of the modern steamship. Yet in the light of all these manifold benefits conferred on the Nation, the bones of Robert Fulton to-day rest in a practically unmarked grave in the heart of the business district of the second city in the world.

Notwithstanding the fact that all the steamboats that ply the waters of the country to-day are moving monuments to the genius and energy of Robert Fulton, and while other benefactors of a contemporaneous era have been honored by monuments and other memorials, not even a modest headstone tells where he is sleeping his last sleep.

What more fitting spot to erect a grand monument to such a man—a man who did more to foster the prosperity and commerce of the country than any of his contemporaries of this century—than at the entrance to the Riverside Drive, overlooking the Hudson, on whose waters first floated the Clermont, the forerunner of that great fleet of river and ocean steamers which to-day sustains the commerce of the world.

The writer a few years ago suggested the idea of fittingly honoring the memory of Robert Fulton, and the matter was taken up by one of the weekly papers, and was also presented to the Chamber of Commerce, but no action was taken, and it is to be hoped that the question may again be agitated, and by the time that the hundredth anniversary of the advent of the Clermont on the waters of the Hudson is celebrated—which we have no doubt it will be—the City of New York may awaken to the duty of paying tribute to this most worthy benefactor of mankind.

ARCH IN A GOOD PLACE.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I beg you to call public attention to the great utilitarian value of the triumphal arch and colonnade now spanning Fifth Avenue, opposite Twenty-fourth Street, and reaching from Twenty-third to Twenty-fifth Street.

Anyone acquainted with this part of our city knows what a dangerous crossing it has been from the west side of Broadway to Madison Square, between the Worth Monument and Twenty-third Street. They will remember that few people crossed this very wide street, preferring to go to the Twenty-third Street crossing, which is almost equally bad.

Since the arch and columns have been erected thousands of people have daily crossed and recrossed this street, because of the protection afforded by these stations of safety.

If the arch is made permanent in memory of our soldiers and sailors who fought in the Spanish-American war, no site is so suitable as the present one, and if it is not built there the municipal authorities should cause something permanent to be erected in its stead.

Loves His Flag.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

If the American citizen goes into other countries and looks about, he will come back with a stronger love of his country and its flag than he had before. I spent the month of December, 1841, in the City of Lima and its seaport, Callao. While there the United States frigate Constitution, Old Ironsides, and the United States sloop of war St. Louis came in and anchored in Callao Bay. The French frigate Actaine and the whaleship Francis of New Bedford came in. I went on board of the United States ships and walked about the decks. Over my head the Stars and Stripes were flying in the wind. A feeling came over me that words cannot fully express. Our flag was there.

God bless the jack tars who protect us at home and abroad.

Need of Water Meters.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Referring to the letter of Columbus O. Johnson in your issue of to-day, in which he states that "in 1897 $2,438,475 was collected from the 16,000,000 gallons which passed through meters, and $1,851,754 from 68,000,000 gallons not included," I should like to ask if it is not about time for the City of New York to place water meters in every house, so that all her citizens shall be treated alike. What seems to stand in the way is the claim usually made that the poor would be especially affected, whereas nine-tenths of them are living in tenements which are metered, and the water rates paid by the landlord. The large waste of water is in the houses of the wealthy.

A MOTHER'S CHRISTMAS DREAM.

Folger McKinsey in Baltimore News.

The shadows of the evening gathered round
her snow-white head,
The bells of Christmas rang in carols
sweet;
She heard the happy-hearted hosts of gladness onward tread,
And the music of their laughter in the street.
She clasped her hands and slumbered by the fireplace, dreaming she
Beheld a tropic country far away;
And beneath the bending palm-boughs, with a rifle on his knee,
Her hero who had gone to face the fray.

She heard the bugles calling, and she saw him join the line,
The column clad in khaki moving down,
Through the swamps and o'er the trenches
in the far-off Philippine,
To the ramparts running round a little town.
She saw him 'neath the banner of her country, fearless, brave,
All the light of noble manhood in his eye;
She watched the Stars and Stripes above
the brown-clad column wave,
And she saw them charge to conquer or to die.

Then the shadows of the vision shifted where the Southern rose
Blooms beside the pine-clad hills of Tennessee,
And the hero who had faced in other years
the vanished foes
Led his legions in the battles of the free.
She saw his sabre flashing as he gave the bold command,
With the light of valor leaping round his form,
In the fray that proved him faithful to the fair flag of his land,
When the hillsides shook with thunder of the storm.

She saw the darkness gather in the lowering battle smoke,
And then a white face blurred with streams of red—
Her life was young and strong to stand against the awful stroke,
When they brought her valiant warrior homeward dead.
Years had vanished, and the ivy crept
Where he sleeps the dreamless slumber of the true,
And she gave their son to follow at the battle-bugle's sound,
'Neath the stars upon the old flag's field of blue.

Far away again the vision called her through the vales of sleep;
She saw him in the shadows once again;
They had stormed the alien fortress, they had captured trench and steep,
They were resting in their tents on field and fen.
Through the curtain outward swinging she could see him where he lay,
Her strong, young, noble scion of the West,
With his lips upon a locket holding strands of white and gray,
And the picture of her own face on his breast.

Once again the chimes were ringing, and her Dreamland journey o'er,
She heard the bells of Christmas sweetly play—
A footstep on the portal and a hand upon the door,
A light that filled the room with loving ray.
Strong arms of love about her, in her heart a nameless bliss;
Her waiting and her reverent vigil done;
Her face upon his bosom, on her lips a soldier's kiss—
A mother's sacred union with her son!

Position of Women as Wage-Earners.

Written for THE NEW YORK TIMES

By MRS. FREDERICK NATHAN,

President of the Consumers' League of the City of New York.

THE Rev. Dr. Smith of St. Paul has recently made some extraordinary statements in regard to woman's status in economics. He contended—if the newspapers reported him correctly—that the feminine wage earner is one of the evils of modern civilization, and he suggested that "the world would be better off if all the women were turned out of their jobs to-morrow." Such a statement would scarcely warrant a serious reply, were it not for the fact that Dr. Smith is reported to be in charge of the department of sociology at the Minnesota State University. He apparently ignores the causes which led to women's competing with men in industrial life, and merely rails at what he considers the evil effects. Is he oblivious to the fact that one of the chief causes of this competition is that men have taken away so many of women's home industries that they are forced to work in factories, instead of in their own homes, as in former days? From time immemorial women as well as men have been workers—have been producers as well as consumers; only, as they produced in their own households, they were not termed wage earners. They toiled just as laboriously, but they received no money compensation for their work. Indeed, the case was the same with the men; they worked in the fields and produced food for their own families, and made household articles necessary for their own homes. Any food products or any household articles not required were exchanged for other products among the neighbors.

In primitive days women made their abodes—tents of hide—their own furniture, including beds that were made of skins, and their own packing boxes. Pottery and the textile arts originally belonged entirely to woman's domain. Women discovered their own dyes, did their own quarrying, modeling, and polishing in the process of making pottery, and used their own backs for the purpose of transportation. They fashioned their own tools, and rude though they were in those days, they used them with marvelous ingenuity. Their teeth often served as implements in their trade, so, if it be true that women's tongues are to-day their best implements, it but proves the law of natural inheritance!

In later years, while the men hunted or worked in fields or went to war, it was the women who did the spinning and weaving, who made the carpets, linen, and cloth, who made the rope, the candles, the soap. It was the women who made the pickles and preserves, the bread, butter, cake, and confectionery, the raisin wine, cider, and cordials. They did the cutting and sewing of cloaks, gowns, and boys' suits, of underwear, shirts, and aprons. They dyed their own wools, prepared their own medicines from herbs, which they gathered themselves, and they braided their own straw hats and baskets.

But when, with the invention of cumbersome machinery, all these industries were taken out of the home and put into factories, the men usurped these vocations, until to-day, not only do men make all the household articles made in factories, but they have even encroached upon the domestic sphere of woman, and do cooking, sewing, laundrywork, chamberwork, and waiting!

Fortunately for woman, however, her sphere extends beyond the domestic circle. In scientific research, literature, art, and industrial training she has proved herself capable. Owing to lack of space, only a few instances can be noted here, so I shall mention those not usually recognized. The first submarine telescope was the production of a woman, Mrs. S. B. Mather of New York. A Mrs. Montgomery invented the method of constructing warships so as to resist shot and shell. When Edison couldn't discover the cause of noise in the elevated railway, a woman, Mrs Walton by name, competed with men in endeavoring to locate the cause, and she was paid $10,000 and a royalty forever for the discovery of a remedy.

The discovery of galvanism was not due to Aloisio Galvani, but to his wife, who, while preparing frogs with which to make soup, noticed their contractions, when she touched them with a knife which happened to be near a machine charged with electricity. Among women's many inventions may be noted a frost shoe to prevent horses from slipping in frosty weather, a novel combined electrical vapor bath, improvements in compressing sea salt and chemicals having the same properties, improved method and apparatus for compressing solid and liquid disinfectants, improved method of drying wheat and other grain, improvements in surgery and machinery, too numerous to give in detail.

The best farmer in a Georgia town a few years ago was said to be a woman seventy-two years of age, who had managed her own business for thirty-five years. The largest individual sheep owner in Texas a short time ago was "Widow Callahan," whose flocks numbered 50,000 head. It is on record that a woman who was placed in charge of a railway switch worked from 6 A. M. to 6 P. M. for twenty-six years, and during that time never once misplaced a switch. A woman who was keeper of a lighthouse in Michigan filled this responsible position for more than a quarter of a century with perfect satisfaction.

It is useless to hold a theory that women should be supported by men, and therefore should not be wage-earners, so long as the fact remains that many thousands of women are not supported by men, and in order to live are obliged to earn their own living. If, as in many instances, they do their work as well as men, they should in all fairness receive equal compensation for their work. Some employers prefer to employ women in responsible positions, such as cashiers, because of their freedom from gambling and sporting proclivities, and it is manifestly unjust to offer them lower salaries merely on account of their sex. It is true that the women themselves are to a large extent responsible for the low standard of wages adopted. Those who are partially supported work for a lower wage than they can possibly live on, and in this way they drag down the standard of wages and make it extremely difficult for self-supporting women, and those who are obliged to support families, to earn their livelihood. This same charge can be laid at the door of young men. Those who live at home and have no expense of board and lodging often work for a salary that would be far too low for a married man to subsist on, who has other mouths than his own to feed. Whatever is true of unskilled labor among women is equally true when applied to men. Experts can always demand and secure a fair compensation for their labor; it is the untrained man or woman who tends to lower the scale of wages until it reaches a degradingly low level. Training and organization are necessary for both sexes and for every branch of work.

Dr. Smith contends that every healthy woman should marry, if she can get a husband! Conversely every healthy man should marry, if he can get a wife! Obviously, it is the law of nature for man and woman to marry and produce more men and women, but it is immoral to teach girls that in order to live they must secure husbands who can support them. What kind of mothers would there be to rear citizens for the State if girls are placed in the position of being forced to marry any men who express a willingness to support them? And even if the men did agree to do so, what guarantee would they have that the support would continue for the remainder of their lives? Is it not far better for a girl to receive proper education and training in some trade or profession, that she may earn an honest living? She would then not be forced to sell herself to the first bidder, but could bide her time until she found the man who could win her love and respect, one to whom she could intrust her life and happiness, one whom she could be proud to have as the father of her children. And if by chance such a man should through accident or illness or death be deprived of the privilege of supporting her and her children, why should she not be allowed to be the breadwinner?

In olden days when women were gifted as writers or painters or sculptors, they were constrained to keep the secret from the public; it was considered bad form, nay, unwomanly, to display such masculine talents! The women were forced to hide their light or let their husbands, brothers, or sons reflect it for them, or else they had to adopt masculine pseudonyms. To-day they no longer have any cause to shun publicity, and Dr. Smith is able to quote statistics to show that the number of artists and professional women has increased. Dr. Smith deplores this fact, but it is a natural result of education, and whether men of old-fashioned ideas protest against it or not, the enlightenment and aptitude of women have been progressing and will continue to progress. Moreover, many broad-minded men are in the vanguard, proclaiming the righteousness and justice of the movement.

If the Minnesota State University clings to precepts of a century ago, the students of sociology who matriculate there will find themselves in the anomalous position of living at the dawn of the twentieth century and endeavoring to solve its problems by the light of the eighteenth century!

"Nature intended man to be the producer, woman the consumer," says Dr. Smith. But in reality every producer is a consumer as well, and every consumer, whether man or woman, to be a good citizen, should be a producer of something worth producing, whether the product be in the form of material or spiritual nourishment. Those who consume the products of the earth and of all the labor of the world and who contribute nothing to the sum of the world's progress are not the people best fitted to train the men and women of the next generation.

With every advancement of civilization the laggards make a hue and cry and persist that we are marching ahead too quickly. They endeavor to hold back the hands of time. When stage-coaches were abandoned for railroads the dormant villagers protested against the innovation. The stage-drivers lost their positions, the railroads cut through pastures and fields, and even demolished old family homesteads; the locomotives alarmed animals and children, accidents lent fresh horrors to the situation, the peace and quiet of the vicinity were disturbed, the trains brought undesirable people to the villages and carried away with too great a facility the ambitious village youths to the large cities, where temptations beset them. Moreover, the railroads were the means of establishing noisy and often noisome factories. Yet who does not recognize the advantages to industry, commerce—in short, to civilization—of the modern method of traveling over the old method, although many might personally prefer to go back to the old stage-coach days? Besides, economically speaking, the railroad has proved a great factor in the advancement of labor, for although stage-coach drivers were temporarily displaced, an army of men were provided with positions as skilled engineers, firemen, brakemen, conductors, ticket agents, freight agents, &c.

In the same way, whenever machinery has been invented to take the place of hand labor, there has been an outcry by those who wear blinders like horses, and are frightened because they cannot see to the right or to the left of them, nor, indeed, far enough ahead to see the ultimate advantages. Yet none but the ignorant would decry the advantages of machinery over hand labor, and while there may be in every instance a temporary displacement of labor, the workers reap enormous advantages in the end. On account of increased facility of production, the product becomes cheaper and the workers are enabled to consume more; the introduction of machinery necessitates factory conditions which imply shorter hours, better wages, and more sanitary conditions, and with these conditions producers are able to work better and produce more. Since many women are obliged to work, is it not immeasurably better that they should work under the best factory conditions, instead of in their living rooms under conditions that invariably make for a low standard of living?

Dr. Smith, ignoring the fact that men have been steadily invading the domain of women, storms against women for entering the same fields of labor as men, yet he admits that the result has been, not the crowding down of men, but the forcing of them up into more lucrative occupations, "occupations that pay better than the vocations filled by women," to use Dr. Smith's own words. If this be true, how grateful the men should be to the women for this lift! And why do the women deserve "to be turned out of their jobs" since they have accomplished such desirable results?

Rational Dress for Women.

Written for THE NEW YORK TIMES

By Emma M. Hooper,

Associate Editor of The Ladies' Home Journal.

For some unknown reason, when men attack the system of woman's gowning, past or present, fashionable or rational, they always hammer on the same aged nailhead and pathetically inquire why women will not dress in a sensible, or, as our esteemed friend H. K. Bush-Brown puts it, in a rational manner. Mr. Brown is the latest to rush in where angels fear to tread, and proves, in the fallacy of his reasoning, that all men, when writing of women's dress or editing a fashion paper or department devoted to this subject, can so easily become what the late lamented A. Ward used to call "amoosin little cusses."

If any of the masculine gender is thirsting for information why women do not dress in a sensible manner, devoid of fashion, art, becomingness, and that quality that we call style, let him read as he runs along, simply because it the feminine sex did attire themselves after this advice, men would not notice them and would run after the giddy ones who do not care a farthing for sensible dress. Men talk of economy and common sense in dress and deliberately snub women following out this line of attire, freezing them with inattention if not downright rudeness in a drawing room where rational women are the wall flowers and the empty-headed, pretty-faced girls are the goddesses upon whom their admiration is poured. When the protecting sex realizes that women dress to improve their appearance, please and attract men, and displease other women, they will feel how sharp their indifference to the rational in dress or conduct may be.

The common sense women are not the first to be selected for wives by men with or without sense, and directly or indirectly this ultimate or wished-for end influences every woman as it should, for certainly to be a happy married woman is a higher, more perfect life than to remain single. This will probably call down the wrath of several strong minded sisters, but the writer has borne burdens before.

To take the Rainy Day Club seriously is such a good joke, anyway when it apparently exists to prove that members need not wear a short skirt on a rainy day; the club teaches what not to do in a storm, hence the fashionable demi-trains that men are fiercely denouncing, but the worst patrons of this really uncleanly style, for the street, have just as long a string of admirers, while the common-sense girl is trudging along alone and ever will be. It is not the criticism of the merchant, the dressmaker, or the fashion writer, but man's that bars all rational improvement in dress.

To ask why all women follow the same fashions is a step nearer to art in dress; plead hard, loud, and long for individuality in dress, and the result will be more artistic dress and women more becomingly garbed; yet, even artistic gowning must be appropriate to the occasion, or the pleasing effect is lost. The chief trouble in dressing women, outside of trying to please man, is that merchants try to push too many bargain counter goods, and the middle class dressmaker is not yet attuned to the key of artistic dressing. Materials, trimmings, and colors were never handsomer than to-day, and outside of the trained tight-fitting skirt the styles are pleasing if not carried to the extreme. Of course they will be sometimes, and then let students of human nature watch the men flocking about the daring invader of common sense dress.

Is it a joke that the last man to do and dare advises fair women to wear all gowns until they are worn out and not change with the tide, all on the ground of economy? As the existence of fashion and its consequent changes provide a living for 5,000,000 people, according to the calculation of ten years ago, it seems rather high handed to sweep their bread and butter away without a thought of the future, and poor logic to preach economy to the wealthy at the expense of the poor. Women are the distributors of money spent in living and dress, no matter by whom it is earned, and while laudable to preach judgment and caution in spending this money it is not just to the mass of wage workers to cry economy if liberality can be afforded.

What have the fashion books done to arouse man's ire? Most of the editors and artists are men. Can it be that they are wrong in their estimate of women's dress? It would be absolutely cruel to leave such an impression, and if each devotee of fashion followed her own ideas minus the fashion plate a confusion worse than the Tower of Babel would befall them. The prosperity of a country depends greatly upon its manufactures. Reflect on this all carpers regarding changes in dress. Unemployed workmen are not easy to deal with, and capital is better spent than hoarded.

Lecture upon art in dress, individual styles, and dress appropriate to the wearer's circumstances if lectures there need be. But to return to first principles, why lecture us upon our gowns when thine own apparel, Sir Cynic, is not beyond reproach? There is one view of the question that men seldom touch upon, the grave fault so prevalent in this country of dressing beyond our means and position by seeking to emulate the immensely wealthy class that often sets the pace, and yet it is one that is apt to touch a tender chord—the pocket. But this view opens up such a vista that a volume could be written. Or, better yet, have another logical lecture before the Rainy Day Club, and this time have some one who has made a study of art in dress without any erratic side tracks to the broad path thus marked out.

The Future of The Horse.

Written for THE NEW YORK TIMES

By E. S. NADAL.

THE simultaneous appearance of late years of a number of circumstances unfavorable to horses has caused certain persons, who take time by the forelock and easily echo vague notions that are fashionable for the moment, to foretell the extinction of these animals. First, came the bicycle, and about the same time the substitution of electricity for horse power in street cars. Along with them came the financial depression of five years ago, and bad times affects, quickly the price of horses, especially of fine horses. No sooner had the horse business adjusted itself to the new inventions and the times had got better, than it is again threatened by the evident success of the automobiles.

Now, I do not doubt that all these rivals of horses are permanently with us. It is not to be supposed that mankind, having got possession of such a convenient, cheap, and effective instrument of locomotion as the bicycle, will consent to do without it. The boys and girls of the future will all no doubt grow up with the ability to ride a bicycle, and most of them will have one. That trolleys are in speed, comfort, and cleanliness a great improvement over horse cars cannot be denied; and there seems to be no doubt that a cab drawn by horses cannot compete in cheapness with a vehicle which dispenses with the use of them.

And yet, notwithstanding these valuable and no doubt indispensable contributions to the public comfort, it does not follow that the use of horses will be superseded or even very greatly circumscribed by them. It is forgotten that horses have withstood a far greater revolution in the past than it is possible the new inventions can bring about. I mean the introduction of steam. That was, indeed, a prodigious revolution. No modern change can be comparable with that, which, in a very few years, abolished the use of horses for carrying travelers and freight, except for very short distances. So great was the change that it entirely altered the aspect of the country roads. Thackeray, in "The Virginians," thus describes the English roads as young Warrington first saw them a day or two after landing in England from Virginia:

"The high road, a hundred years ago, was not the grass-grown desert of the present time. It was alive with constant travel and traffic; the country towns and inns swarmed with life and gayety. The ponderous wagon, with its bells and plodding team; the light post coach that achieved the journey from the 'White Hart,' Salisbury, to the 'Swan with Two Necks,' London, in two days; the strings of pack horses that had not yet left the road; my lord's gilt post chaise and six, with the outriders galloping on ahead; the country squire's great coach and heavy Flanders mares; the farmers trotting to market, or the parson jolting to the cathedral town on Dumpling, his wife behind on the pillion—all these crowding sights and brisk people greeted the young traveler on his Summer journey."

And yet horses withstood even this revolution. It was very naturally feared in England at the time of the introduction of steam that the business of raising horses would be destroyed by it, and that was one of the grounds of opposition to the railroads. It did not prove so, however. The competition for good horses in England has never been keener than at present. I am told, for instance, that in Yorkshire, the great horse growing country of England, it is now almost impossible to buy from a farmer a horse of an age of use, for the reason that the horses are bought up as yearlings and two-year-olds, and left with the farmers to raise and train. The competition for horses in certain parts of this country, say, Kentucky, is such that it is possible the same thing may come to pass here. I am not sure that it would not be sometimes a good thing to do now. At the Lexington fair last Summer I saw a yearling mare I should like to have bought and left in good hands, in order to save her beautiful trotting action from being ruined by single footing.

It is usually said that the result of modern conditions will be the limitation of the use of horses, in cities at any rate, to purposes of pleasure. It may be so, but I am not sure of it. The usual course of things with new inventions is that they are created to meet the increasing requirements of modern life, not to supplant the old instruments, which are needed also. This was so with steam locomotion, which was created not so much to meet old requirements as to prepare for new ones. It has been said that a great modern city like New York would starve if it were not for steam locomotion. This was shown at the time of the blizzard, when the town was for several days put on very short rations. So it may be that automobiles are introduced to meet new needs rather than old ones. No doubt they will limit the use of cabs drawn by horses, but they will not do away with them. It will still be difficult for the smartest automobile to compete with a smart cab drawn by a smart horse. I venture to say that two young mashers who have dined at a club or restaurant and emerged therefrom to go to the theatre, feeling on good terms with themselves and the world at large, would rather pay 50 cents for a hansom drawn by a really good horse than 25 cents for an automobile. A young lady who treats herself to a drive round the Park on a May morning in a hansom will, I am sure, rather ride after a good horse than in an automobile. As with cabs, so it will be with business wagons. The horseless vehicles of this class must have a very cold and incomplete appearance when compared with wagons drawn by nice horses.

It may, indeed, be that some of the new inventions may result in an increased use of horses. The use of bicycles, for instance, will help along the love of mankind for outdoor life, and thus indirectly lead to an increased use of horses. Indeed, to a boy a bicycle would naturally suggest a saddle horse, and this will certainly be so if the boy has any inborn fondness for the animal. And if the use of bicycles by women should result in their riding horses astride, (of which, I regret to say, I see no likelihood at present,) the result would be a great increase in the amount of horseback riding.

The automobiles, I may say in passing, are just now where bicycles were a few years ago, an object of curiosity and interest to that large part of humanity whose delight is to run after a new thing and to lose their heads over what is much talked about. They will probably run the same course as the bicycles. They will take their place as an invention very necessary to the general convenience, but will cease to be an object of enthusiastic interest so soon as people have got used to them. People will then care no more for them than they care now for locomotives.

That no machine can be as attractive and interesting as an animal is the ground upon which those who think the new inventions cannot supersede horses may rest with confidence. And the horse is not only an animal, but he is alone among animals in the power of winning the enthusiastic and affectionate interest of men. It has been so always and will be so as long as the world endures. No doubt men differ very much in their love of horses; they differ as their temperaments and their opportunities differ. But most human beings have a certain interest in them. To recognize this one has only to go, as I did two years ago, to some such gathering as the State Fair at Springfield, Ill. I saw there sixty thousand people watching Star Pointer and Joe Patchen move three times around the generous full mile track, while in the distance the Autumn haze half veiled the still verdant meadows and hung softly over the yellowing cornfields of the fruitful country.

In the case of running races it must be admitted that other considerations besides love of horses attract men to them. But it may be in the future that changes will take place in the character of these contests that will make them more interesting to horse lovers and less so to those who use them for purposes of gambling. Instead of short races between young weeds, run as colts for economy's sake, we may have trials of speed and endurance between adult horses that will be like the great contests of former days. It is possible also that they may some day be conducted with less cruelty than at present. For, assuredly, it cannot be good for the disposition of an animal to be whipped for the last hundred yards of every race and to be an hour getting away, jerked back again and again for a new start. When these reforms have been made, it may, perhaps, be easier to breed out among thoroughbreds the narrow brains and foolish, staring eyes.

There is this to be said in conclusion, that if the future of inventions for locomotion is almost without limit, there is also a future for the horse. It is not unreasonable to expect that wise breeding may make general qualities of which we have ourselves seen examples, for all of us have known horses that combined ambition and high life with a sense and kindness which were almost a complete guarantee of safety and which won for them the grateful affection of the men they served.

A Municipal Experiment.

Written for THE NEW YORK TIMES

By A. W. Hawks, Jr.

Municipal Baltimore is ending the century by the beginning of a reform which embodies a practical test of many of the theories of modern political economy.

In the Spring of last year the Legislature approved the new charter drawn up by a commission appointed for this specific purpose. Most active among the framers of this complex act was Thomas Gordon Hayes, who a month ago was inaugurated as the new charter Mayor of the city. He had been successful in having incorporated in the law his ideas on municipal government, and he is now pursuing such a policy with a spirit and success that opens the eyes of previous reformers and brings sadness to the hearts of the old-time Democracy.

Throughout the new charter are to be found eight central principles which control the spirit of the law. They are:

First—To locate responsibility upon public officials in such a manner that it cannot be evaded.

Secondly—To give representation to the minority party in all departments, when composed of more than one person, so that an opportunity may be given to the minority to scrutinize the actions of the party in power.

Thirdly—To hold municipal elections at a different time from the State and Federal elections, in order to separate municipal affairs from the influence of the political issues which are necessarily involved in State and Federal elections.

Fourthly—To require the appointment of experts in all departments where professional knowledge and skill are required.

Fifthly—To grant the use of the streets and other public property, for limited terms and to the highest bidder, subject to the control and regulation of the city during the period of the grant.

Sixthly—To check hasty legislation, especially in matters relating to expenditure of the public moneys, and to prohibit the creation of floating debts.

Seventhly—To remove the public school system from all possible political influence.

Eighthly—To place the indigent sick and poor, when their treatment, care, or support is paid for by the city, under the supervision of city officials.

Beginning with the inauguration of Mayor Hayes the term of the executive was increased from two to four years. He alone is vested with the power of appointment. It is hoped by this centralization that the responsibility will be placed specifically on one man, and, to insure the city against bad judgment, all appointments have to be ratified by the second branch of the City Council, a body of eight members elected by direct vote. There is another legislative body known as the first branch, but to it is given only the power of appropriating moneys, and this is subject to a Municipal Board of Estimates.

The latter organization is an entirely new feature in this city. The board is made up of the Mayor, the Controller, the President of the Council, all of whom are elected by the people; the City Register, who is named in a Council caucus, and the City Solicitor, who is appointed by the Mayor. As its name implies, the board makes departmental appropriations and fixes the tax rate. Its levy, as drawn up, may be amended by the Council, provided the amendment reduces the appropriation, but no additional sums can be inserted by the city fathers. In addition, no expenditure exceeding $2,000 can be made without the board's sanction, and if this sum is for a public improvement it must first pass through a Board of Public Improvements.

To the Board of Estimates is left almost entirely the question of franchises, the Council having in regard to such rights only the power of approval and veto. The present board has inaugurated a system of annual rentals to be paid, instead of a lump sum, by corporations enjoying public rights. A striking example was furnished this week which resulted in the present unique situation of a municipality getting the better of a railroad.

In Baltimore the street railways are controlled by the United Company. In the original franchises of two of the lines are clauses giving the city the right to purchase the roads at the expiration of every fifty years. The present company, introduced in the Council ordinances which granted seven franchises to construct switches connecting the tracks of the various branches of the system. The rights were to extend for a period of twenty-five years and a lump sum of $900 was offered in payment for the privileges. The ordinances which on the face appear extremely simple would mean much money to the company and practically prevent future competition should franchises be given to others. When the ordinances came to the Board of Estimates it was at once decided to incorporate an annual rental instead of the lump sum. In all $1,550 was to be charged annually for twenty-five years for the privileges for which the company had offered $900. In addition, the board incorporated in the franchises clauses insuring a continuance of free transfers, compelling the road to pave the streets on which the new tracks were laid, &c., and another amendment which made the franchises revert to the city without cost should it ever decide upon municipal ownership of the street railways. The result was that the United Company at once had its ordinances withdraw from the Council.

A lower tax rate is another of the Mayor's pet schemes. At his dictation the Council has reduced city salaries to an extent that caused a clamor to arise from every ward in the city against the administration, but which now has about died out, principally for the reason that Mayor Hayes won his fight in the legislative bodies of the city. This, the administration states, is only a forerunner of what is to follow, and the city will begin at once a raising of the taxable basis. At present it is ridiculously low, being but $300,000,000, while that of Boston, a city of approximately the same size, is $1,000,000,000.

A. W. HAWKS, Jr.

Co-education.

Written for THE NEW YORK TIMES

By Lillie Devereux Blake.

There lies beside me as I write a sketch which has been widely circulated as the advertisement of an encyclopedia. It represents a young woman and a young man with a large folio volume on a desk between them. The youth is in football costume, the girl wears the cap and gown of the student. She is poring over the book, while his gaze is fixed admiringly on her. It is to be hoped that this is not altogether a pictorial statement of a reality, that while the college men are devoting themselves to athletics the college women are studying. If it is, this will account for the fact that so many of the honors in all coeducational institutions are carried off by the girls. It is certainly a hint of that fidelity to work on the part of the feminine students which is proof that they are deserving of the expanded opportunities which have been lately given to them.

When it was first proposed that women should be admitted to the great universities on equal terms with men, there was a howl of disapprobation from many conservatives and a wail from several excellent physicians, who were sure that the study required from the girls at the period of adolescence would quite ruin their health. No one now remembers these dire predictions. Hundreds of rosy-cheeked and bright-eyed damsels are graduated each year from the numerous institutions which are now co-educational, and if here and there one has fallen a victim to some nervous disorder, each case can be matched by a similar instance on the part of a masculine graduate who has destroyed his constitution by overstudy.

Shortly after the University of Michigan was opened, the President, James B. Angell, in reply to some of these alarmists, wrote: "Our experience has brought us to the conclusion that a woman who is in good health on beginning her course, and who exercises a fair degree of prudence, can perform her allotted task without harm. Indeed, the regularity and pleasant excitement of the life proves conducive to health, and most women are more vigorous at their graduation than at their admission," and any quantity of similar testimony might be adduced. Not only have the girls kept their vigor, but they have successfully competed with men in every branch of study, and too often, perhaps, carried off more than their proportion of the honors. Is it possible that herein lies the real objection to the presence of women in the colleges and universities? They are eager for the advantages; the rush of women to them proves this. In California, at the Leland Stanford Junior University, the number of young women students has been restricted to 500, because, even in that State, where the men outnumber the women so much, there was a probability that before long there would be more feminine than masculine names on the roster. In this city, at a newly opened medical college, the women are in a large preponderance, and other instances might be cited. If even where there are more boys than girls the maidens carry off many of the most desirable prizes, the difficulty a young man now finds in obtaining a scholarship or any other advantage or glory from a competition with young women will be enhanced just in proportion to the number admitted. At Wesleyan College, in Connecticut, the men students have resorted to the ungallant and unjust tactics of excluding from their annual report all mention of the women, in the hope of thus driving them away.

But probably the most able-bodied hobgoblin that has been evoked to scare conservatives from the demand for equal advantages for the sexes has been the dread of possible attractions, to be followed by disastrous complications. As the Rev. Dr. Morgan Dix wrote some years ago in opposition to the proposition: "The entrance of Athene into our college halls will be inevitably followed by the advent of Aphrodite." Is this the divinity that he really feared? Was it not rather one who has no place in the Greek Pantheon, the Goddess of Liberty, the latest born of all the goddesses and the only one which is immortal?

This terror of the results of classroom association is rather funny in a land where nearly all schools are now and have always been coeducational, even in the higher departments, and yet where no one has ever thought of denouncing a village high school because young men and maidens there daily meet. Nor has the purely masculine college, with all its taboo of the more beautiful sex, availed to secure to its students immunity from flirtation. It was recently urged as a frightful scandal growing out of coeducation that at an institution of this sort a youth had been found standing on the grass outside the window of one of the buildings while a maiden sat within and talked to him! In the far-off days when I studied the Yale course with tutors at home because the stern old college was then, as now, closed to women, methinks I can remember certain moonlight nights when the students stood beneath the windows of my home and sang the sweet songs that were fashionable then. Has the refusal of equal advantages prevented the existence of "student belles" and the murmurs of college gossip? Has there not always been a mysterious attraction between the students and the denizens of the nearest "young ladies' seminary"? It is perhaps fair to maintain that there is less of dangerous glamour when girls and boys meet in the daily contact of the classroom, seeing each other's stupidities and deficiencies, than when they catch only occasional glimpses of beings who, because of their strangeness, have a peculiar fascination.

It is most unjust in the case of Columbia University here to restrict the girls to the narrow limits of Barnard and refuse the full advantages of the parent institution to them. When my great-great-grandfather, Dr. Samuel Johnson, rector of Trinity Church, founded the college it was declared in the charter to be established for the "education and instruction of youth in the liberal arts and sciences." Now, every dictionary defines "youth" as "young persons of both sexes," so that it would seem as if Columbia had been for nearly a century and a half defrauding one-half of the youth of the city of the advantages intended when a great grant of land was given for its maintenance by "the rector and inhabitants of the City of New York." One-half of these inhabitants has always been women, and surely their daughters, as well as their sons, should have had the use of the endowment on equal terms.

Anomalies and Inconsistencies of Copyright Law.

Written for THE NEW YORK TIMES

By B. LEWINSON

of the New York Bar.

THE newspaper reports of the decision of the Supreme Court of the United States promulgated on Dec. 4, 1899, in the case of Bolles vs. Outing, did not indicate the grave import of the rulings announced in the case. The matter is very much more serious than appears on the surface, and the decision only serves to emphasize the hopelessly chaotic condition in which our copyright law at present exists. My object in calling attention to some of its anomalies and inconsistencies is to show how necessary it is that the various interests involved in copyright law and protection should combine to obtain without any delay suitable and satisfactory legislation.

The case above referred to was one in which a photographer sought to recover from a magazine for an unauthorized publication of a copyrighted picture of a yacht penalties at the rate of $1 for every copy of the picture thus issued, aggregating a total of $40,000. The court decides finally that the penalties provided by statute are recoverable only to the extent of $1 for each copy of the infringement which at the time of the commencement of the action was found by the photographer to be in the possession of the magazine and available for seizure, and that no penalties can be collected for such copies as had been previously distributed and sold.

Until the trial of the Bolles case recoveries have been allowed on the theory that a publisher was liable for penalties for all copies which could be traced to his possession at any time within the period in which the statute runs, and recoveries have been sustained against newspapers upon proof of their "circulation," provided it was established that each copy of the issue contained the infringing article.

When the copyright statute was framed the enormous circulations of to-day were probably not dreamed of, and the recoveries in the earlier actions, under the more liberal construction which had been given to the statute, did not involve considerable amounts. An action brought against a daily newspaper in New York City, and tried in 1894, which under such construction involved the question of a liability of nearly a quarter of a million dollars for a reproduction of an insignificant copy of a photograph of an actress, (which case was, however, settled before going to the jury upon payment of the large sum of $5,000,) led to the enactment of the act of 1895, which imposed limits in amount for the recovery of penalties. But this did not change the rule of construction which had been theretofore applied in these cases.

The decision in Bolles vs. Outing definitively lays down a different rule of construction. The result itself in this particular case is not of so much moment; what is of the greatest importance is the fact, not yet called to general attention, that in order to reach such a result the highest court of our country has so flatly held that the copyright law in its penalty provisions is a penal one, and is to be construed with the utmost strictness against the claimant. Notwithstanding intimations to the contrary in some older cases in the Supreme Court, the trend of decision in the Circuit Courts has been heretofore in favor of the view that the entire copyright law is a remedial one; and accordingly it has very generally been construed "fairly," and plaintiffs have not been held to that strict proof which is always required in penal actions.

This is a matter which affects not only the amount of recoveries, but will seriously embarrass holders of copyrights. Thus, for instance, it is extremely doubtful whether corporations owning copyrights will hereafter be permitted to recover "penalties." (Indeed, one of the Justices of this circuit, in a case recently tried before him, announced from the bench that such was his personal view of the law, though under then existing precedents he did not feel himself authorized to so hold at first instance.) It is likewise doubtful whether penalties will be permitted to copyright owners using "trade," or corporate, names (as distinguished from their individual names) on their imprints.

In this very case just decided by the Supreme Court, that court had this question before it, and declined to pass on it for technical reasons. It is evident from the opinion of the court that it saved itself much embarrassment by this disposition of the question, because the court has heretofore held a "trade" designation to be sufficient, but would have found it embarrassing to have followed the ruling in this case, in the face of the principles enunciated in its decision on the main question. Another necessary consequence of this decision will be that courts will hold plaintiffs to a strictness of proof known only to penal actions, which will make it very difficult, if not impossible, to establish a cause of action in many cases.

Copyright owners, by reason of insistence upon penalties out of all proportion to the injury done, have themselves to blame for the intensity of the attack made upon the law which has resulted in these rulings. The courts say that, to permit recovery for copies traced to a newspaper office, would enable a plaintiff to lie by and wait until a large issue had been sent out before asserting his rights. Theoretically, that sounds plausible; but the real fact is that newspapers and magazines are practically wholly distributed and out of the publisher's hands before an infringement can be discovered at all; so that the fact, so far as newspapers and magazines are concerned, will be that they will escape practically all penalties.

In a recent case it appeared at the trial that one of the New York dailies, having arranged, as it supposed, with the proper parties for the right of publication of a song in a subsequent Sunday issue, announced days ahead its intention to make the publication. The copyright owner saw the notice, but, instead of taking steps to prevent the infringement, waited until the preceding Saturday afternoon and seized 40,000 copies of the paper, in an action to recover $40,000 penalties. But unless a newspaper or magazine will by its own announcements thus furnish proof of intended publication, copyright owners will not hereafter be able to obtain anything more than nominal sums.

It is perfectly safe to say that the Supreme Court sought an opportunity of holding this statute to be penal. It might very well have rested its decision upon the plain inferences to be drawn from the statute itself, which, in the case of works of art, provides a penalty for each copy "found in possession, sold or offered for sale," whereas, in the case of photographs, it provides the penalty only for each copy "found in possession." The legislative intent to discriminate in this is so apparent that it was not necessary to go any further.

The foregoing points to only a few of the defects of the copyright law. Its principal weakness consists of its hopeless inconsistencies, some of which it may be as well to point out. Thus, there are different remedies afforded for infringement of copyrights of books, of plays, of works of art, of music, of photographs, and of chromos, prints, or kindred productions. Authors of books get actual damages only; dramatic authors get damages, with a provision of a minimum of $100 for the first performance; infringements of paintings and sculpture are subject to a penalty of $10 per copy, and other infringements at $1 per copy.

Again, in the case of infringements subject to penalties, limits of liability exist with reference to photographs and works of art, but none with reference to music. These limits are not alike either, and vary with the subject matter of the copyrighted article. Thus, the infringement of the bust of a celebrity would subject the infringer to a penalty of $10 a copy, but not less than $250 nor more than $10,000. The infringement of the photograph of a celebrity would mean a penalty of $1 per copy, but not less than $100 nor more than $5,000; while for an infringement of a photograph of the bust the larger figures would again obtain.

Again, the infringement of some protected things constitutes a misdemeanor, but not the infringement of others. Injunctions preventing infringements may issue from the Federal court of any district in the case of dramas, but must be applied for in the district of the defendant's residence in all other cases.

Finally, to permit copyrights of books, photographs, &c., the type must be set up or the plates made within the United States. Sheet music, on the other hand, may be copyrighted here, though printed abroad.

In other words, the entire body of law, evolved in its present condition from amendments obtained from time to time by purely special interests, is a hotch-potch, discreditable to our jurisprudence, difficult of enforcement, and ineffective in its application. Constant efforts are made by special interests to procure changes, but every such effort considers only its own advantage and makes the law worse. The time has come when all the various interests involved should combine in an appeal to Congress for legislation creating a commission of experts, who shall be charged with the duty of investigation and of formulating a wise, comprehensive consistent, and adequate copyright law, embodying both local and international requirements.

Such a commission would then consider the pressing questions of the day which are being raised here and abroad, such as whether or not "news," as such, should be copyrighted, whether the duration of copyright should not extend, in any event, beyond the life of an author, and whether or not an authority analogous to the Commissioner of Patents, who shall in the first instance pass upon the question of the copyrightability of the production offered for copyright record, shall not be created. As the law stands to-day, the Librarian of Congress is required to issue a certificate of copyright upon formal compliance with certain technicalities, which secure "copyright" for the veriest trash which may be submitted to him; leaving it for a court to throw out, after the risk of litigation and contest, in case it shall be held as a matter of law thereafter that the article is neither original nor artistic.

Penalties should be wholly abolished and parties allowed actual damages only, with a provision, however, for a moderate minimum whenever actual damages cannot be established. On the other hand, every case of willful infringement should be made a misdemeanor.

No interests are so greatly affected by the question of having either a good or a bad copyright law as those of newspaper owners and of publishers. They might well organize a movement for the creation of a copyright revision board.

NOTES OF INSURANCE INTERESTS.

Withers & Mills have been appointed metropolitan agents of the Norwalk Fire Insurance Company.

M. H. Merrill has been appointed special agent of the Alliance Assurance Company of London for Utah.

C. M. Tillinghast has been appointed Boston agent of the Potomac Fire Insurance Company of Washington.

Lewis F. Runck & Co. have been appointed Cincinnati agents of the Manchester Fire Assurance Company of England.

Eli Pierce has been appointed special agent of the Williamsburg City Fire Insurance Company of New York for Utah.

A majority of the life insurance companies interested in the anti-rebate compact, which is now regarded as ineffective because of the resignations of several prominent companies, have established a form of mutual agreement among themselves, which provides for individual pledges in opposition to the practice of rebating on the part of agents.

The near approach to the end of the year has led to an unusually large number of reinsurance deals, because of the excessive fire losses of this year. Three more companies were reported yesterday to be negotiating for a partial reinsurance of their outstanding business, in order to increase the amount of surplus in the annual statements to be made to the various State Insurance Departments next month.

Local managers of fire insurance companies doing business in Trenton, N. J., have been advised by their Trenton agents that a difficult situation, which may result in the dissolution of the local rating compact and the inauguration of an open rate fight, has been developed within the last few days, because of the inability of the compact management to collect a fine imposed for a violation of rates. Several strong companies are represented in the agency which was fined, and their attitude in the controversy has not yet been revealed.

The insurance on the property of the Knappman-Whiting Company, at Carteret, N. J., which was considerably damaged by fire Friday night, was distributed as follows: Eastern Counties, $5,000; Western of Toronto, $3,900; Phoenix of Hartford, $2,600; National of Ireland, $2,500; Prussian National, $2,500; Commercial Lloyds, $2,500; Eureka Fire and Marine and Security of Cincinnati, (joint policy,) $2,500; Minneapolis Fire and Marine, $1,800; Indiana, $1,500; Victoria-Montreal, $1,500; Philadelphia Underwriters', $1,300; Vernon Insurance and Trust Company, $1,300; Merchants' of New York, $1,125. Miller & Maltbie will adjust the loss.

THE FINANCIAL SITUATION

Wall Street approaches a forlorn Christmas. A year of buoyant activity, of confidence begotten of evidences indisputable that great good times have come to the country, is offset, unsettled, and made to look insignificant by disturbance extraordinary from whatsoever standpoint it may be viewed. Liquidation has run tremendous lengths, accumulated gains have been extinguished, losses have intruded wherever profits were, and of the Christmas feast Wall Street has to make a fast.

Not a single bad business development is recorded. Prosperity is as tangible as for months past it has been; industrial and commercial activity extends daily, and not only capital but labor is profiting in record-breaking ways. Wall Street has been in the throe of a scare. We have had ghost dance markets.

They who affect ability to explain everything quote a wide range of reasons for distresses overtaking the Stock Exchange. The craziness of trust stock exploitations; a National financial system, unwieldy, cramped, and cramping; foreign war; suspension of South Africa's gold output; European financial exigencies—so runs a list interestingly long; and it may be that each of these factors has to some extent contributed to influences precipitating Wall Street's security market collapse. But what is above everything else plain, even in the recitation of disturbing factors, and even when proclaimed through the gloomiest of bear oracles, is that not one theory proceeds without unqualified admission that in so far as business conditions and actual business results are concerned this country has every reason not only for gratification but for enthusiasm. Not in limited business departments nor in a few parts of the country do evidences of good times show; attestation is everywhere; and week by week and month by month throughout the year it has been a record growing continually more and more inspiriting.

What above everything else has been directly effective in bringing about recent sensational recessions in market values has been the fact that too many people have had stocks, that people have had too many stocks. Evidences of National prosperity have been so clear, so indisputable, that great wonder it would have been, indeed, had there existed hesitation upon the part of either capitalists or small traders; and the record as misfortune discloses it is that not only the little fellows in Wall Street, but mighty men in finance, were caught overloaded. Stringent money market conditions restricted borrowing opportunities. It was found of a sudden that there was no recourse except to sell lines of securities in the open market. Then when holders undertook liquidation they were met with competitive selling orders from hosts of others similarly situated; and naturally enough bear operators of consequence, alertly awake for discomforting signs, helped the selling along. It is no great step from such a situation to panicky conditions. Aside from what may or may not have been provocative elements in the situation, the immediate influence in bringing about the market's break was that stocks were overbought, that hope had been too much capitalized, that loads were too heavy to carry. In no way at all entered the question as to whether stocks were selling at their value or not. Other reasons were insignificant beside the crowding fact that liquidation was enforced—that holders of stocks were not strong enough to hold them.

Imposition of dreadful sacrifices resulted, not unnaturally, in the creation of nervousness; and this phase of the situation made way for other influences calculated to damage market values. Wall Street, indeed, came not long ago to a tension point where apprehension was so keen that any circulating tale could get attention, provided only it had gruesome features; and many foolish fables commanded consideration in quarters where under ordinary conditions they would have been dismissed contemptuously. One such instance developed touching the affairs of the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company, an incident made notable by the fact that they who are responsible for the good name of that property have issued public notice that they will pay a vast sum of money for evidence wherewith to locate the originator or culpable circulator of statements that a receivership was impending. This action is worthy.

Stock jobbery canards have not in all past Wall Street history been so flagrant as in recent performances. In so far as the Brooklyn Rapid Transit Company is concerned, people who have best opportunity for knowledge of its affairs are the firmest believers in its present financial safety and in its earning capacity for the future. There really can be no reason why the investing public should not know precisely what are all the facts, know them even as they are permitted to know what are facts in the affairs of the New York Central Railroad, whose controlling financiers, by the bye, are now become large owners of Brooklyn Rapid Transit securities.

Blind pool business is not new. Through years the Sugar Trust, for example, with over $70,000,000 of securities outstanding, has with effrontery sneered at requests for knowledge of what is really represented by the property that stock stands for; the Tobacco Trust, with tens on tens of millions of dollars more of issued "securities"; the Whisky Trust in its kaleidoscopic reorganizations, and a score of other trusts have each and all been contemptuous of what is due to security owners. Perhaps purchasers of such stocks are entitled to little sympathy. They buy with knowledge that they can know nothing; they become willing partners in a blind pool game.

But there is a public interest beyond that of gamblers calling themselves investors and who, with notice, take the extraordinary risks involved in trust mysteries. It is especially unfortunate that so large a part is played by such properties on the New York Stock Exchange that when embarrassment approaches them impositions are inflicted elsewhere; for Sugar does not break, nor Tobacco go to pieces, nor Whisky Trust get under new suspicions, without thus opening opportunities for attacks upon superior properties. On this account alone the New York Stock Exchange owes an obligation to itself, to its members, to the customers of its members, owes it to the public—owes it to plain, ordinary decency. All this mystery business, blind-pool bunkoism, can be stopped at the pleasure of the Governors of the New York Stock Exchange. And the only Stock Exchange protest or defense against the wholesome policy needed is that brokerage commissions might be interfered with. Not quite so blunt is the statement of excuse perhaps; but euphony is not the issue; facts are what count. Need exists for a manhood in Stock Exchange authority which can demand and command straightforward policies.

Wall Street had something of an object lesson yesterday of how readily an oversold market can rally. Under the leadership of buying for foreign account almost the entire Stock Exchange list jumped up from two to half a dozen points. A variety of reasons were quoted by way of explanation of the better market values, including representations that at a conference of important banking interests arrangements had been completed whereby money market stress would be relieved. Philanthropy in the Stock Exchange district seldom becomes a surfeit, however, and the good news of bankers standing ready to help out every injured account on the Stock Exchange may be an optimistic picture somewhat overdrawn. Security market readjustment will probably come about in more gradual ways than buoyant prophets were yesterday promising; but certainly what is clear beyond dispute is that securities have passed pretty generally out of the hands of weak-margined traders and are lodged with interests amply able to protect their commitments—interests able, moreover, to exert influence upon security market sentiment; and who in accumulating stocks have acted with exceptional opportunities for knowledge of what business conditions really are. They buy and invest not because they guess, but because they know.

TAXATION OF BANKS AND TRUST COMPANIES.

From a Special Contributor.

The substantial grievance of banks in this State, so far as they are in competition with trust companies, lies in the difference in the taxation of the two classes of institutions. There are trust companies, mostly those recently organized, which encroach upon the banking field by inviting general mercantile deposits and dealing in commercial paper, but many believe that this will rectify itself. Few are ready to insist upon requiring trust companies to keep a definite percentage of deposits as a reserve in their own vaults, which would withdraw so much more capital from active use instead of leaving it as now in the keeping of banks, which really keep reserves for themselves and for the trust companies, too.

While the difference in taxation is something real and substantial, it is not generally very clearly understood. A statement put out by the State Bankers' Association represents that in the year 1897, for which its latest statistics were collected, the banks, with a total of $198,388,635 in capital, surplus, and undivided profits, paid a tax of $3,558,451.64, or more than 1¾ per cent., while the trust from Chicago that the Directors had formally decided after the first of the year to begin paying quarterly dividends of 2 per cent.

GOOD TIMES IN THE WEST.

J. F. Murphy of Superior, Wis., one of the representative business men of the West, has this to say of Western conditions:

"In my opinion, we have not had as good times in the West since 1892 as we are having now. Everybody is prosperous and active—farmers, manufacturers, merchants, and artisans.

"In Superior we are near the Messaba and the Vermilion iron ranges, and, naturally, we see striking evidence of the pronounced activity in the iron business. Much ore is being mined—and of a good quality. The Vermilion ore, hard hematite, runs from 65 to 70 per cent., while the soft ore in the Messaba range runs from 52 to 60 per cent.

"The prosperity in iron and steel has led to a project for the erection of a mammoth steel plant in Superior, to include the plant of the West Superior Iron and Steel Company, which has been in disuse since 1892. Options have also been obtained on the Duluth Car Works and blast furnaces.

"As for money in the West, it is easy and plentiful—so plentiful, in fact, that the banks in Duluth, St. Paul, and Minneapolis have been loaning money in New York."

EARNINGS GROW LARGER.

Norfolk and Western preferred rallied nearly 2 points yesterday on the announcement that the earnings for the present month are likely to show the biggest gain of any month this year. There was also renewed talk of a dividend on the common stock.

PROSPERITY IN VERMONT.

Robert Roberts, Mayor of Burlington, Vt., is a firm believer in the present prosperity of the country. He says:

"We are having good times in Vermont, and from what I can understand all other States are enjoying a very substantial prosperity. In Burlington the local trade is better than it has been in years. In the marble and granite industries, which are the principal ones in our State, the condition of things is very satisfactory, and everybody seems to be thriving. Lumbermen and manufacturers of lumber are also thriving, while our cotton mills are running full time.

"The banks have plenty of money, and it is an easy matter for legitimate business interests to get all they want at reasonable rates."

MORE DIVIDEND TALK.

Inside interests were buyers of Union Pacific stocks yesterday on fresh reports that a dividend on the common stock is near at hand. It is understood the annual report of the company will be given out for publication on Wednesday.

GREAT NORTHERN'S GAIN.

The greatest gain of any stock for the day yesterday was made by Great Northern, which appreciated eight points on sales of less than 900 shares. This is believed to be directly due to the intimation from official sources, following President Hill's visit, that substantial and extra privileges are in store for the stockholders of the company early in the coming year.

HOW TOBACCO FARED.

The strength of the tobacco stocks was a feature of yesterday's market. American Tobacco gaining 3¼ points, Continental common 2½, and Continental preferred 1¾. It is said that not a little of the buying in all of these stocks has lately been for investment purposes.

SUBSTANTIAL GAINS.

The only railroad earnings statement of consequence put out yesterday was that of the Northern Pacific, which showed earnings in the second week of December of $497,171, a gain over the same week last year of $17,100. Since July 1 the earnings have been $15,871,900 and the increase $1,445,300.

The good showing had a favorable influence on the stocks of the company, the common stock advancing 1½ points and the preferred 1¼.

THE WHISKY TRUST'S BOOKS.

Coincident with the announcement in Wall Street that a committee of security holders were to inquire into the affairs of the Distillery Company of America—the Whisky Trust—(President Rice saying officially that he welcomed such an inquiry) application was made in court before Justice Gaynor, in Brooklyn, yesterday for an order giving stockholders of the old American Spirits Company power to examine the books of the Distilling Company of America. James C. Church and Leopold Wallach appear as counsel for the applicant, Bert Reiss, Chairman of the American Spirits Security Holders' Committee. On motion of Messrs. Guggenheimer, Untermyer & Marshall, attorneys for the company, the hearing was adjourned till next Wednesday.

WORST IS OVER.

Henry Clews, in his letter of yesterday, reviewing the situation, says:

"If there are no more failures in the next two or three days, I think the bear campaign will be about over, because the violent liquidation during the last week has about exhausted itself. What weak spots have come to the surface have been entirely with people who have been holders of industrial securities and have found it difficult to obtain money thereon. Those who hold good railroad stock have nothing to fear, because the prosperity of all transportation companies is phenomenal at the present time, and likely to continue all through the coming year, thus insuring a continuation of their dividend-earning capacity. The industrials for speculative operations or as collateral for loans are completely out of fashion, consequently operators in all Street will be apt hereafter to give their attention almost exclusively to railroad properties, which will give them a better backing and greater activity than they had when the interests were divided between railroads and industrials. The best evidence of a favorable turn in the market is that buying orders for cash commenced to-day and were quite large, evidently induced by the lower grade of values. This buying will oring in considerable money from those parts of the country where the orders come from. I am quite of the opinion, therefore, that the worst is now over, and that breaks hereafter will be followed by quick rallies, in which event the basis for an improved market will soon be established."

STERLING EXCHANGE AND MONEY

Call loan money rates were yesterday at 4 per cent., nominal. The last quotations for demand sterling exchange were $4.87¼ @$4.87½. C. Schumacher & Co., in their weekly foreign exchange review of yesterday, said:

The week was certainly the worst we have seen here since the Baring panic of ten years ago. Last Monday afternoon and Tuesday morning exchange was unsalable at any price. It was Tuesday afternoon before our banks and bankers could be moved to part with a little of their money to buy some exchange. Since then, although the market continues unsettled and irregular, sales could be effected again without much difficulty. Concessions, of course, had to be made to obtain cash.

With money last Monday at 30@186 per cent., Tuesday 20@30 per cent., Wednesday 8@10 per cent., and Thursday 6@8 per cent., the bankers' reluctance to part with their money for the purpose of buying exchange was quite natural. Since the timely action of the Government in coming to our aid a better state of affairs has taken the place of the demoralization which existed Monday and Tuesday. The relief measures taken by the Government are indeed quite liberal, and ought to bridge us over any further troubles which may come to us during the next few months.

Unfortunately Europe, particularly England, being about as hard up as we were before the relief, will need all the money that we can spare, and can be trusted to send back as many of our stocks and bonds as we can swallow. In England the private discount is far above the bank rate. London banks and bankers, moreover, whose business consists of discounting sixty and ninety day bills such as our shippers of merchandise draw from here, now accept but very small amounts of the best for discount by every steamer, and would in fact prefer to be spared altogether if possible. Under these circumstances the paper on the London branches of Continental banks is particularly depressed and does not bring within ¼@⅜ per pound sterling of English bank acceptances, while drafts on the Continent are hard to sell at differences of 1@1½ per pound sterling.

The week's decline in exchange, though insignificant on demand sterling and cables, amounts to about ⅜c. per pound sterling on sixty-day sterling, ⅜@½ per cent. on francs, and ¼@5-16 per cent. on reichsmarks, and Dutch guilders.

WHEAT MARKET SITUATION.

The wheat market last week was erratic and closed at Chicago yesterday—the New York Produce Exchange was closed—with quotations a shade under those of Dec. 16. The close in both markets on Friday was slightly in advance of that of Dec. 16. Corn during the week lost its aggressiveness and did not support the chief cereal. During the week, owing to a better European tone, there were brisk advances on Monday and again on Thursday, but there were decided reactions on the following days, showing lack of support and liquidation. Factors for the long and short interests were lacking except on the occasions mentioned. A "hold-your-wheat" disposition has been observed in the West, but a very slight advance would bring the grain out, as the railroad congestion has been relieved. There is a fair demand for wheat and the Russian and Argentine shipments have lessened, but not to an important degree. The American markets have been under local holiday influences and Stock Exchange demoralization, and also influenced by the English holiday season. In New York yesterday the Produce Exchange was closed. The Grain Exchange was closed at Liverpool. Little anxiety prevails in regard to the growing American crop. In the Winter wheat belt it is nearly all under the snow in favorable condition, and the main source of inquietude is the Hessian fly, which may develop when the plant starts again. The interior demand for maize for feeding is large and accounts for the small accumulation at primary points. With a better demand for flour wheat and coarse grains should, in the opinion of the best-informed dealers, make an upward move and hold it firmly.

In their Chicago grain letter of yesterday, Price, McCormick & Co. said:

WHEAT—The wheat market has held very stubborn throughout the week, and displays a firm undertone, which is quite noticeable in view of the nervous and demoralized stock market and failures. There was very little in the way of news to affect prices, although the strength of foreign markets offsets reports of increased acreage, and presents normal conditions of our Winter wheat crop. Primary receipts are light, and undoubtedly we have seen our heavy receipts on this crop. Clearances are moderate, but there still exists a fair demand for export right along. That the grain markets are on a healthy basis is conclusively shown by their action and firmness in the face of the feeling of panic which dominates the Stock Exchanges. The speculative situation for wheat is not a weak one, as the steadiness of the market is mistaken by many as a sign of weakness. This leades to rather indiscriminate selling on the breaks, so that there is an outstanding short interest, which will not stand much punishment in the market continually. It is well to remember that the season has been an open Winter so far, and that we may soon work into crop shares with present conditions.

CORN.—The corn market has been a fractional affair. Pit conditions and the attitude of local operators have been the price makers. The general trade has been light. The market certainly has been a firm one, and this may be due to the fact that receipts have not come up to expectations of the bears. There continues to be a fair cash demand, while feeders in the West are good competitors with shippers for the new crop that is moving.

Schwartz, Dupee & Co.'s Chicago letter of yesterday said:

There was very little doing in wheat. Local traders were disposed to even up. There were no foreign advices, and statistical returns were incomplete owing to it's being holiday in most of the other markets. The world's shipments will be about 5,000,000 bushels, and there should be a liberal decrease afloat. The visible supply will probably increase slightly.

The absence of foreign markets, the lack of any of the usual daily statistics, and the fact that shipping business was out of question with Liverpool and New York closed kept corn prices at a standstill. Western offerings continue small. The feeding demand is large, and the business profitable. Corn people here are getting around to the view that the country will not be a seller of corn except on an advancing market. To-day's movement is 271; the estimate for Tuesday 300. Stocks here this week will increase about 600,000 bushels. It is a fact that the shipping demand from here keeps slow.

MORALS OF WALL STREET.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

The opinions expressed by "X Ray" in his letter are probably such as are held by a large number of traders in the Street, and the ideas which seem to prevail are that every dealer in securities is a rogue who lies in wait to rob every investor who comes under his influence. The men in the Street and on the floor of the Exchange dealing in securities only become rich as their securities enhance in value. The basis of enhancement in values lies first in a general condition of prosperity, in the increased earnings of the different corporations, and in public confidence in existing conditions of government and finance.

We still have prosperity and peace. The corporations whose securities are termed footballs are earning more money than they did last year, and several leading and notably conservative companies have increased their dividends, but public confidence has been lost, and our financial system is strained, and these two last factors are to my mind responsible for the losses in the Street. These two factors are the results of circumstances which had no reason to exist, and I attribute to Theodore Roosevelt and William McKinley the entire blame for their being present to-day.

The consolidation and improvement of the various street car lines in this city and Brooklyn were the work of master minds, accompanied by the taking of enormous responsibilities by individuals and firms, and the results to the public have been such that no city in America or in the world has such street transportation facilities, or as cheap or comfortable.

When, as a result of these combinations and improvements, it was found that expenses had diminished, and that the public patronized them more freely, and net earnings were increasing and likely to increase, it was a natural result that if left in the enjoyment of the fruits of their labor the securities would enhance in price, and at this point Mr. Roosevelt came in and forced a Legislature to pass a Franchise Tax bill designed to take away from the people who had made these properties and franchises worth something a large percentage of their profits. Do you wonder that a lack of confidence was a result, and that people who had borne the heat and labor of the fight thought it time to get out?

The manufacturers of the country in reaching out for other fields to trade in found that their competition for raw material and expensive management made their prices too high, and only by consolidation of interests could desired results be attained. The meanest demagogue in the land cannot say that the price of labor has been reduced, or that any one has suffered except a few individuals or firms who were left out of the combinations, and who have availed themselves of their right to kick, nor can any reasonable person claim that these combinations have advanced prices beyond their proper place, but it afforded Mr. Bryan and Mr. Croker something to raise an issue on, an issue about as feeble as free silver or free trade ever was, but our President in his annual message to Congress thought it was his duty as a politician (certainly it was not the act of a statesman) to throw a big brick at the consolidated companies for political reasons, and this in the face of the fact that his Attorney General, if rumor is to be credited, had advised him that unless the Constitution was altered or amended these incorporated companies had a legal right to exist, and no Democratic or other party could legally molest them. Do you wonder again that public confidence was hurt and that holders of industrial securities became anxious and thought perhaps it was better to stand to one side for a while?

The United States Treasury, while the banks are being depleted, is bursting to overflow with gold drained daily and weekly and monthly out of the commercial classes, by tariff, war tax, excise, &c. For what purpose? To carry out public improvements which ought to be borne by the places benefited, to pay a lavish and absurdly extravagant system of pensions, and to carry on a war which many of our wisest and most patriotic citizens think should never have been begun, but all these sources of expenditure are insufficient to get this money back into circulation. It remains in the Treasury, a constant temptation to extravagance on the part of Congress, and while three hundred millions are lying idle in the vaults we in the Street are paying at the rate of 100 per cent. for money to carry the securities dumped upon us from all over the country by timid holders.

Only a comparatively few can make money on a bear market, while with the reverse every holder of securities reaps a benefit. Values have shrunk this past year hundreds of millions for no good reason, but it is certain that only a few people have derived advantage from the shrinkage. Public confidence is public credit, and if this is disturbed farewell to prosperity. If railroads cannot sell their securities except at panic prices the iron and steel trades suffer, and with their suffering hosts of others suffer. The morals of Wall Street may be assailed from many points of view. The sensible man only buys what he thinks is value for his cash. If discounting an expected increase in dividends he is disappointed in results, he has only himself to thank. There is only one weak spot in Wall Street to my mind, and that is the failure of the Stock Exchange to compel corporations to publish full and explicit statements of their affairs every three months.

Cincinnati—Between banks, 25c discount; over counter, 50c premium.

THE LONDON MARKET.

LONDON, Dec. 23.—The movement in American securities was steadily upward from the start to the close to-day, with Louisville and Erie first preferred the prominent features. The final tone was firm.

Consols for money and the account, 98⅝; Canadian, 90¾; Erie, 10¾; Erie first preferred, 31¼; Illinois Central, 111; Union Pacific preferred, 73; St. Paul, 118; New York Central, 130½; Pennsylvania, 66; Reading, 8⅜; Northern Pacific preferred, 73¼; Atchison, 18½; Louisville, 77; Grand Trunk, 6⅝; Anaconda, 7⅛.

Bar silver quiet at 26 15-16d per ounce. Money, 4½ per cent. Rate of discount in the open market for short and three months' bills, 6⅞ per cent.

Spanish fours closed at 63¾.

The amount of bullion taken into the Bank of England on balance to-day was £127,000.

Gold premiums are quoted as follows: Buenos Ayres, 130.20; Madrid, 27.95; Lisbon, 43; Rome, 7.17½.

In Continental Centres.

PARIS, Dec. 23.—Business on the Bourse to-day was very cheerful owing to better London advices and continued to improve, repurchases being effected on the satisfactory progress of the London settlement. The market closed firm. Throughout international shares advanced considerably. There were large purchases of Kafirs.

Three per cent. rentes, 99f 22½c for the account. Exchange on London, 25f 38c for checks.

Spanish fours closed at 65.67½.

BERLIN, Dec. 23.—A more cheerful feeling prevailed on the Boerse to-day, due, to some extent, to bear coverings and more satisfactory advices from the Western Bourses.

Exchange on London, 20 marks 58 pennigs for checks. Private rate of discount, 6⅛ per cent.

FRANKFORT, Dec. 23.—On the Boerse to-day business was fairly active, owing to encouraging advices from the foreign Bourses. Prices hardened and the market closed firm.

BOSTON STOCK MARKET.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Dec. 23.—Trading was fairly well distributed during the two hours of business to-day, but as it was still almost wholly on a cash basis, the transactions did not reach large proportions. The Copper shares, as a class, showed slight gains. Montana touched 260, a lift of 5 points over Friday's closing, but just at the end it fell back to 258. Butte was up nearly 3 points, to 43; Amalgamated sold as high as 81, but fell off to 80; Arcadian was quoted at 22; Centennial touched 17; Utah sold at 23 and 24, and Parrot pushed up from 35½ to 36⅛. While there is still much uncertainty hanging over the Copper shares situation, because of the recent troubles, there is, none the less, a growing belief among conservative people that the better class of these securities are now an exceptionally good purchase. The buying certainly for the last few days has been of a most excellent character, and much of it was for investment account.

In the general market, Bell Telephone sold as high as 341, United States Oil was up to 24, but closed a point under that; New England Gas and Coke was firm at 19, Boston Elevated sold at 98 and 98¼, Erie Telephone at 100 and 101, and American Zinc gained a point, to 10. The closing was quiet but firm.

The week closes with a decidedly better tone in the money market. As a rule, brokers have placed themselves in a very strong position, and are not in need of accommodations. Money on call is still quoted at from 6 to 7 per cent., and time money is quiet. The banks are not seeking new loans, but are taking good care of their customers. Nothing lower than 6 per cent. for all dates is quoted. There is not a large demand for commercial paper, best names being quoted at 6@6½ per cent.

PHILADELPHIA PRICES.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 23.—There was marked improvement in the local speculative situation to-day. Confidence has been partly restored, and it was found at the opening to-day that large buying orders were distributed through the market. The result was a general advance. Pennsylvania Steel rose 3, to 7; the preferred 5½, to 91½. United Gas, 5, to 140; Asphalt, 1, to 12; Electric Storage Battery, 2, to 77 bid; Marsden, 1½, to 10½; Welsbach Light, 2, to 37; Cambria Steel, ¾, to 19; Philadelphia Traction, 1, to 94; Union Traction, 1⅝, to 35⅜, and Tidewater Steel, ⅞, to 11⅞. The extreme gains were not held to the close, owing to late realizing sales, but most stocks left off with substantial net gains.

CHICAGO QUOTATIONS.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Dec. 23.—The local market followed the lead of Wall Street. With few exceptions values went to a considerably higher level than was seen yesterday. The trading was principally in Biscuit common and the Linseed stocks. Biscuit common advanced to 34½ and closed at 34. Linseed common was in good demand around 12, and the preferred was well held above 52; in the case of Diamond Match there was a sharp recovery on a very small amount of business. The stock moved up to 123, against a close last night of 117, and even at the higher level offerings appeared to be light. The traction stocks all showed some improvement, but the trading in them was small. Closing prices:

OUTSIDE SECURITIES.

In yesterday's market for outside securities only a few issues attracted any attention, while the majority were not traded in at all. Better demand for stocks appeared in some quarters, and several net gains of importance were recorded. Liquidation that went on steadily during most of the week was noticeable yesterday to only a small extent, and in the absence of urgent selling, buyers became more confident and offered higher prices for stocks. The market was quiet during the whole of the short session, and a fortunate respite was had from the rather anxious selling that was the principal feature of the week's trading.

NEW AMSTERDAM GAS was made particularly prominent by an advance of nearly 4 points in the common stock. Statements were made to the effect that after Jan. 1 all the local gas companies will go back to the legal rate for gas, and the bids made for supplying the city were pointed to as indicating that the companies had come to an agreement in regard to rates. Better feeling in regard to the situation was reflected also in the New Amsterdam bonds, which advanced from 87 to 89, and closing at 89 bid. Sales of the preferred stock were made at 40 and at 41, and the fact that this issue did not respond to the higher prices recorded in the common stock was attributed to forced selling of that issue through liquidation of some weak accounts. In none of the issues was the trading large, the advance in the common stock being made on sales of not more than 200 or 300 shares.

AMALGAMATED COPPER remained firm, good demand for the stock advancing the price to 81. It closed at 80½ bid, a net gain of half a point. As has been the case on many days recently, Amalgamated Copper was the most active issue. Less inclination on the part of traders to sell the stock appeared, more or less confidence having been brought about by the firmness which the stock has shown recently, notwithstanding the very unfavorable conditions prevailing in the general market. It would seem that this strength was the result of a special effort on the part of insiders to maintain the price of Amalgamated, for in view of the very heavy losses suffered by a majority of the copper stocks, no other explanation is at hand.

DISTILLING OF AMERICA common sold up to 6¾, and closed unchanged at 6 bid. In the preferred stock sales were made as high as 22, an advance of 2 points, but later the bid for the stock fell off considerably, and closing figures showed a net gain of only a quarter of a point. Trading in the two issues amounted to probably not more than 1,500 shares.

NATIONAL TUBE was notably strong at the close, and on light transactions the common stock made a net gain of 2 points and the preferred stock of 1 point.

ELECTRIC VEHICLE common sold at 49, an advance of 4 points over Friday's closing bid. As far as reported, only 100 shares of the stock changed hands.

CHICAGO AND ALTON subscriptions were offered down several points, and little demand for them dveloped. Best bid at the close was 98¼, a considerable falling off from recent figures.

OTIS ELEVATOR common made a substantial net gain, closing at 21 bid. As far as reported, there was no trading either in this issue or in the preferred stock.

FOR LONDON SETTLING DAY.

Great Financial Houses Combine to Prevent Large Failures.

LONDON, Dec. 23.—It is learned that the great financial houses in London have combined and furnished sufficient money to prevent large failures on settling day, Dec. 28, though the small fry may suffer. Unless this action had been taken several well-known houses, not of the first importance, but still of large proportions, would, it is said, have to go under.

This concerted precaution has to some extent restored confidence, but the market is still panicky, many people believing that the most serious crisis has not yet been reached.

The Christmas Rose.

Unto the cradle of the Wondrous Child
Heaven brought its star, and man his gold and myrrh;
But Nature brings each year a living gift
To halo the divine event—a star
Of earth, that once came from the East, and sheds
Its silver radiance round our common homes.
It comes, like Him whose birth it celebrates,
To cheer the Winter of the world, and make
The very snow to blossom into life.
When earth has reached its darkest hour, this gleam
Of coming dawn appears. We seem to see
The snowdrop's mystic presence on the lawn;
The crocus kindle where its light went out;
The copse grow dense with purple haze of buds;
And willows deck their wands with silken plumes.
Long mute, the birds, whene'er they see this sign,
Take heart to twitter; and the sunbeams pale
Grow warmer as they shine upon its flowers;
And where it breathes its subtle fragrance round,
The very air seems conscious of the Spring.
Last child of the old year, first of the new—
Ghost of the past, scul of the future rose—
It links the seasons with its silver clasp,
And blends our memories and hopes in one.
In this pale herald of the flowery year,
Are sketched the types of lily and of rose,
Which afterward, from its fair side in death,
Are separated to make the seasons gay.
From roots of ebon darkness, through the mold,
Spring up the pure white blossoms, one by one;
Like human heart, whose roots are dark with woe,
And yet produce the brightest flowers of heaven.
Its seeming petals—green leaves glorified—
Are moonlike made, through the December gloom,
To light dim insects to their honeyed task,
And so fulfill the higher ends of life.
At first, they come up pale, and blanched with cold,
But as the days grow long, a warmer hue,
Like that which deepens in the Summer rose,
Or tips the daisy's frill, creeps over them;
As if they blushed, in a white, flowerless world,
To find themselves the only blooming things.
Unchanged they last until the seed is ripe,
In which the single life dies for the race.
And then, their purpose served, they darken down
Into the dusky green of common leaves.
Transfiguration strange! A lowly sign
Of Him, whose robe and face shone whiter far
Than Hermon's crest, while of his death he talked!
That which exalts the flower above its wont,
Ennobles everything. The priestly dress
Of beauty and of glory clothes each life,
That yields itself a sacrifice to love.
—HUGH MACMILLAN in Macmillan's Magazine.

Why Women Want the Terns Killed.

From Bird Lore.

As a result of causes too mysterious for the mind of man to comprehend, fashion claimed the terns for her own.

Up and down the coast word went forth, that sea swallows, or "Summer gulls," were worth ten cents each, and the milliner's agent was there to confirm the report.

It was in June when the baymen were idle and, unrestrained by law, they hastened to the beaches in keen competition to destroy the birds which were nesting there.

Never, in this country, at least, has there been such a slaughter of birds. A Cobb's Island, Virginia, bayman, whose conscience, even at this late date, urged him to a confession of shame for his part in the proceedings, told me recently that in a single day of that memorable season 1,400 terns were killed on Cobb's Island alone, and 40,000 are said to have been there shot during the summer. The destruction at other favorable places was proportionately great.

Two seasons of this work were sufficient to sweep the terns from all their more accessible resorts, the only survivors being residents of a few uninhabited islands.

What will be the result? Is there no appeal from fashion's decree? Woman alone can answer these questions, and the case is so clear she cannot shirk the responsibility of replying.

Aigrettes are decorative, quills difficult to identify, neither bespeak death, and ignorance may lead the most humane woman into wearing either. But with the tern no such excuse exists, and the woman who places its always disgustingly mutilated body on her bonnet does so in deliberate defiance of the laws of humanity and good taste.

Origin of the Plague in Oporto.

From The Nineteenth Century.

The origin of the outbreak in Oporto has naturally been the subject of much discussion, but it remains purely a matter of speculation. Introduction has not been traced. At first it was hastily put down to an infected cargo brought in a ship from India, but on investigation the story melts away. I have been unable to fix that cargo, which has been variously described as rice, Indian corn, and hemp. Whatever it is supposed to have been, however, it did not come direct from India, but must have lain, according to the Portuguese regulations, for three months in London or some other port, whence it was transhipped. Now the evidence is very strong against the possibility of conveying plague by cargo, and in proof thereof we have the fact that many thousands of cargoes have been brought direct from infected Eastern ports to various European ports during the last six years, but in no single instance has any man engaged in the handling of such cargoes caught the disease. Consider the risks, if conveyance by cargo is possible; the chances of some one being attacked must be numbered by hundreds of thousands. But it has not happened, and, therefore, the chances against its happening must be equally great. Yet we are asked to believe that this million to one chance has been brought off not by a cargo direct from an infected port, but by one that has been previously handled elsewhere with impunity. The theory of rats is still more untenable, because it is particularly difficult for them to get ashore at Oporto, where there are no docks or quays. The ships are moored out in the river, and rats would have to drop into a lighter or climb along a rope to get ashore. It is just possible but very unlikely; and these same rats, like the cargo, must have passed over other ports where they can easily get ashore and have reserved their favors for the one port where it is most difficult for them to do so.

In short, it is impossible to accept the theory of introduction by sea in the absence of any proof and in face of the fact that Oporto has no direct and very little indirect communication with infected ports, while numerous other places having a vast direct communication have escaped altogether. I find it much easier to believe that some soldier from Goa or Southeast Africa or some sailor from an infected port may have brought the infection in with him unperceived by way of Lisbon or elsewhere. I have heard a rumor of an illness characterized by glandular swellings having been prevalent in a Portuguese regiment some time before, and I understand that its author is a medical man who on seeing cases in Oporto pronounced the two diseases identical. There may not be much in the fact, but it is the most promising clue I have heard of.

The Next Conclave.

From The Spectator.

It is most improbable, next to impossible, that a non-Italian Cardinal should be elected. Not only is the majority in the Conclave composed of Italians born, the totals being thirty-five to twenty-six, but there are grave reasons, almost overwhelming reasons, why no one who is not of that nation should be elected. The old reason that the Church is centralized in Rome, and that the congregations or committees which govern it would feel themselves out of touch with a foreign Pope, is still operative, and rather stronger than weaker because the new dogma has compelled them all to exalt their chief's spiritual rights. Infallibility cannot be intrusted to a barbarian. International enmities have become more bitter, and no German or Englishman could be elected because Frenchmen would believe him hostile, while the choice of a Frenchman would rouse suspicion in all who think in German, or possibly in Magyar. There are but two Slav Cardinals, Leolochowski and Missia, and, though the former would be a worthy candidate, he would be disliked both in Russia and Germany, as sure to keep up the sentiment, partly religious and partly national, which prevents Poles from being politically forgotten.

An American Cardinal might no doubt be elected without exciting much international feeling—though Spanish-America, it must be remembered, is a great division of the Catholic world, and both detests and dreads the North American—but the election of Cardinal Gibbons would seem to the congregations a revolutionary proceeding, and one, moreover, forbidden by the grand obstacle of all. It would be fatal to the last chance of the restoration of the temporal power.

A Newspaper with Individuality.

From The Cornhill.

Let it be remembered that a newspaper is not a beneficent institution, endowed like a hospital or school by some philanthropist. It is purely a commercial undertaking. It must pay its way or cease to exist, just like a drapery establishment. The original function of a newspaper was to purvey news. It depended for its revenue solely on its sale. Nowadays, advertisements form the backbone of a newspaper, and I am afraid news is published only that advertisements might be obtained. Leading articles are undoubtedly of less importance to the commercial success of a newspaper than advertisements, and, indeed, than even the supply of news. Yet it is by its leading articles that the position and weight of every newspaper in public affairs are determined. It will be found that whatever influence a newspaper exercises in politics, for instance, is due not to its supply of news, not to its circulation, not to its display of advertisements, but to the prestige it has won by the sagacity, the force, the conviction with which it expresses its opinions in its leading columns, and which has given it an individuality and a personality all its own.

Poteen.

From Chambers's Journal.

This wild west of Ireland is the natural home of "poteen" or illicit whisky. This is because the loneliness and remoteness of the spots chosen for making it, almost inaccessible through the mountains and bogs save to those who know something about the country, are all in favor of the smugglers escaping detection; while its network of mountain lakes and small running streams affords the necessary cold water for condensing the distilled fumes into spirit during the cooling process. The report of the Commissioners of Inland Revenue for 1896 shows that the number of detections of illicit distillation was 1,309—5 in England, 6 in Scotland, and 1,388 in Ireland.

Dear beyond any "Parliament whisky"—by which expression he denotes that sort more usually met with by my gentle reader; that sort, in fine, which has paid the tax imposed by the brutal Saxon Government—is this fiery fluid to the heart of every true peasant son of Connaught—and daughter, too, for that matter, for the fair sex, especially at all up in years, takes its fair share. And, in the interests of truth, it must be added that those who inhabit the coast counties from Kerry to Donegal inclusive are also fully alive to its seductive merits. Indeed, many doctors (local, of course,) will tell you that well-made poteen is better in sickness than the adulterated whisky usually met with in the small public houses in this region of poverty; for in the Connemara country at any rate the illicit whisky is made of pure malt; though rumor has it that the less particular palate of Donegal, for instance, is satisfied with a fire-water mainly made from molasses, potatoes—ay, sometimes from almost any other rubbish you please.

The Drunken Lieutenant.

Sir Edmund Verney in The Contemporary.

The Terrible took a prominent part in the bombardment of Odessa, being the only ship that fired red-hot shot, one of which from my quarters blew up a Russian magazine. One Russian shot had a curious career. Entering a port on the starboard side, it took the chase of the gun in that port, which deflected it; the shot then struck the iron coaming of the fore hatchway, and, rebounding, passed out of the ship on the same side as it had entered, one port further forward. In its short visit it killed one man and wounded others. We witnessed the brilliant manoeuvres of the Arethusa, bombarding the forts under sail, the last occasion in history of a sailing ship engaging land defenses, when the seamanship of Capt. Mends and the gunnery of Lieut. Hood, now Lord Hood of Avalon, excited the admiration of the combined fleets. We had, altogether, two men killed and five wounded, and were selected by Admiral Dundas to carry to Constantinople the dispatches detailing the engagement.

Our Second Lieutenant, Mr. S., was not a temperate man. Before the bombardment began he sought for Dutch courage in a square-faced bottle, and when the drum beat to quarters he was in his cabin in a drunken sleep, from which he could not be awakened. As I was midshipman of his quarters, I had to fight his guns. In the evening, when he came to himself, he was put under arrest, and we midshipmen speculated whether he would be shot or hung at the yard arm. Either would have been a thrilling episode, but I am not sure that his fate was not even more tragic. As soon as the anchor was dropped in the Golden Horn, off Stamboul, the Captain ordered, "Man the second gig." We all wondered. Then he said: "Tell Mr. S. I want him." Poor S. came up at once, greatly astonished at the summons. "The second gig is manned, Mr. S.," said the skipper, sternly, and turned away. S. took the hint, stepped at once into the boat, and was landed at the nearest shore. From that day no soul ever heard what became of him; whether he committed suicide; whether he got other employment, (not a difficult matter in those busy times;) whether, under another name, he won for himself the respect of his fellow-men has never been known. He was marked "Run" on the ship's books, and his effects were sold by auction.

"Articles" by Statesmen.

From The Cornhill.

Mr. Labouchere indulged in some rather disrespectful remarks about leader writers in Truth a couple of years ago. "Article writing is, to a great extent, trick writing," he wrote. "To 'catch on' they must dogmatize in pointed commonplace. Some persons possess this trick, which is rather an acquired than a natural gift. I have seen articles written by eminent statesmen. I never saw one which would not have been more effectively written by a professional journalist." The last sentence, at all events, would be confirmed by many editors. Articles by eminent statesmen are excellent when the eminent statesmen put their names at the bottom. Otherwise they are no better, but perhaps a little worse, than other people's effusions. Mr. John Bright once wrote a "leader" for the old Morning Star, of which he was part proprietor, and the policy of which he controlled. It was a very poor thing in the opinion of the editor, but, of course, it had to be published. Next day a Conservative newspaper had a reply to the article, which began: "The great Tribune has laid aside his pen, and some miserable hireling of The Morning Star has taken it up." Mr. Bright called at the office of The Morning Star that afternoon, and said good-humoredly, "I don't think leader-writing can be my forte."

Through the Streets.

Through the dim London morning
The soldiers rode away;
The crowd, in sable, round them;
The sky above them gray.

Two strains of music played them—
One mournful and one glad.
It was the mournful music
That sounded the least sad.
—ELLA FULLER MAITLAND in The Spectator.

The Lyre Bird.

From The National Review.

The ground is hidden beneath a mass of jungle grass, sword grass, and fern, all bowed under a weight of moisture, and this forest is dreary, damp, and cold. It is hilly country, and you hear the notes of the different birds echoing and deceiving you. They are all high, piping sounds, save now and then when a thud-thud like a thunder bolt seems to strike the earth. It is a frightened wallaroo or wallaby who is leaping, pausing to listen, and leaping on again over the green coating of the earth.

Now you hear a lyre bird before you. Doubtless he is not more than twenty yards ahead, for the sound seems to rise under cover of your gun, which, with very nervous hands, you are holding before you. But that bird is a rascally ventriloquist, knowing how to pitch his voice and send it in any direction. Never mind—he is singing, so you move on toward him. Take heed to your surroundings and to the weight of your footfall. Should you fall foul of some rambling vine, or put down your foot too quickly, the lyre bird will gather up his music and his tail, and you will hear him no more. You must stand still as death and wait, if needs be, half an hour for his second performance. When he is well on with it you may go on, too, for his own excitement and the sound of his own voice will kill out all other sounds, and he will not hear you stealing on him.

He is disporting himself on a mound of vegetable mold five or six feet in diameter, which he has earthed up. Around him are long grasses and ferns, through which he has made holes into which he can dart at will to elude his enemies. Above is one clear branch on to which he will leap when instinct tells him he is safe from harm. Here he will perch and plume himself previous to winging his flight to some other play or feeding ground. By avoiding every obstacle and pausing breathlessly whenever the bush singer lowers his note you have managed to steal almost upon him. There! see his beautiful tail, bowing peacock-like over that mass of nodding grass as its owner courtesies to the ground, and chatters and calls and shrieks as if he were addressing a multitude on the ground before him. He is only imitating a tribe of black cockatoos, (you would swear there were at least forty voices in chorus.) Now he is rivaling half a dozen bellbirds, and the next instant there is a long-drawn smacking sound which you may put down as the music of a falling branch or the call of the "whip-cracker," (a tree climber.)

Outside the Toyshop.

Beside the door they stand, anear the pane
Tricked with toy-wares. It is a dapple-gray
In smooth round wafers dight, and lifts alway
One prancing foot from grass-green board up-ta'en.
An urchin he, oft met down alley and lane,
Half lost in his wide old rags; agrin to-day,
Because he still with fearful joy dares lay
A stroking finger on that furry mane.
He tastes his perilous pleasure like a bird
Of quick small feet and wary eye, that comes
To peck strewn fragments, flown at breath scarce heard.
You smile among the hedgerows. In the slums
You think: When flits this child-glee lightly stirred,
Shall manhood's craving miss even these poor crumbs?
—JANE BARLOW in The Academy.

Compliments Paid Sir Henry Irving.

From Cassell's Magazine.

I shall never forget the pride with which a farm steward last year took me up to a pigstye and said: "The great actor, Sir 'Enry Irving, went right inside that there pigstye, Sir, last Sunday, and examined every one of them there pigs, Sir, and thought so 'ighly of 'em, Sir, that he did me the honor of asking me to go to his theatre and take my family. He do love and understand animals, do Sir 'Enry." With no less pride was I shown a filly that Sir Henry had formally christened Portia. That farm steward, I am sure, considered Irving had immortalized him. But perhaps one of the most subtle compliments ever paid to the actor was unconsciously paid to Sir Henry by a working lad a few months ago on Hampstead Heath. Sir Henry was walking with a friend, and some youths of the laborer class were following him about curiously. At last one was heard to say: "Oh, I know 'oo it is; it's that bloke what keeps the theatre—it's Shikespeare."

The Romans and Their Fish.

From The Contemporary.

Fish was in great demand at Rome, and incredible sums might be made by fish ponds or wasted on them. The humble fish pond of the people, supplied with rain water and replenished by fish taken out of rivers or lakes, brought in large returns. The aristocratic fish pond, furnished by Neptune and constructed with elaborate art, was more apt to empty pockets than to fill them. It cost a fortune to build it, to stock it, and to feed the fish. One possessor of such a fish nursery made nearly £200 a year by it, but it cost the whole profit to keep it up. They were expensive toys rather than serious investments. Varro once saw a sacred tank in Lydia containing fish which came to the edge at the sound of a flute, and which no one was allowed to touch; the fish of the Roman noble are, he says, nearly as sacred. Hortensius, who had spent a mint of money on his salt-water fish tanks at Baulos, was found out in buying all the fish for his table at Pozzuoli. He fed his fishes himself and was much more anxious lest they should be hungry than I am about my asses, which bring me in a good profit." Varro scornfully remarks. Half the fishermen of the place were employed in catching small fish to give to the big ones, and salted fish was provided when the sea was too rough for the boats to go out. Hortensius would make you a present of a team of mules sooner than of a single one of his mullets. Lucullus gave carte blanche to his architect to ruin him if he could manage, by means of subterranean passages, to contrive a sort of tide in his tanks at Baiae, so as to keep the water cool in Summer, when fishes in confinement suffer much from the heat. I have been told at the Naples Aquarium, a beautiful and wonderful place, surpassing the dreams even of a Roman fish maniac.

Varro speaks of some one who was more anxious about his sick fishes than about his sick slaves, but the story of the Roman "who fattened his lampreys on his slaves" belongs to after times. Like other stories which are told for the benefit of youth, it lacks exactitude. This seems to have been the truth: A millionaire freedman of the name of Pollio Vedius was entertaining Augustus at supper when a slave broke a crystal goblet; Pollio, enraged, ordered him to be thrown to the fishes; the slave appealed to the Emperor, who asked his host to pardon him, but Pollio refused. Augustus then pardoned the man himself, and had all Pollio's crystal goblets broken and the fish pond filled up.

Routine of the College Student. 1480.

From "Life in a Mediaeval University." By Dr. H. Randall.

5:30 A. M.—Rise, drink a flagon of beer at the buttery; no other breakfast.

6-8—Ordinary lecture in the public schools, (no fire; rushes on floor.)

8—Mass, (in early Middle Ages optional; later, compulsory.)

9-11—Study in room with three companions—perhaps "repeating" to each other morning's lecture. No fire; no glass in windows.

11—Dinner. Bible read in hall. Menu: Soup thickened with oatmeal, beef, bread, cheese, small beer.

11:30—College disputation.

12 M.—The idle man takes a walk or plays dice at the tavern; the studious returns to his books.

1:30—P. M.—Nuncheons, i. e., a drink of beer in hall.

2-3:30—Extraordinary lecture.

3:30-5—Ditto.

5—Supper. Much as at dinner.

5:30-8—Study for the serious; roaming about the streets for the frivolous.

8—Curfew rings. "Potations" in hall.

9—Run round quadrangle to warm feet. Bed.

Nice Hanging.

From "That Reminds Me." By Sir Edward Russell.

Bobby Meade of the Colonial Office was anxious to have executions in Malta carried out more humanely. So he consulted Marwood. Marwood strongly advised the "long drop," and explained his own process thus: "There was Mr. Peace, a small man; I gave him a six-foot drop, and, I hassure you, Sir, he passed hoff like a Summer heve."

"Fetch," Its Derivation and Use.

From Notes and Queries.

This word is probably related to the Danish "vette" and the Icelandic "vaettr," meaning a wight, an elf, a supernatural being. The superstition of the "fetch" is not peculiarly Irish, though the powerful novel of the "O'Hara Family" is founded on the superstition as it prevails in Ireland. The "fetch" is supposed to appear just when the person whose "counterfeit presentment" it is happens to be at the point of death. The Scottish "wraith" is practically identical with the "fetch." The English words "fetch-candle" and "fetch-light" may be compared with the Danish "vettelys" and the Norwegian "vettelgos." The fetch myth existed in England so far back at least as the eleventh century—probably much earlier. Tylor, in his "Primitive Culture," refers to the incident of the Earl of Cornwall having met the fetch of William Rufus. It may be fanciful to connect the word "fetch" with "fetich," but the two words are somewhat similar, both in form and meaning.

The Officer and His Useless Sword.

From Blackwood.

The officer is, as we all know, armed with a sword. The public naturally always looks upon the sword as inseparable from the officer. It has always, from time immemorial, been alike the weapon of offense as well as of defense. It is besides the badge of rank of the officer. In days gone by the sword was doubtless a very useful weapon of offense as also of defense, but now it is universally recognized that an officer would rely more on his revolver than on his sword.

If we are to carry out the assimilation of the officer and the private, I see nothing for it but to discard the sword when proceeding on field service. This is a suggestion which will probably stagger not only public opinion, but possibly also a large percentage of officers themselves. But I know for a fact that there are many officers in India who are of this way of thinking—men who have done much campaigning.

Yes; the sword belonging to the infantry officer should be left behind when he proceeds on active service. The time has come to be thoroughly practical in our equipment for field service, and all so-called smartness should give way to what is really sensible and practical. The question naturally arises, What will you arm the officer with? To carry out the general scheme of assimilation, I would reply: Arm him with a carbine. The Martini-Metford for preference, with a magazine attached.

The Coloring Power in Coal Tar.

From Good Words.

The coloring power which can be derived from coal tar is quite astonishing. From one ton of good cannel coal are obtained by distillation about twelve gallons of coal tar. From this tar are produced one pound of benzine, one pound toluene, one and a half pounds of phenol or carbolic acid, six pounds of naphthalene, half a pound of anthracene, and a small quantity of xylene. From benzine are obtained fine yellow, orange, green, blue, and violet colors; from toluene come magentas and beautiful blues; from phenol, reds, browns, and pinks; from naphthalene, reds, yellows, and greens; from xylene, the finest scarlets, and from anthracene, the well-known Turkey red. From one pound of coal is obtained one ounce and a half of tar, from which can be derived dyes sufficient to color the following lengths of flannel three-quarters of a yard wide: Four inches of Turkey red, eight inches magenta, three and a half feet scarlet, two inches orange, five feet of yellow, and two feet of violet. When we remember that over 10,000,000 tons of coal are used for gasmaking every year in this country alone, our minds cannot realize the immense amount of coloring matter which it represents.

The manufacture of coal-tar colors has now assumed immense dimensions, and its development within the short space of time stands unique in the history of commerce. Few of our readers, except those engaged in the chemical and color trades, can realize its beneficial influence upon allied industries. The raw materials alone exported from England consume annually, before their conversion into coloring matters, somewhere like 70,000 tons strong sulphuric acid, 30,000 tons carbonate of soda, 40,000 tons hydrochloric acid, besides large quantities of various other chemicals. In one large establishment alone are employed over 4,000 work people, not including 200 clerks and 80 research chemists. Even such figures give us but a poor idea of the great influence such an industry has in promoting trade.

Eagles and Their Prey.

From The Cornhill.

There is at the present moment at the Natural History Museum a model of the skull of an eagle so gigantic that the imagination can scarcely fit it into the life of this planet at all.

The whole head is larger than that of an ox, and the beak resembles a pair of hydraulic shears. Unlike most of the giant beasts, this eagle, which inhabited Patagonia, appears from its remains to have differed little in form from the existing species. Its size alone distinguishes it. The quills of the feathers which bore this awful raptor through the air must have been as thick as a walking stick, and the webs as wide as oar-blades. It could have killed and torn to pieces creatures as large as a bison, and whirled up into the sky and dropped upon the rocks the gigantic carapaced animals of prehistoric Patagonia as easily as a modern eagle of California does the land tortoises on which it feeds.

Even to-day there are few carnivorous animals, whether birds or beasts, which have so wide a range of prey as the eagles. Like the winged dragons of old story, they can ravage earth, air, and sea, and feed promiscuously on the denizens of all three elements. From serpents on the burning desert to seals on the everlasting ice, from monkeys in the tropical forest to marmots on the Alpine slopes, from dead sheep on highland hills to peacocks in the Indian jungles, no form of fish, flesh, or fowl comes amiss to them, and the young eagle, driven by the inexorable law of his race from the home where he was reared, finds a free breakfast table wherever he flies.

Stocking Superstitions.

From Notes and Queries.

On the Welsh border it used to be considered that the surest precaution against witchcraft was to wear the left stocking wrong-side out. This leads us to another kind of superstition connected with the harmless, necessary hose—their value, when properly worn or arranged, as charms or as protections against sickness or pain. If you will only take the trouble when you go to bed to cross your stockings and shoes, you will be quite safe from the grip of cramp. Again, if you hang your stockings crosswise at the foot of the bed, with a pin stuck in them, you need have no fear of nightmare; the hag has a holy horror of cross and pin. Wiseacres have also been heard to declare that if you will always put your left stocking and shoe on first you will enjoy immunity from toothache. This, however, the most superstitious of mortals will likely take leave to doubt. Toothache, that "hell of a' diseases," as Burns calls it, is no respecter of persons, nor, assuredly, of stockings or legs.

My Fair Imperialist.

The policy of conquering
She said she thought was right:
Our starry banner she would fling
To universal sight.

'Twas "destiny" quite "manifest,"
And ours, by right of race,
Each alien country to invest:
Yes, we should set the pace.

The doctrine "Might makes right," she vowed,
Should be emblazoned high;
Of our succes we should be proud—
We rule, while others lie.

'Twas wicked to be critical,
Perfection to expect;
She thought that "territorial Aggression" was correct.

She's to ambitious in her pride
Of race and policy:
In conquering, I'd be satisfied
If she'd begin on me.
—TOM MASSON in The New Lippincott.

Charles Lamb.

Birrell on the Essays of Elia.

Lamb, like his own child-angel, was "to know weakness and reliance and the shadow of human imbecility." He went with a lame gait. He used to get drunk somewhat too frequently. Let the fact be stated in all its deformity—he was too fond of gin-and-water. He once gave a lady the welcome assurance that he never got drunk twice in the same house. Failing all evidence to the contrary, we are bound to believe this to be true. It is a mitigating circumstance. Wordsworth's boundless self-conceit, Coleridge's maddening infirmity of purpose, Hazlitt's petulance, De Quincey's spitefulness, knew no such self-denying ordinance. Lamb was also a too inveterate punster, and sometimes, it may be, pushed a jest or baited a bore beyond the limits of becoming mirth.

When we have said these things against Lamb we have said all. Pale malice, speckled jealousy, may now be invited to search the records of his life, to probe his motives, to read his private letters, to pry into his desk, to dissect his character. Baffled, beaten, and disappointed, they fall back. An occasional intoxication which hurt no one but himself, which blinded him to no duty, which led him into no extravagance, which in no way interfered with the soundness of his judgment, the charity of his heart, or the independence of his life, and a shower of bad puns—behold the faults of Elia! His virtues—noble, manly, gentle—are strewn over every page of his life, and may be read in every letter he ever wrote.

How the Boers Made Ready.

From The Contemporary Review.

For some time past—the period of enlightenment varying with the intelligence of the observer—every one has known that the Boers in South Africa had been arming. Those armaments could only be intended for aggressive purposes, as they were far too extensive for mere defense. Natal, at any rate, knew and appreciated the situation, but the representations of its Government were almost entirely ignored, and the reinforcements sent there, until the arrival of the Indian contingent, were quite inadequate to deal with the situation. Even when these arrived they were not enough to allow anything more than a mere defense, and that not a strong one, against invasion. Now, the Government has been in possession for months past of information which showed without doubt that the Boers did not mean to yield, or which, at any rate, might have shown it that yielding was very improbable. If it had not got it, then the Foreign Office was again at fault, for it was known to the Natal Government, known to every soldier who had studied the question, known almost to every man in the street since the beginning of this year. Yet it did absolutely nothing, left Natal open to attack, and, in fact, created deliberately by its own act the present situation.

From a military point of view there can be no doubt of its folly, and it is one for which our leading soldiers are in no way responsible. For it is an open secret that the military heads of the War Office wished to send out troops long before they were allowed to do so. Moreover, we know that the Boers were not ready quite so early as they had hoped to be, and that their ultimatum, originally intended to be delivered on Sept. 30, was not sent in till ten days later. The early dispatch of troops, say in August, would have stopped all danger to Natal, and very likely would have made the Boers think twice before declaring war against us. Why, then, was this not done? The answer is a very simple one. Political exigencies. Party government has doubtless many advantages—one of them being that any attempt at war is certain to be denounced at first by the opposition. Had Lord Salisbury sent troops in sufficient numbers to South Africa, and had peace been maintained, few can doubt that it would have cost the Unionist Party their places. It is not difficult to imagine the virtuous indignation of Sir William Vernon Harcourt, or the less ponderous but possibly more efficacious oratory of Sir Henry Fowler or Sir H. Campbell-Bannerman. The opportunity would have been too favorable, too tempting, for the opposition to lose. Peace had not been broken; the Boers had never intended to break it; the Government was a ridiculous compound of bluster and cowardice; Mr. Krüger was an angel from heaven; Mr. Chamberlain a ——. Well, I leave my readers to fill in the gap.

Three Angels.

They say this life is barren, drear, and cold,
Ever the same sad song was sung of old,
Ever the same long weary tale is told.
And to our lips is held the cup of strife,
And yet—a little love can sweeten life.

They say our hands may grasp but joys destroyed,
Youth has but dreams, and age an aching void,
Whose Dead-Sea fruit, long, long ago has cloyed,
Whose night with wild tempestuous storms is rife—
And yet a little hope can brighten life.

They say we fling ourselves in wild despair
Amidst the broken treasures scattered there,
Where all is wrecked, where all once promised fair;
And stab ourselves with sorrow's two-edged knife—
And yet a little patience strengths life.

Is it then true, this tale of bitter grief,
Of mortal anguish finding no relief?
Lo! midst the Winter shines the laurel's leaf:
Three angels share the lot of human strife,
Three angels glorify the path of life.

Love, Hope, and Patience cheer us on our way,
Love, Hope, and Patience form our spirit's stay,
Love, Hope, and Patience watch us day by day,
And bid the desert bloom with beauty vernal,
Until the earthly fades in the eternal.

The Comic Song. 1784.

From The Gentleman's Magazine.

The humor of a comic song is at best so ephemeral in its allusiveness that strict comparison between the laughter-breeding ditties of bygone times and those of to-day is out of the question. "Hot Codlins" and "Tippitywitchet" appear childish enough now in all conscience, but probably not more so than will jingles of the "Tarara-boom-de-ay" order to our own great-grandchildren. Pantomime humor has ever been lacking in the savor to keep it sweet. Here, for instance, is a taste of the quality of a comic song, set to music by Shield and sung by Edwin in the character of a hunchbacked barber, in "Harlequin Rambler," the Covent Garden annual of 1784. It must have enjoyed some vogue in its day, for it was published separately by Bland of Holborn at the moderate price of sixpence. But one wonders where the laugh came in!

London Town is just like a Barber's Shop,
But by the Lord Harry 'tis wondrous big.
Then the painted Dol and the powder'd Fop
And many a blockhead wear a wig.
CHORUS.
And I tickled each phys with a twiggle and a friz,
With a twiggle twiggle twiggle and a frizzel,
With a twiggle twiggle twiggle and a frizzel, frizzel,
And I tickled each Phiz with a twiggle and a friz.

Questions and Answers.

From Good Words.

An Inspector, well known for his weight, was trying to extract the word "flesh" from a class. His efforts had failed, but, taking hold of his fat cheek between his thumb and forefinger, he pulled it out, and asked:

"What's this?"

The unhesitating answer came promptly: "Pork, Sir."

The same Inspector was once giving an object lesson on an umbrella. To illustrate his subject he took his own silk umbrella, which happened to have a small hole in it.

"What is this, boys?"
"An umbrella, Sir."
"And what is this?"
"The stick, Sir."
"And these?"
"The ribs, Sir."
"With what is it covered?"
Silence.
"Surely you know. What kind of an umbrella would you call it?"
"An old 'un, Sir."

How Eight Lines Were Paid For.

From The Academy.

It may be worth while pointing out that while the sum of £775, which is the total sum paid for Mr. Rudyard Kipling's poem, "The Absent-Minded Beggar," is very large, it is not the greatest ever given for a piece of verse. For example, James Smith, one of the authors of the famous "Rejected Addresses," happened to meet Mr. Strachan, the King's printer, at a dinner party, and found him suffering much from gout. In spite of this the old gentleman enjoyed Smith's brilliant conversation extremely, and they parted with many good wishes. Next day the author sent Strachan a jeu d'esprit of eight lines, which so pleased the recipient that he added a codicil to his will the same day, leaving the author the sum of £3,000. A brief calculation will show that this payment is at the rate of £375 a line.

The Pug and Grouse.

Phil Robinson in The Contemporary.

From the veranda some clematis hangs down in beautiful festoons, and in early Autumn it is a mass of bloom. But, alas for the scent of it! Yet it is the favorite rendezvous for all the butterflies, flies, and moths of the place. All day and half the night they besiege it. In their eagerness to reach the evil-smelling flowers they pass over jessamine and roses, heliotrope and lavender, musk and mignonette. But for its beauty to the eye the clematis would long ago have been destroyed. Yet, if it were to go, the insects would consider that the chief glory of the gardens had gone with it. The other day I saw a scrap of grouse thrown to a pug. The dog caught it in its mouth, dropped it on the carpet, and rolled on it in an ecstasy; lay on its back and slid up and down the thing. The morsel was at once taken away, but the pug, oblivious of the more substantial enjoyments which it usuually associated with the dinner hour, kept faithful to the tainted spot on the carpet, turned somersaults on it and scraped itself along it, although there was nothing there but a smell. Can anything be imagined to set human and canine enjoyments further apart than this, that the dainty which the gourmet eats the dog thinks too precious to swallow, and rolls on it, extending its delight in it over many days and returning every time with all its first enthusiasm? So that the tastes of wild creatures are "not to be disputed of."

A Conjurer at Colombo.

From Blackwood.

Our conjurer's appearance placed him at once above the suspicion of concealing anything up his sleeve, for sleeve he had none. His dress was a scant white drapery which began at the shoulders and ended at the knees, leaving both arms and legs uncovered. Placing himself on the deck directly in front of us, with his boy assistants a little way off on either side, he began operations. First he spread on the deck a small cotton pocket-handkerchief; thereon, in the form of a small hillock, he put two handfuls of loose friable earth, in which he planted the mango seed. This accomplished, he dispatched a boy with a flat tin for water, in the meantime taking a hooded snake from a shallow basket and waving it—the while it hissed angrily and enlarged its neck—over the little mound of soil, as he did so chanting on a strange pipe. The water fetched, he sprinkled a few drops on the earth, then covered the heap with a small square of fringed turban-cloth. After again repeating his incantations, he lifted the top covering and revealed a tiny green shoot, not unlike the first appearance of a bean above the ground.

Asiatic Soldiers.

From The Spectator.

The Saracens charged on and repeatedly defeated the mail-clad legions of Europe, and this when the latter were of the two the more animated by religious fervor. Hyder Ali's horsemen were as good troops as any in the world. Even in our own time the French feared Arabs when commanded by Ab-del-Kádir, and the best Italian troops were defeated by Menelek. It is probable, too, that if Europe knew the details of the sporadic war which rages in Arabia between Turks and Arabs we should revise our ideas of Asiatic capacity both for soldiership and for heroism; but still it is substantially true that the Asiatic soldier wants as a fighting man something which we call aptitude for discipline, and which the European officer can and does communicate to him. What that something is has been a matter of dispute from the day of Xerxes's invasion, and will probably never be settled till the Asiatic becomes self-consolous and a penman.

The writer once asked the first Sir Henry Havelock what he with his great experience and knowledge of military history believed to be the reason, and his answer, that "it was due in the long run to some secret want of confidence on the part of the men in their officers' capacity or honesty," though not completely satisfactory, is probably as near as we shall get to the truth. The explanation, however, does not so much matter. The grand fact is that any competent European officer can do the needed work, that such officers are in the market, and that, consequently, powerful Asiatic armies may yet be organized by soldiers of fortune purchased for the purpose.

Another Idea of Gordon.

From "The River War," by W. S. Churchill.

"It was a pity that a man, thus gloriously free from the ordinary restraining influences of human society, should have found in his own character so little mental ballast. Mercury uncontrolled by the force of gravity was not on several occasions more unstable than Charles Gordon. His moods were capricious and uncertain, his passions violent, his impulses sudden and inconsistent. The mortal enemy of the morning had become a trusted ally before the night. The friend he loved to-day he loathed to-morrow. Scheme after scheme formed in his fertile brain, and jostled confusingly together. All in succession were pressed with enthusiasm. All at times were rejected with disdain. A temperament naturally neurotic had been aggravated by an acquired habit of smoking, and the General barried this to so great an extreme that he was rarely seen without a cigarette. His virtues are famous among men. His daring and resource might turn the tide of war. His energy would have animated a whole people. His achievements are upon record, but it must also be set down that few more uncertain and impracticable forces than Gordon have ever been introduced into diplomacy."

A South Sea Island Bride.

From Blackwood.

The bridal procession was approaching. In front, walking abreast, came the wedded pair—tall, handsome, and of an excellent tawny hue. The bride, a beautiful young girl, exhibited a ludicrously absurd appearance. Her shapely legs and feet were naked. She wore a low bodice of scarlet satin bedecked with shoulder-knots of brilliant blue. Round her body so many robes, some of the paper-like barkcloth, others woven of the native grass, were enwrapped, that her aspect, instead of impressing us, as it doubtless did the natives, with respect for her wealth, merely made comic suggestion that the poor child was parading inside a barrel! Her pretty head, running over with close rings of tan-tipped hair, was uncovered; and her neck and limbs glistened with oil.

The Cult of Dirt.

From The Nineteenth Century.

Dirt is a giant hard to fight in beautiful Ireland. The woman who had never heard of "washin' a live wan" is, I think, equaled by another who came to me lately about her sore leg.

"'They tell me, doctor darlint, that washin' might scotch the heat out of it! But I wouldn't adventure to do it without askin' your advice. Not for the worlds. I'm an ould woman now, doctor dear, an' a drop of water has never gone near my body.'

"I advised a goodly supply of aqueous fluid, preceded by a thorough application of alkali and potash in the form of soap, and the old woman hobbled off quite satisfied with my scientific words.

"In Sallyboggin for years a certain old woman levied a weekly tribute on charitably disposed folk. All at once a 'nevvy' from America turned up

MANY ADVANCES IN WAGES.

General Increase of 10 Per Cent. in Leading New England Mills.

From The New York Sun.

BIDDEFORD, Me., Dec. 7.—The 3,400 employees of the Pepperell and Laconia cotton mills were notified to-day that their wages will be advanced 10 per cent. on Dec. 18. An advance will go into effect in the York mills, Saco, on next Monday.

WATERVILLE, Me., Dec. 7.—Notices were posted in the Lockwood mills here announcing the restoration of the old wage scale, which was reduced 15 per cent. on Dec. 1, 1898. The mill employs 1,500 persons.

CONCORD, N. H., Dec. 7.—The Hookset Manufacturing Company of Hookset, N. H., will advance wages 10 per cent. on Dec. 18.

Frederick Loeser & Co.

BROOKLYN.

WAGES UP IN NEW ENGLAND.

75,000 Cotton Mill Operatives Now Receive the 10 Per Cent. Advance.

From The New York Sun.

BOSTON, Dec. 11.—The 10 per cent. advance in wages recently granted went into effect in New England cotton mills employing about 75,000 operatives to-day. The mills affected are in Rhode Island, eastern Connecticut, central and western Massachusetts and at Saco, Me. The remaining cotton mills, with few exceptions, will begin on the new schedule next Monday. Most of the mills in New Hampshire will advance wages on that day.

Carloads of Muslin Underwear

Our Annual Midwinter Sale

(And believe us, no other sale will approach it in advantages to you.)

THE MAGNITUDE of Our Annual Midwinter Muslin Underwear Sale is already an established fact. Its purposes, its usefulness and its benefits are known in every home where the name of Loeser is known. Thus to those who are already aware of this yearly imcomparable event it may seem almost superfluous to do more than announce the opening of the sale on Tuesday morning. But aside from the fact of the immensely enlarged scope and benefits natural to the great growth and progress of a great business, there are conditions this year which make this offer the most important Sale to you we have ever had, and doubly emphasizes the inexhaustible and incomparable purchasing power of this store. We offer Garments of the most approved kinds and irreproachable qualities at as low and lower prices than we did a year ago, and this in the face of very large advances in cost (as every newspaper reader knows to be a fact) of all kinds of raw materials, machinery and labor. In the first place, we bought at very low prices because we foresaw events, and arranged for the making of the Garments long before the general advance in cost; and, in the second place, we sacrifice all profits, yes, in many cases sell very much below the cost. Why we do this is a natural question and deserves an answer. There's always a lull in business immediately after Christmas. This Sale converts the Store into life and activity; it keeps the machinery of business in motion; it gives employment to otherwise idle hands; it is a business proposition which, while not immediately money-making, is in the end an advantage to us. It gives you garments at prices that cannot be duplicated and at a time when it is a great advantage to you to replenish your wardrobe. And this year particularly, with the present cost outlook, years may pass before such a price opportunity can possibly occur again. As for the Garments themselves the Loeser Standard of Quality has been maintained and improved. Not a skimp in a single article, no witchcraft in the making, but a conscientious watchfulness to meet your ideas of comfortableness, refinement and prettiness, even from the 5-cent Corset Cover to the most delicate, chaste and beautiful French Lingerie ever seen in this country. All our goods are made in clean factories by well-paid operatives. You will find these goods entirely beyond fair competition for real lowness of prices. On the Second Floor. The Department has been very much enlarged and improved. The convenience and accommodation so superior that shopping will be found a genuine pleasure.

NATIONAL GUARD NOTES.

"Just how the so-called joint committee of the National Guard Association and the Inter-State National Guard Association can represent the National Guard of the United States, is what is puzzling a good many of us," said a prominent officer of the Guard in referring to the bill to be introduced in Congress prepared under the direction of the above organization, which makes the militia a reserve of the regular army.

"If you examine the make-up of this committee," continued the officer, "it becomes more apparent than ever that the men on it only represent themselves, and that the Guard of all the principal States of the Union are not in it. To begin with, there is Major Gen. Butterfield, a very estimable gentleman, but he has nothing to do with the Guard of New York, and is not authorized to represent it in any sense. Outside of the above-named officer, there is one officer from Virginia, one from Florida, one from Mississippi, and two from Illinois. With the exception of the latter State, there is not a State in the Union that has a force worthy of the name represented. New York, New Jersey, Pennsylvania, Massachusetts, Connecticut, Rhode Island, Maine, Oregon, California, and other States, who maintain a first-class force, and who are better able to judge of the possibilities and maintenance of a Guard than States whose troops have been a little better than target companies, have no place on the committee.

"This so-called association is not a representative one in any sense, and the convention it held in the South last year was merely a junketing trip for a few, and no officers of State troops representing the best element reported. This whole scheme is simply an excuse for a few men to make themselves prominent, and the sooner that Congress is made aware of the fact the better. I should not be surprised if a number of the States took action opposing this self-constituted committee—that is, if there is any danger of its suggestions receiving serious consideration, which I doubt, as does every other progressive guardsman conversant with the matter."

In the opinion of National Guard officers the so-called Sunday sermons in the armory of the Ninth Regiment, which last Sunday developed into a pro-Boer meeting, is a misuse of armories which in the future should be prevented. "Religious ceremonies are all very well," said a prominent officer, "but when a Chaplain who is an officer of the National Guard gets up in an armory, which is distinctly a military post, and argues to a public audience that they take sides against a friendly power, and allows politicians to come in and do the same thing, it is carrying the spread of the Gospel a little too far. If pro-Boer meetings are allowed, then the anti-imperialists will be using the armories to denounce President McKinley, and seek to aid the Filipinos. One party has as much right to do this as the other."

Many prominent indorsements were given Major Putnam Bradlee Strong, Inspector on the staff of Gen. Smith of the Fifth Brigade, for the position of Adjutant General, and his friends are highly pleased that his name was sent forward. He is an energetic and progressive young officer, whose valuable experience in the campaign in the Philippines as Assistant Adjutant General under Gen. MacArthur was a further recommendation for his appointment to succeed Gen. Andrews.

Gov. Roosevelt expressed himself as highly delighted at the showing made by the Twenty-second Regiment at the review last Thursday at the armory, and was also agreeably surprised at the progress made by Col. Bartlett's command. The ceremonies of the evening were performed with that smoothness and finish for which the Twenty-second is justly celebrated. The regiment was divided into three battalions, the first being under Major Hotchkin, the second under Major Hart, and the third under Capt. Lilliendahl, Col. Bartlett being in command of the regiment. An enjoyable dance concluded the ceremonies of the evening.

Through the courtesy of Col. Clayton of the Fourteenth Regiment, the Second Naval Battalion can drill for the Winter in the regimental armory on Saturday evenings.

The display of the Seventy-first Regiment at the review by Gen. Smith last Tuesday evening was an excellent one in every respect. The regiment turned out ten companies of sixteen files each, divided into two battalions. The First Battalion was in command of Capt. Wells, and consisted of Company B, Capt. Hazen; E, Capt. Hill; F, Lieut. Beekman; H, Capt. McLeod, and K, Capt. Hough, with Lieut. Weyman Adjutant. The Second Battalion, in command of Capt. Linson, consisted of Company A, Capt. Brue; C, Capt. Robertson; D, Lieut. Wilson; G, Capt. Bleecker, and I, Capt. Williams, with Lieut. Crockett, Adjutant. The battalion formations, and the regimental formations under Adjt. Dowling, were prompt and executed without a break. Distances were carefully maintained, and the men were attentive. The result was that the various movements of the evening, which included a review, parade, and regimental drill, were such as to bring unstinted praise from military critics, as well as hearty applause from the large audience. Among the military men present among the guests were Col. Morris and Adjt. Graff of the Ninth Regiment, Col. McCarthy, One Hundred and Sixty-ninth; Capt. Falls, Seventh; ex-Capt. Olyphant of the Seventy-first, Lieut. Col. Jarvis, Majors Strong, Austin, Warren, Fisher, and Washburn, Capt. Hegeman, and Lieut. Abeel of the Fifth Brigade Staff. One of the most conspicuous men in the regiment outside of Col. Bates, who was in command for the first time in his new grade, was Sergt. George Doyle, the well-known rifleman, with his breast covered with medals he won in the army and National Guard. The Sergeant, who was in the campaign in Cuba, tumbled several Spanish sharpshooters out of trees with his unerring aim. The "Surrender of Santiago," to be given in the armory next Thursday, Friday and Saturday by Company E, promises to be the most interesting event of its kind ever given in an armory.

At the reunion and review of the Eighth Regiment next Thursday night the following State decorations for long and faithful service will be presented: For twenty-five years' service, Col. and Brevet Brig. Gen. George D. Scott, Capt. George L. Wentworth; for fifteen years' service—Col. James M. Jarvis, Lieut. A. Jacobson, Private Robert B. Breen, Jr., Company B; for ten years' service—Lieut. Col. Henry G. Ridabock, Major Isaac Freeman, Major John E. Kirby, Capt. Frank R. Curtis, First Sergt. Marshall G. Hatfield, Company I; Quartermaster Sergt. C. E. Wheeler, Company C; Sergt. T. M. McLaughlin, Company F; Private Victor La Point, Company D; Private James J. Tracy, Company D. During the ceremonies of the evening there will be present the Spanish-American war veterans of the Eighth, the civil war veterans of the regiment, and the former members of the One Hundred and Eighth Regiment, N. G. N. Y. Company K, Capt. Staubach, will hold a bicycle meet at the armory Jan. 13, under National Cycling Association rules. Company G and the Pastime Athletic Club will hold joint games at the armory Jan. 31. Lieut. Hickie is to be promoted Captain of Company F. The Company Challenge Cup has been won for this month by Company K.

Company E of the Seventh Regiment, whose existence dates from Christmas Day, 1824, will celebrate its seventy-fifth anniversary by a dinner at the New York Athletic Club next Thursday night, at which it is expected every active veteran and honorary member living within a reasonable distance of New York will be present. Gen. George Moore Smith is among those invited. Company A, Capt. Townsend, held a very successful dinner at the armory a few nights since, at which the cooking was done in the regimental kitchen by a detail of members of the company under the supervision of Regimental Commissary Myers. The detail from the company who provided a dinner that would have honored veteran chefs was: G. W. Lyons, H. D. Nichols, J. Vassor, W. A. Paepke, H. S. Hull, J. Dixon, Jr., R. F. Cartwright, Jr., A. W. McKeon, E. A. Webber, J. G. Geoghegan, A. Rohe, and D. A. Ferguson. The bill of fare consisted of soup, baked potatoes, porterhouse steak, country butter, cauliflower, French rolls, coffee, and bread pudding with brandy sauce. The rations were cooked to perfection. Among those who enjoyed the dinner and were loud in their praises of its excellence were Col. Appleton and Major Abrams. Professional musicians furnished music during the dinner.

In the Twenty-third Regiment, Capt. Charles W. Kayser, who was recently elected, has been commissioned and has assumed command of his company. It is as yet uncertain who the likely candidate will be to succeed Col. Smith when that officer hands in his resignation on Jan. 8. The annual meeting of the officers' association will be held on Saturday evening, Jan. 6, at the armory. Battalion Adjt. A. C. Van Benschoten, recently appointed, has passed the Brigade Board.

The new armory of the Forty-seventh Regiment, which was formally opened last Thursday evening by a review before Major Gen. Roe, is now said to be the largest in the United States. The ceremonies of the evening were very successful.

In the Twelfth Regiment the principal event of interest is the review by Major Gen. Daniel Butterfield next Thursday night and the reception to follow. A large number of well-known officers have received invitations to be present. In addition to the review there will be a guard mount and evening parade. Company I, Capt. Smith, has decided to hold monthly entertainments after drill, which promise to be very interesting to the members of the company and its friends. The first entertainment will be held about the second Thursday in January. The non-commissioned staff officers of the regiment have formed an organization with the following civil officers: President—Sergt. Major John S. Adair; Secretary—Sergt. Major L. V. Meehan; Treasurer—Drum Major Alexander Menzis. The Executive Committee consists of Color Bearer John McDermott, Ordnance Sergt. John Corrie, and Quartermaster Sergt. T. J. Coloe. Mr. Roger Winter, from civil life, who was highly recommended, has been elected Second Lieutenant of Company H. Ex-Lieut. N. T. Robb of the One Hundred and Twelfth Regiment has been elected First Lieutenant in Company C. Col. Dyer has appointed Sergt. Laughlin of Company C Chief Marker for the indoor range. The Sergeant has just qualified as an expert on a score of 72 out of 75 points.

There will be two elections held in Company C, Ninth Regiment, next Friday, to fill the vacancies caused by the death of the Seward brothers, who held commissions in that company when the regiment went to Chickamauga, and who died of fever. Company H, Capt. Young, gave a fine smoker at the armory the other evening. Privates Cryer, Thompson, and Coghlan, Sergt. Sheriff, Lieut. Parker, and Private Owens of Company G furnished most of the amusement. Capt. Young is deservedly proud of the abilities of his men as entertainers. Lieut. Healey is temporarily in command of Company E, in the absence of Capt. Pickhardt. Some of the men complain of the long sessions of the Board of Officers on headquarters nights. Some of the members of Company F say they have almost forgotten how Capt. Marks looks, he stays so long in the meeting of the officers.

Company B of the Seventy-first Regiment has re-elected Fred M. Pierson Treasurer and Corp. William Moore Secretary. At the annual meeting it was announced that the company was entirely free of debt and had a snug balance in the treasury on hand. The twelfth anniversary of the company will be held on Feb. 8, and there will be a celebration of the event. Corp. James Eben, the head of the company's rifle committee, is busy working up the shooting material of the company in the hope of getting back the bronzes which once were the exclusive property of the company, but have now gone to adorn other rooms. It is expected that former Capt. Clinton H. Smith will be the guest of honor at the anniversary ceremonies. Company H has elected ex-Lieut. Little of the One Hundred and Seventy-first Regiment First Lieutenant. Battalion Quartermasters Whittal and Beatty and Lieuts. Blauvelt and Hudson have passed the board.

There is still a vacancy on the staff of Gen. George Moore Smith of the Fifth Brigade for an Assistant Inspector and an aide. It is expected the vacancies will shortly be filled.

The members of the First Battery, Capt. Wendel, will attend a sociable next Friday night after drill. The preparations for the grand annual review, reception, and ball to be held on the evening of Jan. 10 are progressing, and everything points to one of the most successful events in the history of the battery.

The projected review of the Sixty-ninth Regiment, to be held during Christmas week, has been abandoned, and in its place there was a regimental drill and inspection last Friday night. An election for a Lieutenant Colonel and two Majors, it is expected, will soon be ordered, and the chances for promotion are already exciting a number of the officers. Among those who are expected to be in the field are Capts. E. T. McCrystal, John E. Duffey, Daniel Devlin, Anthony J. Griffin, and James Lynch. It is not impossible that there may be several other aspirants. Ex-Lieut. Bryan, who served in the One Hundred and Sixty-ninth Regiment, has been elected a First Lieutenant of Company A.

A large turnout is promised at the review of the Thirteenth Regiment next Wednesday night at the armory by Borough President Edward M. Grout of Brooklyn. Col. David Austen, who was ecently elected, will be in command. Following the review there will be a dance. Company I will hold an election for Captain next Wednesday night. There will be several candidates, it is said. Company H will hold an election for both First and Second Lieutenants on Jan. 4 next.

Ordnance Sergt. Lent of the Forty-seventh Regiment, who was recently elected Second Lieutenant of Company N, has declined the office. Company K has decided to hold some games at the armory on Jan. 12 next, open only to members of the company.

Company A of the Fourteenth Regiment is arranging a bicycle meet to be held in the armory on Feb. 2 next.

Members of the Twelfth are much pleased by the creditable record of the baseball team of the regiment in the Armory Baseball Association. Last Saturday the team of the Twenty-second was defeated 25 to 11, and on the previous Saturday the Ninth was vanquished by a score of 21 to 9. Last night a game with the Seventy-first was scheduled. Col. Dyer is manifesting a lively interest in the team of the Twelfth, being present at the game with the Twenty-second last week in company with a number of his officers, and after the game tendered the team an informal treat, in honor of their good work. The following members of the regiment comprise the team: Taylor, Fitch, Williamson, and Emmet, "D"; Torrance, Loughlin, and Mandel, "C"; Harney, Docharty, and Donahue, "F"; Blake, "K," and Brady, Hospital Corps.

GOSSIP ABOUT BASEBALL.

There appears to be no longer any doubt that the circuit of the National League and American Association of Baseball Clubs will be reduced to eight or ten clubs before the season of 1900 opens. The condition of affairs in the past two seasons makes it imperative to take some step to uphold the interest, which has been on the decrease because of the poor teams that have represented several of the cities. A reduction of the circuit is the only way out of the dilemma, and a committee has been working to bring about this change since the League meeting adjourned a week ago. This committee has made good progress thus far, despite reports to the contrary. The reports that the Brooklyn-Baltimore combination is trying to block the work of reducing the circuit because it was penalized for its dealings in the Wrigley case is not given much credence. At first the combination did threaten to fight the League and carry its case into the courts unless the fine imposed for signing Wrigley was remitted, but a change has come over the combination, which consists of Messrs. Abell, Ebbets, Von der Horst, and Hanlon, and it is now ready to enter into any fair business proposition with the League regarding Baltimore relinquishing its franchise in the League.

The first proposition to buy out the Cleveland, Louisville, Baltimore, and Washington Clubs caused these clubs' owners to fix a selling price that was not at all unexpected. About $163,000 was the value these club owners placed on their holdings. The Baltimore Club is the only one that could claim a fabulous price for its team. As for Cleveland and Louisville, both these clubs have a depleted treasury, and will have to drop out of the League.

If these clubs consent to resign there will be a ten-club circuit. In arranging a schedule for ten clubs two clubs would remain idle every day excepting when the East was playing in the West and vice versa. The Washington and Baltimore Clubs would suffer mostly by such an arangement, as the schedule could be so arranged that they would get few Sunday games in the West. This would cause a steady loss for them which they could hardly keep up with for two years, when the twelve-club agreement expires.

The suggestion of John T. Brush and J. A. Hare of three leagues is expected, however, to bring about the desired result, satisfactory to all, and possibly without the League having to pay out a dollar to reduce the circuit. They suggest that Baltimore and Washington take franchises in the Eastern League and the Louisville and Cleveland club join the American or Western League. The once famous supplementary series among the winners of the three leagues would then be revived. In former years the series between the champions of the National League and the American Association were considered the banner games of the year.

The four clubs named to join other leagues could dispose of their most valuable players to National League clubs and realize a handsome sum besides securing a franchise in another league, where 25-cent baseball prevails, and expenses are much less. In the case of Baltimore and Washington there are players, who if their release were offered for sale would cause some lively bidding. Baltimore has at least seven players who would bring about $20,000. McGraw's release is estimated to be worth about $7,000, as he is one of the best players that ever wore a shoe, so to speak. New York wants him, and would bid high for his services.

It is said that the League, if it becomes necessary to buy out the four clubs, will then have the disposal of these players. They would be distributed among the eight clubs, strengthening each one, and this would bring about a keen contest for the pennant. New York would naturally want McGraw and one or two of the best pitchers. Brooklyn, in such a case, would also want McGraw, and it has been hinted that the Brooklyn Club would consent to Baltimore going into another league if it was assured of the services of McGraw and several other players.

The Circuit Committee is expected to have a favorable report ready in the near future. A special meeting of the League will then be called, and it is not unlikely that the Brooklyn-New York controversy over Wrigley will be revived. The payment of the five-hundred-dollar fine may not be urged, and as a compromise the fine imposed on the New York Club, the result of the Holmes case two years ago, is to be remitted. This is expected to bring about harmony.

The reduction of the League circuit to eight clubs means a great deal to local baseball enthusiasts. Andrew Freedman, President of the New York Club, has declared his intention to secure the best available team, and "Buck" Ewing has practically been selected to manage the team if everything is arranged satisfactorily.

NEWS OF THE BOWLERS.

The Baltimore Bowling League is making elaborate preparations for the entertainment of delegates from all over the country who are expected to attend the annual meeting of the American Bowling Congress that opens in Baltimore on June 9. The meeting will be of much importance. Many new leagues throughout the country will be admitted to membership, and the question of recognizing women's tournaments will also be considered.

The congress will, in all probability, be reorganized on the lines of the League of American Wheelmen. The plan of the cyclists' body will be carried out to the extent of organizing State divisions. Each division is to hold its annual championship meeting, the winners of which are to gather in a four days' meeting for the National championship, the business meeting of the congress to take place at the same time. Indianapolis, Chicago, and Louisville will made strong bids for this meeting in 1901.

There will probably be competition for the office of President for the ensuing year. Dr. J. H. Zwanzger of Baltimore and W. V. Thompson of Chicago have declared themselves available. Samuel Karpf will be re-elected Secretary, as it is almost entirely due to his efforts that the American Bowling Congress has reached its present state of efficiency.

There will be a number of matches of a National character decided during the four days of the meeting. In almost every instance the delegates are the foremost bowlers of the city they will represent.

It is not at all unlikely that the match between Charles Starr of New York and "Al" Silver of Brooklyn will be decided in Baltimore during the meeting. Silver and Starr are acknowledged to be two of the most expert bowlers in the country, and it should prove satisfactory to both to decide the question of supremacy on alleys entirely neutral.

The international tournament to be held under the auspices of the United Bowling Clubs of New York next Summer will receive the support of the members of the congress.

Burglaries at Mansfied, Mass.

ATTLEBOROUGH, Mass., Dec. 23.—Thieves made a raid in Mansfield last night, entering several stores and carrying away at least two wagon loads of booty, including clothing, small articles, and cash. The principal loser was A. J. Hartshorne, clothier, from whom suits worth $500 were taken. Less than a year ago the same store was robbed of about the same amount of goods.

Assaulted by a Drunken Boarder.

FINDLAY, Ohio, Dec. 23.—Edward Denham last night assaulted Dr. and Mrs. M. J. Marvin with a poker, and then shot himself. Dr. Marvin's arm was broken and Mrs. Marvin's arm was broken in two places. Denham had been drinking, and was asked by Mrs. Marvin for money due for board. Denham was well known at Marion, Ohio.

Burglars Rob a Post Office.

BUFFALO, Dec. 23.—A special to The News says burglars entered the Post Office at Nunda early this morning, opened the safe with dynamite, and stole $300 in stamps and money. All of the money order blanks were taken.

Engine Plunges Into a Station.

EL PASO, Texas, Dec. 23.—A Southern Pacific switch engine jumped the track while passing the passenger station yesterday and plunged headlong into the baggage room, utterly demolishing it. One man was killed and two persons were injured.

VICTIM OF NEW YORK THUGS.

In San Francisco Mrs. Kaerston Tells a Story of Robbery Committed in This City.

Special to The New York Times.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 24.—Mrs. Thomas Kaerston, a victim of New York thugs, arrived here yesterday on an overland train with her mind and health shattered and the possibility that her reason will never be fully restored.

Mrs. Kaerston's story is most strange. Her home is in Fort Leavenworth, Kan. She arrived in New York from Sweden after a prolonged visit about Dec. 1. Her husband was here, and Mrs. Kaerston informed him of her arrival by mail, but failed to name her address. Kaerston wired to the Rev. Mr. Peterson, in Paterson, N. J., asking him to locate her by advertisement and advise her that he, Peterson, had $700 for her. Peterson advertised, as directed, and the next day Mrs. Kaerston called and secured the money, with instructions to purchase a first-class ticket to Fort Leavenworth, where she would be joined by her husband.

The woman returned to New York and made all arrangements for departure. Then she started down Broadway, and on her arrival at a point near the Sixth Avenue elevated road she was grasped from behind, chloroformed, and hustled into a hack. She remembers being driven to a hotel on the Bowery, where she was given another dose of chloroform which rendered her unconscious. The thieves tore open her waist and stole her money, nearly $700. They also took her ticket to Fort Leavenworth and her baggage check, and went to the ticket office and changed it for a second-class ticket to San Francisco and checked her baggage accordingly.

In a semi-comatose condition Mrs. Kaerston was placed aboard the train which left New York last Monday night, and the men, who put her in charge of the conductor, said she had been drinking and would no doubt be herself in the morning.

When she arrived at Ogden she was violently insane. Dr. Thomas, who happened to be traveling west on the same train, noticed chloroform burns and other evidences of the drug on the woman's lips. He took her into his care, and by next morning she was able to talk coherently. She knew she had been robbed, but did not know where she was. When the train officials searched her clothing and found her waist ripped and other evidences of having been roughly dealt with, they finally believed her.

Dr. Thomas has sent her to a private hospital, where she will be cared for until her husband arrives from Fort Leavenworth.

MRS. JOHNSON FATALLY BURNED

Mother of Chairman of Democratic Executive Committee Cannot Live.

Special to The New York Times.

PEORIA, Ill., Dec. 24.—Mrs. Johnson, seventy-five years old, mother of J. C. Johnson, Chairman of the Democratic National Executive Committee, was severely burned early this evening, and cannot live. She is a member of a prominent family of Chillicothe, Peoria County, where the accident occurred.

Mrs. Johnson was lighting a lamp, and the match fell from her hand, setting fire to her dress. Her clothes were burned from her body, and she inhaled flame and smoke.

Efforts to Raise a Race Horse Fail.

Special to The New York Times.

LEXINGTON, Ky., Dec. 24.—For the third time the attempt of Mrs. Sallie McClelland to get a race horse bred in accordance with the expressed wish of her late husband has failed. Friday night the fine wealing colt out of Sallie McClelland, by Henry of Navarre, died of a disease resembling laryngitis. The two former foals of the mare had mishaps, one of them dying, and the other having a hip injured. Mrs. McClelland has also lost a yearling by Henry of Navarre, dam Bettie C., and a weanling by Bermuda, dam Mattie Kenney, of the same disease.

STEAMER WRECKED; 21 MEN DROWNED

The British Vessel Ariosto Ashore Near Hatteras.

NINE OF HER CREW SAVED

Were Taken Off the Wreck in a Breeches Buoy.

CAPE HENRY, Va., Dec. 24.—The British steamer Ariosto, Capt. Baines, bound from Galveston to Hamburg, was wrecked at 4 o'clock this morning, six miles south of Hatteras, N. C., and twenty-one of the crew were drowned. Capt. Baines and eight of the crew were saved by the heroic efforts of the Ocracoke life-saving crew, under Capt. James Howard.

Those who lost their lives attempted to reach the shore in a small boat, which was swamped shortly after it put off from the ship. Capt. Baines and the eight men remained aboard and were landed by the life savers in the breeches buoy, but not until after a struggle which lasted all day. Wrecking tugs are on the way from here to the scene of the wreck, and if they reach the stranded ship in time may save it, as the wind to-night is in the wrecked vessel's favor.

The Ariosto wreck is the worst on these shores since the German ship Elizabeth went ashore in 1876, when fifty-five persons were drowned.

Thick fogs have prevailed along the Virginia and North Carolina coasts for several days, and a number of vessels have narrowly escaped destruction. Last night, however, the air was clear, but the wind averaged from forty to fifty miles an hour and the sea was furious around the point which has been designated as the "Graveyard of American Shipping."

The Ariosto, a vessel of 2,265 tons, sailed from Galveston for Hamburg, via Norfolk, on Dec. 17. The skipper, Capt. Baines, and his crew, consisting of twenty-nine men, were all British. The Ariosto, which had a general cargo, had all the way from port encountered heavy weather. The coast patrol from Ocracoke was returning to the station about 4 o'clock this morning when he discovered a big ship ashore. He immediately lighted a signal to notify those aboard that they were discovered and ran to the station to arouse those of the life-savers who were not on duty.

LIFE SAVERS AT WORK.

Against the fierce wind the life savers then dragged the heavy apparatus, consisting of the Lisle gun, breeches, and life car, and it was almost daylight when they reached the scene of the wreck. They could see the outlines of a big steamer, but could not accomplish anything until daybreak.

The wind caught up particles of sand, which were blown into the faces of the life savers until their cheeks were cut as if by a rawhide.

When daylight broke the sailors were seen huddled together on the wrecked ship, waving their arms in an appeal to be saved. To launch a boat in such a sea would have meant instant death, so the life savers placed their gun in position and fired. The Ariosto was some 600 feet out and the line fell short. Line after line was fired to the stranded ship, but all failed to reach.

In the meantime the waves were dashing over the ship and Capt. Baines called his men together for a consultation, explaining to them that the chances were about even if they should take to the small boats or wait for the life saving crew to fire a life line on board. So far as he was concerned, the Captain said, he would wait for the life savers, but he left it to the crew to decide among themselves.

SAILORS GO TO DEATH.

Eight sailors said they would stick by the Captain. These were saved. Twenty-one declared they were doomed if they remained aboard and they left the ship in small boats. All of them lost their lives.

The boat in which the twenty-one men put off was one of the regular lifeboats. It was strong in ordinary weather, but a cockleshell in such a sea. The ship was tossing heavily, and with difficulty it was swung from the davits.

The twenty-one men, in their excitement, made no provision for the overturning of the craft, and one by one they clambered in, in haste to go to their deaths. Capt. Baines and the remaining eight men from their perilous position watched the little boat put off, shouting luck to the departing sailors.

Tossing about on the great waves, the sailors pulling a strong stroke, the boat seemed in a fair way of reaching shore, when a wave swept with mighty force on the little craft, ingulfing it. The twenty-one men were thrown into the sea, and, although the watchers on shore were witnesses of the disaster, they were powerless to render aid.

The sea swallowed the unfortunate men only for an instant, for they appeared high on the crest of a wave, making a last desperate fight for their lives. Finally, one by one, they sank out of sight.

Capt. Baines of the wrecked vessel, as he saw his men perish—this mariner who had sailed the world over for twenty-five years—wept like a child.

LIFE LINE TO THE SHIP.

Meanwhile the Ocracoke life saving crew stood its ground and continued firing lines to the stranded ship. About four hours after the Ariosto first struck a life line was cast over the ship's side. Cap. Baines and his remaining men made it fast and an hour later they had dragged the big hawser aboard.

The life savers slowly ran out the breeches buoy and it reached the ship in safety. Through the blinding spray the men were then, one by one, hauled to shore, more dead than alive, and by nightfall all were safe.

When the disaster was made known here wrecking tugs started for the scene, and it is a matter of steam against time if they succeeded in reaching the Ariosto before the vessel goes to pieces.

The Ariosto was seven years old and was owned by R. McAndrews & Co. of London.

DANIEL SHARP FORD DEAD.

Editor and Proprietor of The Youth's Companion Passes Away in Boston —His Modesty and Ability.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Dec. 24.—Daniel Sharp Ford, for more than forty years the proprietor, publisher, and editor in chief of the Youth's Companion, died at his home on the Fenway early this morning. He had, in spite of advancing years and frail health, been actively at work in the oversight and control both of the publishing and the editorial departments of the great establishment he had built up, until within a few weeks of his death.

Mr. Ford was born at Cambridge, April 5, 1822. In early life he learned the printers' trade, and while still a very young man formed with the late Rev. Dr. John W. Olmstead the partnership of Olmstead & Ford, publishers and editors of the Baptist weekly newspaper then known as The Christian Watchman and Reflector. In 1857 they purchased from Nathaniel Willis, its founder and editor for forty years, the Youth's Companion. Mr. Ford had an ambition to make The Watchman the leading religious paper in the country, and devoted his efforts to the publishing department of that paper, while acting as editor of The Companion.

Differences as to policy between the partners led to an amicable separation of interests and a division of the property. The division was by lot and greatly to Mr. Ford's regret The Companion became his share. In order to avoid confusion of accounts, it had been published for some years under the fictitious and wholly invented firm name of Perry, Mason & Co., and under that form it has continued to be published to the present time.

Mr. Ford transferred all his energies to the development of The Companion, and to him are due the marvelous growth and the present standing of that paper. His business insight and foresight, his inventive genius in devising new ways of increasing circulation, his ready adoption of methods proposed by others, and his courageous expenditure of money in the process, stamped his as one of the great publishers of the country. No man ever kept a more watchful eye upon the contents of his paper, down to the most insignificant paragraph.

Yet, so far as is known, the name of Mr. Ford has never once been printed in The Companion, for he was as modest as he was strong, and shrunk from public mention of himself, his deeds and his achievements. Mr. Ford's life was also a life of widespread benefaction, of deep religious feeling, of constant well-doing. No list of his benevolences could be made now, nor could have been made even by him. He was devotedly attached to the Baptist denomination, and naturally turned most frequently to the assistance of those of his own household of faith. The Ruggles Street Church of this city was very largely indebted to him, and one of his characteristic benevolences was sending its male quartet abroad to complete the musical education which has made the organization famous.

He leaves a wife and a daughter, who is the wife of Publisher Hartshorn of The Household.

TO FILL ARMY VACANCIES.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 24.—Gen. Miles has proposed to the War Department a plan for relieving to some extent the scarcity of trained officers in the field. The Inspector Generals say that the service is hampered by the fact that some of the officers are inexperienced. Thirty-nine officers attached to foreign stations have returned on extended sick leave, and Gen. Miles says that in many cases Second Lieutenants have commands which are properly those of Majors.

Gen. Miles wants the vacancies, sixty or seventy in number, which exist in the grade of Second Lieutenant to be filled by West Pointers. He proposes that the fifty-four members of the first class at West Point be graduated soon after Feb. 15. This will do away with most of the difficulties mentioned, and will also, he thinks, be only fair to the young men, as otherwise appointees from civil life will get the Lieutenancies ahead of them and block their way to promotion.

Gen. Corbin, however, is opposed to the plan, and the result has been another clash between the two officers.

GOVERNMENT ETHER EXPLODES.

Special to The New York Times.

NEWPORT, Dec. 24.—There was an explosion of ether at the torpedo station this morning. Flames immediately enveloped the drums in which the chemical was stored, and the officers and men of the station and the torpedo boats lying off shore hastened to fight the fire.

Heroic efforts were made to prevent the flames from reaching the gun cotton building, about 50 feet away, and after almost an hour's fighting the fire was put under control and all danger averted.

The gun cotton building has suffered twice from explosions and fires, the first time in 1893, when three men were killed, and again in 1898.

HUNTERS FRIGHTEN CHILDREN.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 24.—A curious complaint has been made to the District Commissioners, as a result of which they are considering the advisability of an order prohibiting the discharge of firearms within the limits of the District.

The school at the suburb called Langdon, is hidden from view by trees. It seems that the neighborhood of the school is constantly visited by hunters, and that hardly a day goes by that the lessons are not interrupted by the sound of firearms. The worst of it is that bullets whizz around the schoolhouse, and sometimes hit it. The children know it and are thrown into a panic when they hear the sound of the shots.

The sweeping order will probably not be adopted, but something will be done to save the schoolhouse from being made a target.

DIED IN A CEMETERY.

Special to The New York Times.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 24.—Death claimed a victim at an unusual time and place yesterday afternoon. William Hopple, sixty-five years old, died in the cemetery, where he had gone to decorate the grave of his son.

Once a month, relatives stated, it was the custom of Hopple to go to the grave in Wesleyan Cemetery and place flowers on the plot in which lay all that was mortal of the one who had passed before. Yesterday when he left home Mr. Hopple was apparently in usual health. As he stepped from the car he met Patrolman Kosterkamp and asked the aid of the policeman, saying he was feeling weak.

He was assisted to the house occupied by the sexton, Mr. Pugh, and as he sat down asked for a drink of water. He had hardly finished drinking when the end came, the flowers intended for the son's grave falling from his lifeless hand.

RUSSIAN CHURCH FOR CHICAGO.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Dec. 24.—At the suggestion of the Czar, 20,000 rubles have been donated by the Russian Government for the purpose of building in Chicago an edifice for the members of the Orthodox Russian Church. A site has been selected at Haddon and Leavitt Streets on the West Side. Bishop Tychon of the Orthodox Russian Church is here arranging for the expenditure of the money. His headquarters are in San Francisco. He will remain in Chicago until after New Year's Day, when he will go East with Dean Ivan Nedzelnitsky of Alexander Nevsky Church, Allegheny, Penn. The Bishop, whose jurisdiction extends over the United States and Canada, will stop in Allegheny and Pittsburg and then go to New York.

The site for the new building has been purchased. Vassily Pristash is the Church Trustee and Vassily Andregevitch the Secretary of its Brotherhood of St. Nicholas. Plans are being formed for the awarding of the contracts and for the management and maintenance of the church.

FOUGHT UNDER GEN. R. E. LEE.

ORANGE, N. J., Dec. 24.—Col. Samuel R. Johnstone died from paralysis at his home, 82 East Park Street, East Orange, to-day. He was born in Fairfax County, Va., in 1833. He was a civil engineer and a descendant of George Johnstone, who is said to have written the resolution introduced by Patrick Henry which led to his "liberty or death" speech.

When the civil war broke out Col. Johnstone was on a train bound for the West. The news that Sumter had been fired upon was brought into the train by a new-comer. When he heard of it Col. Johnstone jumped up and pulled the bellcord to stop the train. He alighted from the train and hurried back to Virginia. He raised a company in Fairfax County, was with Gen. Lee during most of his campaigns, and at the surrender to Grant was a Colonel. He immediately resumed his profession, and was connected with the Baltimore and Ohio, the Ohio and Missouri, and for the last thirteen years with the Erie. He retired from active duty three years ago, although being retained by the company in an advisory capacity. He had lived in the Oranges for thirteen years. He was twice married. A son by his first marriage and his second wife and two children survive him. He was a member of Grace Episcopal Church, this city, and the funeral services will be held there on Tuesday. The body will be taken to Virginia for interment.

THE BRAZNELL MINE DISASTER.

Number of Dead About 40—Charges Made that Miners Were Ordered to Carry Naked Lights.

PITTSBURG, Dec. 24.—The horror of the Braznell Mine disaster, near Brownsville, grows in intensity with every hour. The number of the dead is now estimated at forty, and may pass that figure. At the same time there is a strong presumption that the laws regulating mining were carelessly and probably criminally disregarded.

The estimate of the number of the dead are conflicting. A. B. Braznell, President of the Stockdale Coal Company, this afternoon said he believed that but twenty to twenty-five men had been killed. Men who were working around the mine yesterday morning give different figures. They say thirty-five to forty men were down the main shaft in the cages, while about twenty climbed down the steps in the elevator shaft. From fifty-five to sixty men were in the mine, and of this number but twelve have been recovered alive. All the rest, whatever the number, are dead.

John, or as he is popularly known, "Jonah" Meese, is one of the thirteen men who escaped from the mine alive. He is fearfully burned, and is lying at his home with his head swathed in bandages. He told his story to-day:

"I was in the stable," Meese said, "carrying my mule, when the explosion occurred. My brother Sam was by my side and his boy Albert was standing in front of him. Then came the crack of the explosion. Never in my life have I heard such a terrific report. I thought my head had been blown off. In about two seconds the mine was filled with dazzling light, as the fine coal dust in the air was consumed. My brother Sam dropped to the ground as if shot through the heart. He must have been killed instantly. His boy Albert swayed and fell over upon his father. I began to back out of the stable, that is why my face is so terribly burned. I was afraid to turn my back upon the mules for fear they would stampede and run me down. I did not know then they had all been killed by the explosion, for our lamps were blown out and we were in total darnness.

"After I got out of the stable I heard Albert crying for help. I went back and found him and Harry Atwood, a driver. I proceeded, half leading and half carrying them to the foot of the mine shaft. They were both delirious, and I believe I was, too. Both of them persisted in standing up, and began to walk around. I immediately forced them to lie down, to get them out of the path of the fatal afterdamp which hovered about four feet above the ground. Then I felt myself going to sleep, but I did not care, although I realized that it was the sleep of death. I laid down upon something which I could feel, although I could not see, was a corpse, and fell asleep as calmly as ever I did in my life. When I awoke somebody was forcing me to swallow brandy and coffee, and I was trying to explain that it would be needless for me to drive a wagon, as there had been an accident in the mine.

Evidence of the force of the explosion was discovered to-day. On the hillside fifty feet back from the main shaft were discovered an arm and a foot. They were portions of a victim killed 100 feet below the surface and blown out of the shaft like a bullet from a rifle.

From statements obtained to-day it seems clear that the presence of gas in quantities in the mine was perfectly well known, and that naked lights were used for several days before the explosion. William Pastorious, a driver in the mine, tells a sensational story. He has lived in Brownsville for many years and is regarded as a man of intelligence.

"The miners always prefer to use naked lights," said Pastorious, "whenever possible, as they give better light and are more easily handled. I have been working here a couple of months and used a safty lamp until last Tuesday morning. At that time mine safeties were in use by drivers and others who were constantly moving about the mine, and therefore exposed to greater risk than a digger in a room. Contrary to the mining regulations, the safety lamps in use were in many cases unlocked. The safeties were provided by the company as usual, and they should be locked, so that it is impossible for a miner to open them while at work. My lamp was unlocked and I frequently opened and closed it. On Tuesday the pit boss, Mr. Jones, issued an order that the men could use open lamps, and they of course discarded the safety, which made a poorer light. About 100 yards from the bottom of the main shaft there was a fall which had been boarded up and in which the gas stood against the roof. I think it was this gas which exploded."

Superintendent Boyer, who is the superior of Pit Boss Jones, when told of the above statement, said: "I know nothing of the order to dispense with safety-lamps." He would make no further statement.

HID IN WATER UP TO HER NECK.

Woman Accused of Bigamy and a Fugitive, Found by the Officers Almost Unconscious in a Well.

Special to The New York Times.

BINGHAMTON, N. Y., Dec. 24.—Mrs. A. B. Loomis of Aurora, Ill., who was wanted by the police on a charge of bigamy, gave the officers who attempted to arrest her a battle and nearly lost her life by hiding in a well, standing on a ladder to her neck in the water. Mrs. Loomis had been traced to the village of Hamilton, a short distance from here, and was found residing at the home of Orson Beede.

Constable Mooney, armed with a warrant, tried to arrest her. He went to the Beede house and was refused admission, although he told Beede his errand. The occupants of the house barricaded the doors and prepared to resist with guns. Mooney returned to the village, raised a posse, and armed them with revolvers from the village hardware store. He then returned to the house, but the occupants, seeing the posse approach, fled.

The place was searched for Mrs. Loomis, but no trace of her could be found. It was thought she had escaped until Mooney happened to move a chair standing on a piece of carpet and discovered a trap door underneath. This he raised, and by the light of a lantern he could discern a black object on top of the water, which on investigation proved to be a human head. Mrs. Loomis was standing to her neck in water and her body was stiff with cold. When the officer approached she slipped from the ladder unconscious, and but for his timely arrival would inevitably have drowned.

TWO WOMEN IN A RUNAWAY.

Something frightened a team of horses which stood attached to a coach in Thirty-fourth Street, near Third Avenue, last night, and breaking away they ran west at high speed. Driver John O'Brien was thrown from his seat, but escaped with slight bruises.

Two handsomely gowned young women were in the coach. They realized their peril almost instantly, and one of them managed to open the door. She jumped out, falling heavily on her face. Her companion fell back in a swoon. The woman who jumped cut her face in several places, but escaped serious injury.

Policemen Kenny and Ray of the East Thirty-fifth Street Station stopped the team near Lexington Avenue. The former was slightly hurt. One of the horses stepping on his foot. Both women declined to give their names or to accept medical assistance. The driver mounted his box as quickly as his team was returned to him and drove away. He gave his name, but would not disclose his address.

MOSS ARRAIGNS THE RULE OF TAMMANY

Popular Government Broken Down Under Its Influence.

AGAINST AMERICAN IDEAL

Mayor's Power, the Mazet Counsel Declares, Is Wholly Nullified.

CROKER ACTUAL HEAD

Report to Investigating Committee Urges Removal Power Coextensive with Mayoralty Term—Police and Tax Departments Arraigned—Members Refuse to Discuss Recommendations.

Frank Moss and Francis E. Laimbeer have presented their report as counsel to the Mazet investigating committee. It is in the form of a printed pamphlet of 101 pages, and is addressed to Chairman Robert Mazet.

The report is not signed by John Proctor Clarke, who was associated with them as counsel.

They begin by quoting the two resolutions of the last Assembly by which the work of the committee was authorized, showing that while the original intention was to inquire simply regarding alleged corruption and lax enforcement of laws in this city, the committee finally was authorized to conduct a general investigation of the City Government.

They declare that voluntary witnesses were hard to find, the city Government being in the hands of "that organization which is claimed and conceded to be the most successful and powerful existing exponent of the spoils system."

Nearly every branch of the city administration, it is declared, "stood offensively on the defensive."

DISTRICT ATTORNEY SCORED.

The District Attorney, it is charged, became an open enemy of the committee—inveighed against its powers and disobeyed its subpoenas.

In view of the difficulties mentioned and the lack of time, it is said that the committee was not able to do all the work it desired.

The report is presented in three parts, the first of which deals with fundamental defects which are believed to exist in the charter, and the influences affecting and controlling the City Government in connection with those defects.

Under this head attention is called to the powers possessed by the various Commissioners appointed by the Mayor, but whom he is unable to remove after their first six months in office. These powers are declared to be in violation of the ideals of American government.

While the Commissioners are free from the control of the Mayor, they are declared to be subject to the will of the leader of Tammany Hall. Their concurring actions in the various attacks on the Manhattan Railway are pointed to in proof of this assertion.

CITY RULED AT CROKER'S CLUB.

The Democratic Club is referred to indirectly as the place from which the City Government is run.

The Commissioners are said to enjoy opportunities, which, without violating the criminal law, enable them to look forward composedly to retirement at the end of one official term.

Referring by inference to the testimony of Richard Croker, it is declared that his disclosures of avenues by which public money, or private money publicly influenced, may flow into his pockets, are so rich that vast wealth may be accounted for without proving the violation of criminal statutes.

The names of the leaders of Tammany Hall and their relations to the City Government are presented in detail, and, it is argued, by quotations from the evidence of Dock Commissioner Murphy and Charities Commissioner Lantry, that it is held to be the first duty of every Commissioner to look first to the interests of his political organization rather than to those of the city.

ON THE MAYOR'S TERM.

Upon this statement of conditions alleged to exist it is recommended that the Mayor's power of removal should be coextensive with his term; that he should be required to oversee the work of his appointees, and that he should be responsible for their acts.

It is further recommended that the Mayor's term should be shortened to two years, and that he should be eligible for re-election, in which connection it is said: "A four-year term, with its present opportunities for self-enrichment is a great temptation, and would be such to any organization which might gain control of the city."

These changes in the charter, it is urged, should be made at once, and would reach the root of the trouble.

The fact that the Mayor is not informed of what his Commissioners are doing under the present system, and that he assumes no responsibility for their acts, is declared to be established by the testimony of Mayor Van Wyck and others regarding the proposed Ramapo water contract.

Attention is called to the execution of various contracts for opening and improving streets in the Bronx, awarded previous to 1898. A report of the Commissioners of Accounts upon this work is declared to constitute a complete indictment of the Department of Highways, and yet the Mayor did nothing.

The Mayor, it is said, should have removed the Commissioners of Accounts or disciplined the Commissioner of Highways, but he either dared not take the latter course because of Commissioner Keating's influence or because he did not think he could establish a case for removal which would satisfy the technical requirements of the courts.

Among other examples of great works which Commissioners have undertaken to originate without being checked or advised by the Mayor, are cited the locating of the Blackwell's Island and East River Bridges and the Newtown and Flushing Canal, and the mapping of Queens County, all in such a way as to affect many private interests.

The personnel of the Dock Department is criticised, especially Commissioner Murphy, in the light of his testimony regarding the bestowal of patronage.

TAX DEPARTMENT CRITICISED.

The operations of the Tax Department, it is asserted, have been characterized by unparalleled ignorance and unfairness.

The Board of Public Improvements is declared to possess dangerous powers, in view of its composition.

The smaller boroughs are said to lack proper representation in the Board of Estimate and Apportionment.

Boroughs, Borough Presidents, and local boards, it is declared, were created to serve for home rule, but have failed to accomplish their purpose, and, in a word, popular government has broken down in the city.

It is recommended that the Board of Public Improvements be abolished, by enlarging the class of matters which local boards or borough Presidents may adopt or send directly to the Municipal Assembly, and by directing the various Commissioners to meet with the Mayor at stated intervals.

The Board of Estimate and Apportionment, it is suggested, should be relieved of the Corporation Counsel and the President of the Tax Department, and should contain the five Borough Presidents.

The Municipal Assembly, it is declared, should be reduced to one body, the Board of Aldermen, with the Borough Presidents. Its members should be compelled to attend its sessions, and should receive $2,000 a year salary. It should have power to originate and to amend important measures.

Counsel declare that they have been unable to ascertain the number of city employes or the amount paid for salaries, but that both have been greatly increased since consolidation. They recommend the prompt enactment of a law compelling every head of a department to furnish a monthly statement of the number of his employes and the amount of his payroll.

CHAPTER ON CROKER.

A long chapter is devoted to Mr. Croker and his absolute control of the city government and the nomination of candidates, and attention is called with emphasis to his refusal to testify on many points, as well as to his admissions of using his power to make money.

In Part II. of the report, headed "Collateral Matters," counsel first attack the letting of contracts by the Dock Commissioners and recommend that these contracts should be approved by the Mayor and the Controller before becoming effective.

They assert that the Corporation Counsel should be stripped of the power to consent to the entry of judgments against the city.

They recommend that no more than $5,000,000 of city bonds be sold at one time.

They urge that the time for the payment of taxes be quickened a month in every year until tax day shall fall on Jan. 1, thus bringing the city's funds in at the beginning of the fiscal year.

TAX REFORMS URGED.

They recommend the following reforms in the taxation system of the city:

First—The abolition of personal taxes on individuals unless the Legislature is willing to require the making of statements by all residents.

Second—Provision for a more thorough examination of corporations.

Third—Provision for the separate valuation of land, and the improvements thereon.

Fourth—Deputy Tax Commissioners should be required to have some special qualification for their work, and should not be permitted to assess in boroughs in which they do not reside or do business.

Fifth—Property owners should have the right prior to the assessment to present to the Tax Commissioners their claims as to the value of their properties, and the valuation should not become fixed until such opportunity has been afforded, or they should have notice of the proposed assessments on their own and neighboring properties.

Sixth—The law should hold the Tax Commissioners responsible for the general oversight and the general instruction of the deputies.

The creation of a special board or commision of condemnation is recommended, to take the place of hundreds of minor commissions.

ATTACKS RAMAPO CHARTER.

The committee is advised to request the Legislature to repeal the charter of the Ramapo Water Company, and to amend Section 471 of the charter so as to make contracts for water supply subject to the general requirements for all other great contracts, and to repeal Section 1,619 as having absolutely no relation to the charter, but as perhaps injuring by implication the city's rights in the matter of water supply.

Counsel also recommend the passage of a law prohibiting political contributions by judicial candidates.

They also favor the passage of a law prohibiting the granting to private individuals of franchises for public improvements within or entering into the city limits, without the consent of the city authorities.

BUILDING CODE CONDEMNED.

The new Building Code is condemned, together with the present administration of the Building Department, and on this point counsel say in conclusion: "We recommend the prompt abolition of the Board of Examiners and the leaving of appeals from individual Commissioners to the Board of Commissioners, as is now contemplated in the charter, pending the construction and enactment of a decent building code."

The District Attorney comes in for severe criticism, it being declared that his office "partakes of the general characteristics of the present city government in its absolutism; its impatience of control or inquiry, in its disregard of the interests of individuals and in its discriminations favoring some and injuring others."

This portion of the report concludes with a sweeping condemnation of the Police Department as inefficient and demoralized. As a remedy counsel recommend the passage of the State Constabulary bill.

CONTEMPT OF WITNESSES.

Part III. of the report is entitled "Contempts." The following witnesses are reported for refusal to testify: Richard Croker, John F. Carroll, Andrew Freedman, James A. Mahoney, Asa Bird Gardiner, Silas B. Dutcher, and Peter B. Nostrand. Counsel add:

"Certain witnesses were guilty of contemptuous and outrageous conduct and language, notably James K. Price, Henry C. Henderson, George Kraus, Isaac Fromme; but, as the law defining contempts before legislative committees makes no mention of contemptuous behavior it seems to be doubtful whether this question of misconduct can be made a subject of punitive proceedings. These violations of decorum and infractions of the dignity of the Assembly are reported simply that the Assembly may consider its own interests."

NO OPINIONS ON THE REPORT.

Mr. Hoffman and Mr. Mazet Will Not Discuss It—Mr. Moss's Personal Document.

Mr. Moss said yesterday that he had written the report at the request of the committee and that it was his report as counsel to the committee. He had sent two copies of the report to each member of the committee on Saturday night. Mr. Moss said that there would be a meeting of the committee on Thursday, probably at his office.

Benjamin Hoffman, Democratic member of the committee, when seen last night said: "I do not care to discuss Mr. Moss's report in any shape, manner, or form. It is his personal report, and not that of the committee. If I do not agree with the report of the committee, my differences will be submitted in the form of a minority report to the Legislature of 1900, in accordance with the resolution which called the committee into existence."

Mr. Mazet would not be seen last night, and John Proctor Clarke of counsel refused to be seen.

MR. MOSS'S REPORT GIVEN IN DETAIL

The Evils He Finds the Investigation Has Brought to Light.

The following is the report sent to Robert Mazet and signed by Frank Moss and Francis E. Laimbeer of counsel to the legislative investigating committee:

New York, December 22, 1899.

To the Honorable Robert Mazet, Chairman of the Special Committee of the Assembly for the Investigation of offices, &c., in the City of New York.

Dear Sir:—In pursuance of our duties as counsel to your committee, and of the request made at your meeting on Dec. 5, this report has been prepared.

The objects of the investigation were indicated in the original resolution by the following language:

"It is currently reported and generally believed that, if the City of New York, funds are being raised by levy upon members of the police force, saloon and resort keepers, and by other contributions for use in corruptly influencing legislation; that there is a lax enforcement of the laws in said city, and in the counties included in said city; that corrupt and tyrannical methods have been resorted to in the enforcement of the same, and that the public funds of said city are being wasted in extravagant increases of official salaries, and in other ways."

After an examination of the proofs that were available, counsel advised that it was doubtful whether the first statement could be demonstrated, and advised that the scope of the inquiry be widened so that the operation of the new charter and the spirit of its administration might be included more certainly in it, and drafted an additional resolution which, as adopted by the Assembly, contained this provision:

"Resolved, That the said committee be, and it hereby is, authorized and empowered to extend its examination and investigation into the occupation, character, composition, expenses, operation, conduct and control of any and every department and public office of the City of New York and of the counties therein included, and the influences affecting and controlling the officers therein, with full power to prosecute its inquiry in any and every direction in its judgment necessary and proper to enable it to ascertain and report the facts."

DIFFICULTY OF TASK.

In view of the latter resolution the investigation was conducted mainly as an inquiry into the government of Greater New York and into "the influences affecting and controlling the officers" therein; and the more certainly to accomplish this purpose counsel endeavored first to ascertain the original causes of the evils complained of, and then to trace the operation of those causes in the different departments and offices. Limitations of time and resources, and the inherent difficulties of the work, rendered it impossible to make a complete examination of the separate departments, but we believe that the plan adopted produced results that are possible of greater legislative benefit than any other could have been. The difficulty of the task was commensurate with its importance. The City Government was in the hands of that organization which is claimed and conceded to be the most successful and powerful existing exponent of the spoils system. It had nearly three years more to run, and its disposition to use its power was so manifest that voluntary complaining witnesses were hardly to be found. Nearly every branch of the government stood offensively on the defensive. For a long time the investigation was practically a quarrying operation on the hardest kind of rock. The Legislature being out of session, and the committee having no contempt power of its own, its protection from contempts and its vindication against recalcitrant witnesses devolved upon the District Attorney of New York County, where the sessions were held; but he, being an object of investigation under the resolution, became an open enemy of the committee—inveighed against its powers and disobeyed its subpoenas. With such an example it is no wonder that some witnesses were disrespectful and abusive, and that the committee was unable to force answers to some of its inquiries. The solidarity of the political system which had created not only the entire official force of the city, but even Judges on the bench, made an inquiry that included these leaders himself a trying task, and the limitations of power compelled counsel and committee to endure abuse and violent opposition, and to handle witnesses with caution and tact, striving by patience and persistence to overcome force and virulence. The conduct and testimony of defiant and recalcitrant witnesses was in itself the best evidence of the facts which counsel set out to prove, and which now stand out so clearly on our record as to be beyond denial, and this policy so disarmed offensive witnesses that they were led unconsciously to write their own characters and purposes as no legion of accusatory witnesses could have done it.

The experience of this committee is strongly contrasted with that law to effectively protect legislative inquiries.

REPORT IN THREE PARTS.

The report will be presented in three parts. This part will discuss certain fundamental defects which we believe exist in the charter and the influences affecting and controlling the City Government in connection with those defects, illustrating them from the testimony; the second part will present various collateral matters which were developed in the evidence and which seem to call for legislative action; the third will present the subject of contempts. All of the statements are presented with the object that we undertook at the outset, the discovery of points in which remedial legislation seems advisable, and the suggestion of such legislation.

As counsel have planned and carried on the work with this definite and well-known object, they will not hesitate to advise the committee and to recommend measures.

A complete index and brief of the testimony will be prepared, so that it may be quickly available to the Legislature, but that work cannot be done within the short time permitted for this report, and will have to be deferred to a later date.

We call attention to the fact that the greater part and the most valuable part of the investigation consists of documentary evidence and the testimony of the officers we were directed to investigate, and their associates and employes. To a remarkable degree we have been able to make our case without having to depend on the testimony of known criminals and without having to spread masses of filth over our pages. Only such parts of it will be quoted in this report as tersely illustrate our recommendations, a more thorough discussion being reserved for another time. Counsel regret that the committee was unable to hear all the evidence that they had secured and intended to present in order to complete the lines of their investigation, but they believe that the testimony they have taken is extensive enough and deep enough to warrant the Legislature in passing such laws as will make this investigation a useful and a memorable public service.

THE CITY GOVERNMENT.

The first natural inquiry is:

What is the character of the Government of New York City under the new charter as administered under the auspices of Tammany Hall? Does it conform to either republican or democratic or even to modern monarchical ideas? Is it, in its principal functions, representative of the people, and if not, what legislation will improve it? By an examination of the charter and of the testimony it will be seen that the immediate administration is confided to Commissioners appointed by the Mayor. Not only does each Commissioner have great powers of his own, but other great powers are conferred on the Board of Public Improvements in which the Commissioners have the controlling voice, and in which they, being dependent on each other, are inclined to combine, and so overcome the inadequate representation there of the popular vote. The Commissioners are logically the Cabinet officers of the Mayor; they were created originally to relieve him of the many executive and administrative duties that devolve upon him, but they have become independent of him, and they exercise powers such as should be intrusted only to the direct representative of the people or his subordinates. Though not elected, nor even selected by the people, their powers are greater than the powers of all elected officers. If the Commissioners were entirely responsible to the people, or to the chief representative of the people, or if their actions were watched over, advised, and co-ordinated by him, there could not be so great objection; but they are not so responsible, and are not held to any such responsibility, nor is any attempt made to direct or even to advise them. The Mayor had an absolute power of removal for six months, but that has expired. He can remove now only on legal charges and trial with the approval of the Governor of the State, and the removal is subject to review by the courts. He now washes his hands of them, and falls back on the charter, which prescribes their powers and his, and protects them from him, as though they were elected officials of the highest consequence and value. They, regardless of him, and of the people in many cases, proceed with the exercise of governmental functions of the highest nature and deal with the most valuable rights, practically secure from any interference and control, in the interests of the people. This is not according to the ideals of American government. It is true that by indifference or through ignorance the people may permit the best form of government to become despotic, but they are entitled at least to a form of government which will leave open to them a way to obtain actual representation in the executive and administrative departments if they will take the trouble to do it.

COMMISSIONERS NOT FREE.

But are these Commissioners free from control and co-ordinating influence? Their concurring actions (as in the attacks on the Manhattan Railway) forbid such an assumption; and the testimony shows that they are leaders or prominent officials and members of the dominant organization, and of the social club, in which, together with nearly all other city officials and important employes, they are brought into direct and personal contact with the leader, his deputy, and his cabinet. That leader has publicly assumed the responsibility of the entire system. Never was it known before that the sworn officials of a great city and its employes were associated together in the social club of a private society whose object was the control of their city's government and in which, to secure success, despotic power was permitted to one man, the leader, and to those whom he selected for his assistants. If these Commissioners are free from the control of the city's elected chief representative, surely they are not free from the control of that powerful and relentless society in which most of them are sub-leaders or prominent members. That the control of the Commissioners, directly or indirectly, had passed from the people to the private society—Tammany Hall—is abundantly proved by the many acts of favoritism on the one side and of adverse discrimination on the other side practiced by the Commissioners and their employes—that are to be found in our testimony.

In such a system the character of the Mayor is of small consequence, as against the character of the Commissioners and of the influences that affect and control them.

The regnant organization makes sure of the Commissioners, for those officers can punish enemies and reward friends, and they admit that they are the great dispensers of patronage, whether in contracts, orders, appointments, or salaries.

The term of these Commissioners is equal to that of the Mayor—four years—and with their extraordinary opportunities and the chances to employ them fruitfully without violating the criminal law, they need not concern themselves about a new term of office, but may composedly look forward to retirement from public duty at the end of their present arduous service. The practical monarch of this combination and of the territories that they rule holds no public office, is bound by no constitution or oath, and could not be reached by the people should they feel disposed to secure his intercession for them, except they go as suppliants for nominations (as do judicial aspirants) or for his favorable disposition to some business enterprise or public work (as did the representatives of Mr. Astor's proposed telephone company.) His disclosures of avenues by which public money, or private money publicly influenced, may flow into his pockets, are so rich and convincing that vast wealth may be accounted for without proving the violation of criminal statutes.

THE TAMMANY LEADERS.

At this point we extract from the testimony the names of the district leaders and the Executive Committee of Tammany Hall and show their relations to the City Government:

Executive Committee—Daniel F. McMahon, member of favored contracting firm of Naughton & Co.; William Sohmer, County Clerk; Michael T. Daly, Deputy Controller. Secretaries—Michael T. Daly, Deputy Controller; George F. Scannell, Surrogate's Clerk. Leaders—First District, Michael C. Murphy, Commissioner of Health; Second District, Patrick Divver; Third District, Patrick J. Ryder, Councilman; Fourth District, Edward T. Fitzgerald, Coroner; Fifth District, Bernard F. Martin, Senator; Sixth District, Timothy D. Sullivan, Senator; Seventh District, James W. Boyle, Commissioner of East River Bridge; Eighth District, Martin Engel, Councilman; Ninth District, John C. Sheehan, contractor; Tenth District, William Sohmer, County Clerk; Eleventh District, William Dalton, Water Supply Commissioner; Twelfth District, Patrick J. Scully, City Clerk; Thirteenth District, Peter J. Dooling, Deputy Commissioner of Public Buildings, &c.; Fourteenth District, John T. Oakley, Councilman; Fifteenth District, George W. Plunkett, favored contractor; Sixteenth District, Patrick Keenan, Chamberlain; Seventeenth District, Daniel F. McMahon, favored contractor; Eighteenth District, Charles F. Murphy, Dock Commissioner; Nineteenth District, John B. Sexton, Police Commissioner; Twentieth District, James P. Keating, Highway Commissioner; Twenty-first District, Matthew F. Donohue, Deputy Commissioner of Sewers; Twenty-second District, Francis J. Lantry, Commissioner of Correction; Twenty-third District, William E. Stilling, Grading Commissioner; Twenty-fourth District, Maurice F. Holahan, President of Board of Public Improvements; Twenty-fifth District, George F. Scannell, Surrogate's Clerk; Twenty-sixth District, Thomas J. Dunn, Sheriff; Twenty-seventh District, James J. Martin; Twenty-eighth District, Maurice Featherstone, favored contractor, and Senator; Twenty-ninth District, John F. Carroll, Deputy to Mr. Croker; Thirtieth District, Harry C. Hart, Councilman; Thirty-first District, Charles Welde, Commissioner of Jurors; Thirty-second District, John J. Ryan, Aqueduct Commissioner; Thirty-third District, Nicholas J. Hayes, Deputy City Clerk; Thirty-fourth District, Percival C. Nagle; Thirty-fifth District, Augustus Moebus, Park Commissioner; Thirty-sixth District, James McCartney, Commissioner of Street Cleaning. The Sachems or Trustees of Tammany are (Page 437): Thomas L. Feitner, Tax Commissioner; John Whalen, Corporation Counsel; John F. Carroll, Deputy to Mr. Croker; William A. Chanler, Congressman; John J. Scannell, Fire Commissioner; Charles F. Murphy, Dock Commissioner; Randolph Guggenheimer, President of City Council; Maurice Featherstone, Senator; Asa Bird Gardiner, District Attorney; John Kelly, George C. Clausen, Park Commissioner; John Fox, Thomas J. Dunn, Sheriff; Thomas F. Smith, Clerk of the City Court; John T. Nagle, (Sagamore.) Bureau of Statistics; John A. Boyle, (Wiskinskie,) Clerk of Register's Office; Mr. Croker is Chairman of the Finance Committee.

WORK FOR ORGANIZATION.

Dock Commissioner Murphy said (Page 3,813) that he was a Tammany Hall district leader, and was pretty well posted in the affairs of his district. But he was very ignorant of important matters connected with his duties as Treasurer of the board, (3,974, &c.) He said that a great deal of his time was spent in looking after the patronage of the department (3,988)—that new appointees were sent to him by their district leader, and their recommendation carried weight. He considered the recommendation of the district leader as the proper way to get appointees for the department. He could name none who was not so appointed, and considered that the proper way to reward party service. He appointed them in classes that avoid the civil service examination if possible. He thought he was appointed to represent the organization. He admitted that his department had a great deal of patronage in appointments and contracts, and he gave the benefit of it to organization men, whenever he could. Our testimony discloses that over $700,000 of Treasury orders went to favored contractors without public bidding.

Charities Commissioner Lantry said he was one of the many Commissioners who gave their architectural and designing work to Horgan & Slattery, the friends of Deputy Leader Carroll and of himself. (For Horgan & Slattery testimony see Pages 3,818, 3,822, 3,858, 3,871, 3,886, 3,889, 3,899, 5,188, and 6,352.) Quoting, (Page 4,154:) "Q. Are you forgetting that you are a Tammany Hall leader while you are Commissioner? A. No, Sir; I will never forget that." * * * "I will help the organization, and I will help it in a proper way." * * * "Just the same as the others." * * * "The organization sees that the man who holds the position—that he can hold the office satisfactorily." Mr. Croker said, (465:) "That it is the duty of the heads of departments to make their appointments according to the will of the organization."

POWER OF THE COMMISSIONERS.

It is evident that the importance of the Commissioners to the people of the city can hardly be estimated. On the one hand they determine the method and extent of public works and the maintenance of them, and of taxation, and they create liabilities for contracts, work, materials, supplies, and pay rolls. On the other hand, they have the power to extend the kind hand to favored contractors; they may open the Treasury to the retainers of the organization by increasing pay and places; they may favor taxpaying or tax-evading friends, and may discriminate against enemies; all without fear of the criminal law, (especially when their friend and associate, the District Attorney, holds the door to the Grand Jury room, and conducts, dismisses, or delays all prosecutions.) The vast patronage of the city passes mostly through their hands, and the functions of district leaders in securing places for politicians are exercised mainly through them. In their selection Tammany has used her shrewdest judgment.

We have indicated what are at present the characteristics of machine organization, which has become and is likely to continue the controlling public force in the city; and the Legislature, which creates municipal machinery, should consider the motives and the probable future course of the organizations (and their leaders) which are likely to strive for the control of the City Government, and should so carefully preserve the channel by which popular feeling may reach and affect the elected and sworn officials, that the people may be able to move upon them when they have a mind to do so. The Legislature cannot make civic spirit, but it can make and preserve the channels for its effective movement. Counsel have procured statements of the views of many eminent citizens on this point and on kindred points, (see end of Record,) and there is almost a unanimous agreement that the Mayor's absolute power of removal of appointed officers (not judicial) should be coextensive with his term; that he should be required definitely to oversee his appointees, and that he should be responsible for their acts, as a part of his own administration. The Charter Commissioners went some distance when they fixed a period of six months for absolute power of removal, and an examination of their preliminary report shows that they were on the point of extending it throughout the term. Their doubt is well expressed by Mr. Gilroy, (Page ,) who fears that the unlimited right would make a Mayor too powerful; but it is better to put the power in the hands of the elected representative of the people whose administration must pass under their judgment than to put it into the hands of men selected by a "boss" and uncontrolled by the representative of the people. Examples are hard to find where a bad Mayor has been hampered by a good and unyielding and irremovable Commissioner, but many examples of the contrary proposition could be cited. Such responsibility with power of removal would make the Governor's power to remove a Mayor more of a stimulant than it is now, and would compel the appointing of men of better character, ability, and quality than was exhibited by Commissioners before your committee.

It is generally agreed that the Mayor should be made eligible for re-election, (after the present term, which should not be disturbed,) and thus be in a position where he is most likely to listen to the people and to sympathize with their desires.

MAYOR'S TERM TWO YEARS.

We strongly urge you to report that the Mayor's term (after the present term) should be two years instead of four. The enormous power given to him and his appointees should be submitted for popular approval with reasonable frequency. A four-year term, with its present opportunities for safe enrichment, is a great temptation, and would be such to any organization which might gain control of the city. The Draft Committee of the Charter Commission reported in favor of a two-year term, and the change of four years was accomplished in the main body with difficulty. The long term is ideal, but existing and probable conditions were overlooked in adopting it. One of our eminent witnesses argued that if elections are held as frequently as every two years, the citizens' sense of responsibility will be depreciated; but we think that in a popular Government reasonable frequency of election conduces more to public spirit than do long intervals. "Off years," do great harm to civic spirit. "Eternal vigilance is the price of liberty." This is a lesson our people must learn. We must rely upon the ballot box to redress wrongs, and in a community that is so ridden by machine rule it must be in reasonably constant use. The difficulty of getting witnesses before this committee to complain of oppressions and abuses, was, mainly, in the realization of the long period yet to continue of Tammany's power. Long terms will mean loss of liberty to large sections of the community.

These changes could be made at once without difficulty or danger, and would command general approval. Though simple, they would reach the root of our troubles. We believe that the amendments should be enacted at once, while it is possible to pass them. These alterations would in themselves pay for all the labor and sacrifices of the investigation and would be in the line of the Legislature's duty to provide at least a form for democratic government in our city.

In proof of our statement of the attitude of officials, we will quote from the testimony of the Mayor concerning the proposed Ramapo contract, given when it was engrossing public attention.

THE RAMAPO CONTRACT.

"Q. (Pages 5,681, &c.) Was the proposed contract with the Ramapo Company ever shown to you? A. Never. Q. Did you ever ask to see it? A. Never. Q. Did you ever talk with Commissioner Dalton (Commissioner of Water Supply) about the contract? A. Never, never. Q. Did you ever talk with President Holahan (President of the Board of Public Improvements) about the contract? A. Never. I would state that my method of running the Government is to let the Commissioners suggest to me what ought to be done; my experience teaches me that when they ask whether I approve a certain thing, it is for the purpose of getting me committed before they suggest it to me (!) * * * As members of the Municipal Assembly and other departments, they come to me to approve of things. I say: "I will approve nothing; you are in control of your department, and do what is for the best." They have got to approve it themselves, I think. Q. Do you think it best officially as Mayor not to condemn or influence the action of the Commissioners, and not to advise them when they come to ask your advice? A. That is right, yes. Q. The Commissioners are your appointees? A. Certainly. Q. And they are responsible to you? A. No, they are responsible to the law. * * * (At Page 5,697.) Q. Isn't it a fact that this water contract is within the power of your appointed officers? A. Nearly all. Q. And you do not atempt to advise them in a matter of such grave concern as this! do you think you have properly discharged your duties to the City of New York? A. Many contracts that have to go before the Board of Public Improvements never come before the Mayor. Q. But here is a matter that has aroused the attention of the whole city, without reference to partisan divisions at all? A.—So you think. I don't think so. Q.—Haven't you found it so? A.—No, not at all—a hullabaloo about nothing. * * * Q.—Why should a Commissioner be allowed by you, without interference, to attempt to make a contract for forty years to get a hundred million gallons of water a day from a source of supply eighty-one miles away? A.—Never knew of it until I saw that contract mentioned is the papers. Q.—When you knew of it, what did you do? A.—No use to do anything; it was under injunction. Q.—Why didn't you advise them to withdraw the contract and not wait for the court to determine it by injunction? A.—I didn't do it. * * * I didn't see any necessity of it.

What do the Commissioners themselves say of their powers? Commissioner Dalton said (Page 5,368:) "The design of the charter is that such matters should originate with the Commissioner of Water Supply, and when the Commissioner is satisfied with it, he brings it before the Board of Public Improvements."

He showed that he was a proper subject for advice and discipline. In speaking of the Board of Public Improvements, (Page 5,388,) "He said that the Commissioners composing it are obliged to rely largely upon the recommendations of the Commissioner whose work stands in question, and that he would not think it necessary to make a personal investigaion of matters which his fellow-members might state." This demonstrated the necessity (present to his own mind) of careful and accurate statements of facts concerning improvements originating in the various departments.

MR. DALTON AND RAMAPO.

Let us see what he knew about his own statements of facts concerning the proposal of the Ramapo Company:

Q.—(Page 5,385)—Did you know whether or not these storage dams could be constructed cheaply? A.—Yes, Sir; I believed they could. Q.—What made you believe it? A.—Well, from the explanation that was given to us riding around and explaining by the engineers of the Ramapo Company, and here was the valley away down and the hills around, and it would be very little expense to construct them. Q.—Did you have any borings? A.—No borings; no Sir. Q.—Could you tell what kind of bottom these dams would have to rest on? A.—I could not. * * * Q.—Were you told the dams would have to be made unusually strong to resist at times great cloudbursts? A.—Yes, Sir. Q.—Do you think that dams that would have to be built with great strength to resist the sudden impact of water are likely to be constructed with comparative cheapness? A.—No, not with comparative cheapness. Q.—That is what you say, (referring to his official report to the Board of Public Improvements)—"comparatively small cost", —what were you comparing it with? A.—With the necessity there was for water at the time, and will be in a few years. Q.—That is not what we are talking about. A.—I think it is a small cost; no matter what it costs, so long as we get the water. (At Page 5,388.) After the witness had stated that the members of the Board of Public Improvements had to rely on each other's statements: Q.—And they took your word when you made those statements? A.—I suppose they did. * * * Q.—You say in your statement, "Private capital stands ready to construct the works." How did you know that? A.—From the statement made by the Ramapo people at the hearing. * * * Q.—Did they tell you whose private capital stood ready to build the work? A.—No, Sir. * * * Q.—You were the man responsible, and I want you to tell us who was to furnish the money? A.—I don't know. Q.—I have read in your hearing this morning the annual reports in which this company confesses to very small assets. What investigation did you make to find out the assets of the company? A.—I didn't make any. Q.—How did you know that private capital stood ready to construct this work? A.—Well, they put up a bond—$100,000. Q.—All of that? A.—All of that.

He justified his departure from the principle of municipal ownership by the great need of the city for water, and admitted that waiting for this contract to be performed would take over three years, which would be that amount of valuable time lost. He admitted that though they were to give a bond of $100,000 for the delivery of the water in three years, he did not believe they could construct the works in less than four years.

THE COMPANY'S FINANCES.

(Page 5,392.) "Q.—Was that company worth any money? A.—I don't know, only from their own statements. * * * I don't remember just what they said. * * * Q.—Did they say they had property? A.—Yes, Sir. * * * They spoke about this great shed up there. Q.—Do they own the shed? A.—I don't know. * * * Q.—Did they state that they owned the watershed? A.—As to owning it or having an option on it, I won't be positive. * * * Q.—How much value was there to the option at the time? A.—I don't know. Q.—How much money did they have to buy their options in? A.—I don't know. Q.—Why! why! you say here, (referring to his statement to the Board of Public Improvements,) "a proposition has been presented by a responsible company." That is your statement to your fellow-Commissioners? A.—Yes, Sir. Q.—Who were led into voting for this proposition presumably on your statement? A.—That is a statement made to me by this company and to the board, and upon that they (the company) put up $100,000. Q.—A little contract with the Newtown Company took a bond of $100,000. The Newtown Company had a plant and property, and works in operation, and you could see their title deed. Did you ever see a title deed of the Ramapo Company? A.—No, Sir. Q.—Did any Ramapo man ever tell you that the company owned a dollar's worth of ground? A.—I am not positive. Q.—Did you ever look to find out? A.—No. Q.—And yet you told your colleagues that this proposition was from a responsible company. What did you mean by that? A.—I believe it to be a responsible company by the statements made to me by the company."

He was then shown his representation to the board. "This company has taken all necessary legal steps to secure this water supply," and was asked why he so stated. He answered: "Because I had reports from them that they had, and I believed them." (Page 5,396.)

The witness stated (Page 5,404) that he did not know where or how the water supply would be brought across the Hudson River, and then was asked: "Q.—Would you think of going into such a gigantic scheme of construction as this without seeing the plans and specifications; did you know when you put that thing before the Board of Public Improvements that there were any drawn plans, any written specifications? A.—I don't know * * * never thought of it. All I had in mind was to get the water here. I didn't care how they got it here."

He was unable to tell whether the elevation of 300 feet for the water mentioned in the contract was to be at the point of supply or the point of delivery. (Page 5,407.)

MR. WHALEN AND MR. HOLAHAN.

And so the testimony proceeded. It is but fair to Mr. Dalton to say that the two other officials prominent in the manipulation of the contract, the President of the Board of Public Improvements, Mr. Holahan, (Page 6,056, &c.,) and the Corporation Counsel, Mr. Whalen, (see Page 6,398, &c.,) appointees of the Mayor, gave no better reasons for their official recommendations and actions; indeed, it appeared that the Corporation Counsel, who approved the contract, so that nothing remained to do but to pass the resolution for its execution, knew nothing about the corporation, or its right to make a contract and do business, and had not discovered that the term of the contract was five years longer than the apparent corporate life of the company, and could not tell what the contract meant in its statement that the water should be delivered at a pressure due to an elevation of 300 feet, and whether or not the company was bound under the contract to give them that elevation or equivalent pressure at the City of New York. (The word "equivalent" or its synonym is not used. The provision is for absolute elevation.) Their attention was called to many defects and uncertainties in the language, and Mr. Whalen said, "You could not get all the words in the contract." They were asked what could be the purpose of a company without known assets undertaking to construct mammoth works in a time far too short for accomplishment when the city was not bound to take even a thousand dollars' worth a year, and whether these facts did not indicate a stock jobbing operation, and they were as ignorant and simple as ever. They did not know how they were going to handle or distribute the water when they got it, (5,437,) or even whether they would have to build an aqueduct (5,440.) There were no plans whatever (5,337. The Commissioner thought the water was for lower Manhattan, while his Chief Engineer said it would be used for the Bronx district.

The Corporation Counsel had made no investigation of the legal status of the company whose contract he had approved, and was unable to state whether it had a legal existence, free from constitutional defects, or not. The attitude of the Corporation Counsel on this matter and his lamentable testimony are of great interest, not only because he is the legal representative of the city, but because his advice to Commissioners and other officials has almost the force of law. He is an appointee of the Mayor, and is ex-officio a member of the Board of Estimate and Apportionment, which the Mayor testified was the power that finally gave validity to the contract; he is also a Sachem of Tammany.

ADMISSIONS OF THE COMPANY.

The testimony of the company's officials and their annual reports showed clearly that it had no property, no works—nothing to show value or ability, and that they would have to depend entirely on increases of stock and issues of bonds and sales of securities to raise construction funds, and that their capital would be this contract.

Mr. Dalton confirmed the Mayor's statement of his method of "running the Government," by saying (page 5,423) that there had been no conference or advisement on the Ramapo matter between himself and the Mayor. He said that once he saw the Acting Mayor, who asked him what there was in the Ramapo talk, and who said: "Of course, you are the Commissioner of Water Supply, and of course if you think it is the best thing to do you are responsible to the people." But how is the Commissioner responsible to the people? Can they remove him? Can they do more than to appeal to the courts to enjoin him—and is that a perfect remedy? It is difficult, indeed, to make a case for injunction against an officer acting within his prerogatives, in the absence of direct proof of fraud (see Judge Gildersleeve's recent decision in this very matter.) Mr. Dalton said further: "The charter gives me the right as Commissioner of Water Supply to do what I think is best and proper for the people of the City of New York. I have done that, and I have nothing to retract, and I will stand by it until you or the Controller or some of those honest men show me a better way to do it."

The President of the Board of Public Improvements, Mr. Holahan, made a similar statement, (quoting): "Q. (page 6,063). Why didn't you go to the Mayor and show him this proposition to tie up the city, of which he is Chief Magistrate, for forty years? A. Do you know what he would tell me? Q. No. What? A. He would say: 'You are President of the Board of Public Improvements, and if you don't know what to do you'd better resign'—that is what he would tell me. Q. Then you believe the government of the city, so far as the great water supply is concerned, is lodged absolutely in the Commissioner and in the Board of Public Improvements? A. Yes, and the Mayor is a member, and the Corporation Counsel and the Controller are all members." (At page 6,063) "The Mayor has the same voice there that I have. Q. How often has he been at that board? A. He hasn't been there. Q. That is worse yet. A. Now, you subpoena him and find out why he isn't there."

MAYOR TOOK NO ACTION.

It may be doubtful whether on these admissions of incompetence and neglect made by these officials the Mayor could be upheld by the courts in removal for cause, but he did not attempt even to influence their conduct, and there is no inference left but that they were permitted to respond to the political control of those who were interested in the pressing of that vicious contract.

This Ramapo incident is an instructive example of the evil and danger of continuing the Commissionerships under the present provisions of the charter. On pages 5,618-5,663, &c., we have the testimony of the President of the Borough of Queens, Mr. Bowley, and of other witnesses, showing that the public water service in Long Island City had been systematically neglected, and that a private contract with the Citizens' Water Company of Newtown had been made under circumstances very similar to those surrounding the proposed Ramapo contract, and notwithstanding a similar opposition. On the testimony of Mr. Lauterbach, that contract served as a model for the Ramapo contract. It is possible under an extension of the time of that contract to make it serve as a carrier for the Ramapo Company, the amount of water to be supplied being unlimited and the price being sufficiently high to be tempting ($65 a million gallons, Page 5,643.) This was accomplished by the power of the Commissioners, unchecked by the Mayor, and against the vehement protests of the elected members of the Board of Public Improvements, only two of whom —the Controller and the President of Queens—had a vote on the question.

COMMISSIONERS OF ACCOUNTS.

We will add another illustration of a Commissioner's delinquency and the Mayor's indifference, found in the records of the Commissioners of Accounts, who constitute a standing Mayor's Investigating Committee, and who by their work in this and a former administration have proved their great usefulness. The excellent work of the present Commissioners has not moved the Mayor to any act of discipline over the Commissioner exposed by them. These Commissioners of Accounts, unlike the executive and administrative Commissioners, are removable by the Mayor at pleasure, and perhaps that is one of the reasons for their intelligence, activity, and usefulness.

The Commissioners put all their small engineering force on the work of examining a large number of contracts for opening, regulating, grading, curbing, and flagging streets in the Borough of the Bronx, awarded previous to 1898, which fell into the present administration for their performance, and came under the jurisdiction of the Department of Highways, of which Mr. Keating, a district leader in Tammany Hall, is the Commissioner.

The reports of the Commissioners to the Mayor, based upon the observations of their engineers, and accompanied by numerous photographs, form a complete and continuous indictment of the Highway Department and of the Mayor, who has permitted such conduct.

On these reports, it appears that these important works were done by the contractors with shocking disregard of the specifications; that repeated denunciations of the work were disregarded by contractors, department, and Mayor, and that in the face of repeated scathing reports to the Mayor, the Commissioner of Highways accepted bad work, and by such acceptance bound the city to pay the full contract prices. It is plain that either the Commissioners of Accounts or the Commissioner of Highways should have been disciplined and, if possible, removed by the Mayor. The Mayor has absolute power to remove the Commissioners of Accounts, and should have done so if he thought they were maligning the Commissioner of Highways and unfairly raising a scandal in his administration. That he has not removed them is the best evidence that he believes they are efficient and honest. Then why has he not removed the Commissioner of Highways? Surely, because he dare not on account of that Commissioner's relations with the controlling organization, or because he does not think he can establish a cause for removal on charges and trial which would satisfy the technical requirements of the Court. We will quote from several of the reports of the Commissioners of Accounts to the Mayor. (1) Report dated June 23, 1899, on the regulating and grading of Tremont Avenue. Previous criticisms of the same work were made by reports of June 21, 1898, Oct. 4, 1898, and May 2, 1899, (see Page 8,856).

REPORTS ON STREET WORK.

"Having in 1898 made two reports of this matter which were not followed by any action on the part of the Department of Highways, and thinking that perhaps owing to the multiplicity of duties our report had been overlooked, or that possibly the Commissioner of Highways had been misled into believing that our reports were not justifiable, we caused to be made April 4, 1899, three photographs showing the actual condition of the work. Said photographs are attached to the report dated May 2, 1899, above referred to."

Commissioner Hertle said his reports were made to show the importance of compelling compliance with specifications—occasionally to have the effect of holding back payments until bad work be corrected, and that it was for the Mayor to see whether the Controller was informed to protect the city by withholding the money, (8,880.) "We did make this report for the purpose of giving to your Honor an unfavorable impression of the manner in which the Chief Engineer of the Highway Department was attending to his official duties for the reason that the inspection of the work done in the Borough of the Bronx, as your Honor has been fully aware, has been so loose, and the work theretofore done under their inspection has been so faulty that the time, we believe, has arrived to compel the Chief Engineer to see to it that the inspection is done in the interest of the city and not in that of the contractors."

The contractor's name in this case is Bart. Dunn. His sureties were his brother, Thomas J. Dunn, Sheriff, and a district leader of Tammany Hall, and Matthew Baird.

(8,861): "To show how loosely these statements are made by the Chief Engineer, Josiah A. Briggs, and how little importance is attached to statements by his Inspectors, we beg to state we have caused to be prepared the following series of photographs taken on the afternoon of June 10, 1899, after the Inspector had sworn to the fact that the heaviest stone had been removed and put fourteen feet under ground. (Photographs attached.)

(8,894): "Our position is sustained by our report of Oct. 14, 1898, wherein we show that the specifications were violated in more than forty contracts which were being executed under the direction of Chief Engineer Josiah A. Briggs, and for which he was responsible, and also by the numerous other reports, with photographs, which we have made to your Honor, both before and since that date, showing similar instances of careless inspection and violation of these specifications.

THE SPECIFICATIONS VIOLATED.

"The only motives which led us to make these reports have been those of a proper performance of our duty to the city. This we, as public officials, were compelled to do, it having been brought to our notice, both by reports and by photographs that the contract specifications of the Department of Highways were being violated all over the Bronx so generally that violations were the rule."

(8,898): "As an illustration of our contention that the contract specifications of the Department of Highways were being violated all over the Borough of the Bronx so generally that violations were the rule rather than the exception, we reluctantly accompany this report with another report showing, with photographs, a list of forty-four violations of the contract specifications. We have had these violations under consideration since May 22, but were loath to report on them, because we hoped that the Department of Highways would take such action upon our previous reports as would cause a prompt and thorough inspection, and that those violations would be remedied. This, however, judging from the tenor of the report of Chief Engineer Briggs, he has no intention of doing. It is a great injustice to your Honor's administration to be obliged to make such complaints, and particularly to be compelled to spread them upon the records with photographs. Unless some steps are taken to enforce a rigid inspection and a compliance with the specifications, we fear that the Department of Highways will expose itself to charges of neglect."

(2.) Quotation from Report No. 105, Oct. 14, 1898.

(8,901): "The complaints of our engineers and Inspectors of the very poor work now being allowed to be done in the Borough of the Bronx compel us to earnestly call your attention to the fact that something must be done to remove the same. * * * No improvements can be noticed, although we have made many complaints to your Honor in many of these instances.

GET MONEY FOR BAD WORK.

(3.) Quotation from Supplemental Report, Oct. 14, 1898, referring to work on Loring Place.

(8907:) "We have instructed our Chief Engineer to keep an eye out for final payment on this work, which he informs us has not been paid, and therefore recommend that the payment be withheld on this work until the contractor has fully complied with the specifications referring to the curbing and flagging. If this meets with your Honor's approval, we will do so at once." * * * "Having found that this work was so imperfect, we visited the Controller's office to investigate when the final settlement on this work would be reached, and to our surprise were informed that the same had been paid, except the customary repairing security of 25 cents per lineal foot having been retained. We particularly call your Honor's attention to the fact that we do not understand how the Engineers of Highways could certify to such inferior work as being in accordance with the specifications, and we recommend that they should be severely criticised for this careless inspection." * * *

(4.) Quoting from report dated Dec. 15, 1898, referring to work on La Fontaine Avenue from Tremont Avenue to Quarry Road:

"We advised the Controller to retain the final payment for the reason that the contractor had not complied with the specifications in regard to the quality of the filling, flagging, and curbing." "We took this step after having made three reports to your Honor in reference to this contract, namely, on June 21, Aug. 21, and Oct. 14." "In all of these reports we complained of absence of Inspectors, and of poor quality of flagging, curbing, and crosswalks." "Notwithstanding our adverse criticism on this work, we find that on Sept. 19 the certificates of acceptance of regulating and grading La Fontaine Avenue were signed by the following officers of the Department of Highways: Chief Engineer Josiah H. Briggs, Deputy Commissioner of Highways, Borough of Bronx; James H. Maloney, Commissioner of Highways; James P. Keating." "We are informed by Mr. Blandy, Assistant Corporation Counsel, that the Controller has been advised in this case to pay the final estimate to the contractor, notwithstanding that the work has not been done in accordance with the specifications. In doing so the Corporation Counsel cites the cases of James Quinn vs. the Mayor, 16 Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, 408, and also Brady vs. the Mayor, 132 N. Y., 415."

RELIES ON SUBORDINATES.

"We quote the above cases to show that the inspection of the work is at times very lax, and that either the engineers of the department have too much to do, and cannot get over the ground to personally examine the work and to see that the Inspectors do their duty, or that the Inspectors and engineers are careless and inefficient, and in consequence of the official head of the department relying on the certificates of his subordinates to the correctness of the work which afterward upon a closer scrutiny is not borne out by the fact. Our staff of engineers have been given the impression in conversation with Inspectors on the work in the Borough of the Bronx that the Inspectors do not get the support of the department when endeavoring to have work properly done, the Inspectors being told that if they cannot procure good work they had better resign, or if the Inspectors insist upon getting good work they are transferred to minor pieces of work of short duration, and then not reappointed, which the Inspectors claim is done through the influence of an association of contractors. Inspectors have stated to our men that they know the work is not in accordance with the specifications, but they try to do the best they can under the circumstances; and our men have been told that the Inspectors have frequently reported the work as unsatisfactory; that no action has been taken at headquarters; and our men have been notified that they are not to take notice of any criticisms of our engineers or examiners. Your Honor is aware of the numerous complaints recently made by us of the quality of the contract work in the Borough of the Bronx, and as it appears from the certifications no attention is paid to our protest whatsoever. The consequence will be that gradually all the final estimates will be returned approved and signed by the Commissioner of Highways and Chief Engineer, in spite of our objections as not being in accordance with the specifications. Any reports by us or any attempt on our part to withhold payment as to the quality of the work would lead to the same procedure as in the La Fontaine avenue case, and the result will be that the Controller must pay the final estimate without question.

It is our opinion, and we believe we are voicing the sentiments of the Corporation Counsel, that the officials responsible for the bad quality of the work turned out in the Borough of the Bronx should be called to account, and warned to make a closer supervision of the work done in that Borough before the final estimates are signed by them.

(5.) (8920) "Among the final estimates recently filed for payment in the Auditor's office, Borough of the Bronx, appears the final voucher for regulating and grading St. Joseph's Street from Robbins Avenue to Whitlock Avenue, signed and approved by the engineer and Commissioner of Highways as being "in compliance with the specifications and satisfactory." This contract work, which is registered in Finance Department as No. 16,285, T. J. McLaughlin being contractor, is in our opinion not in an acceptable condition, and the accompanying photographs will illustrate that the contract work had not been properly done." "The fact that this work has been accepted by the Commissioner of Highways excludes any interference with the final payment on this work."

(Quoting from our own record, examination of one of the Commissioners of Accounts, Page 8,921): "Q. Now, Mr. Hertle, if that be the condition, that because the Commissioner of Highways has certified to this work regardless of its bad character, the city must therefore pay, why did you make your report? A. I called the Mayor's attention to the violation of the specifications as I saw them, and I thought that possibly by making this report there might be some mistake on our part; and I want to say right now, while I think of it, that in nearly every case where we have made a report and the reports were submitted to the department, they made answering reports." (892?): Q. "And if, through the neglect or whatever it may be of the Commissioner of Highways, the city had to pay for the work, you felt it to be your duty to call the attention of the Mayor to the Commissioner who did it? A. Yes, sir. Q. And then leave it for the Mayor to determine whether he would call that Commissioner to account or not? A. Yes."

Other examples of great works which the Commissioners have undertaken to originate without being checked or advised by the Mayor, are the locating of the Blackwell's Island and East River Bridges and the Newtown and Flushing Canal, on or close to the lines of private franchises, and the holdings of associates, and the mapping of Queens County in such a way as to destroy scores of village streets and many of the roads just completed for the city at great expense, to ruin the houses and grounds of very many people, and to make titles uncertain during the years that must elapse before the improvements which will cost over thirty million dollars can be carried out. These and other similar works are so vast in their probable cost as to seriously jeopardize rapid transit, and this essential improvement is at the mercy of Commissioners (see the testimony of Louis Windmüller, Page 8,883, &c., and the protests of citizens before the Board of Public Improvements. Mr. Windmüller showed that the location of the Blackwell's Island Bridge was very faulty, and that the mapping of Queens County on the department plans would amount to the confiscation of the property of its inhabitants).

DOCK AND TAX DEPARTMENTS.

The dock policy of the city is in the hands of three Commissioners, all politicians; one Mr. Cram, a lawyer; another, Mr. Murphy, a liquor dealer and district leader; the third Mr. Meyer, a partner of Mr. Croker. Mr. Murphy has told us how he looks out for the patronage in contracts and appointments, and we have noticed the $700,000 of Treasury orders to friends, given without public bidding, for dredging, asphalting streets, and other paving, furnishing piles, cement, and other materials. The Mayor shows no concern in these matters.

Again, the operations of the Tax Department have been characterized by unparalleled ignorance and unfairness. Commissioners and Deputy Commissioners of Taxes, by their testimony before the committee, have shown woeful incompetence. The delicate work of equalizing values was left to the deputies without adequate instructions portionment. The topographical duties could be devolved on one of the departments. Mr. Gilroy's letter suggesting the consolidation of these six departments into three departments is worthy of careful consideration.

It has been suggested that the President of each borough might be required to perform the duties in his borough which formerly devolved on the Commissioner of Public Works, thus dividing the labor of public improvements by territorial lines rather than by classes of work.

MORE POWER FOR LOCAL BOARDS.

The Board of Estimate and Apportionment should be continued in full power and effect, but it should be relieved of the Corporation Counsel and the President of the Tax Department, and should contain the five Borough Presidents. It should have the right to issue bonds, to pay all indebtedness that has lawfully occurred, and all bonds expressly authorized by the Legislature.

The Municipal Assembly should be reduced to one body, the Board of Aldermen, with the Borough Presidents. Its members should be compelled to attend its sessions and should receive $2,000 a year salary. It should have power to originate and to amend important measures. The power to grant all permits should be restored to the Mayor's office. The Clerk of the Board of Aldermen should be the City Clerk, who should take up the work now confided to the Bureau of Municipal Statistics, which should be abolished.

Methods should be provided by which local boards, the Municipal Assembly and its members, may obtain all desired information of department plans and projects, and each Borough President should be entitled to the services of an engineer.

We reiterate our former plea that everything is to be gained by dignifying and enlarging the powers of local boards and Borough Presidents to the highest possible point that can be reached without absolute impairment of consolidation.

An era of immense public improvement is close at hand, and many millions of dollars will be expended in this way next year. Undoubtedly the enlarged bond limit will soon be reached, but the Tax Commissioners, who are a part of the dominant organization, will increase the limit by increasing property valuations. There is no practical limit to what may be done in the issuing of bonds and the spending of money during the remainder of this four-year term. Members of the reigning power, and their business and political allies, their relatives, and associates, have secured interests in companies, in contracting firms, and in properties adjacent to projected improvements, and the organization will push all its contemplated works, having in mind their leader's declaration of political principles, and being stimulated by their subsequent victory at the polls.

We hope that the coming Legislature, so constituted that it can easily enact law, will not defer these important matters to a future time in which conditions may be different. Those who are anxious to maintain the present ineffective provisions of the charter with their golden opportunities will do their best to split the succeeding Legislature into opposing bodies. The responsibility for the correction of fundamental errors surely rests now on the unified Legislature, which is of the same political complexion as was the body that enacted it.

THE BIG TAX BUDGET.

The enormous tax budget of the new city is the greatest surprise of consolidation, and one of the first queries by the Legislature will be whether the excessive burdens can be reduced by legislation. The budget in 1899 was $90,778,972, and this vast amount does not nearly represent the amount of money that is taken by the Government from the people, annually, and spent or banked, for it does not include rents, wharfage, fees, fines, interest, assessments for street improvements, bond sales and premiums, and other sources of income which run far up into the millions. These vast sums have not produced any conspicuous public improvements, for it is noteworthy that not one has been completed since Jan. 1, 1898, and those great works now being projected will have to be built entirely on the city's credit, which will be so used as within Constitutional limits as to jeopardize the greatest need of all—rapid transit—and perhaps will throw the construction and ownership of the transit tunnel into private hands.

The eminent Committee on Draft of the Charter Commission boasted that the yearly budget of the new city would be nearly $60,000,000, (see its report;) the increase over that estimate is more than 50 per cent. The immediate result of the heavy budget of the new city was the adding of hundreds of millions of dollars to the tax assessment of real estate in an effort to keep down the tax rate, which nevertheless had to be greatly raised.

We have endeavored to ascertain the exact number of persons in the public service, and the exact sum paid for salaries and wages, and the increase in employes and payrolls since Dec. 31, 1897, and to make comparisons with the aggregate budgets of the different districts prior to consolidation, but have not found a public record, or an official charged with keeping records, who could produce the figures. The records of the city are kept in such a way that there is no known tabulation on these points, and all officials who have been interrogated have insisted upon the practical impossibility of getting such statistics without expending time and money that were not at their command, and we have not had the time and means to spare for this great work.

INCREASE IN CITY'S EXPENSES.

Alderman P. Tecumseh Sherman has given valuable evidence in which there appears a computation of increased expenditures, made for his own official guidance. He says that the annual expenses in the entire territory of the city prior to consolidation amounted to about $68,000,000. By comparing the budgets since consolidation there has been an increase of about $22,000,000 in the annual expenses of the city. This increase is not caused by public improvements, for they are payable by bonds, and many items formerly paid in part out of the annual appropriations have been omitted from the budget of 1900, and are now left to be paid entirely by the bonds. Since Jan. 1, 1898, the present administration has issued bonds to the amount of $39,000,000, and proposes to issue $50,000,000 more within the coming year. Out of the total budget for 1900, over $44,000,000 will be for salaries and wages, which does not include salaries in charitable or in semi-private institutions, nor money spent for cart hire and many other matters. The Department of Street Cleaning has $500,000 more than was allowed to Col. Waring for the same districts in 1897; the District Attorney's office in New York County has $67,000 more than in 1897; the Law Department has over $100,000 more than the consolidated districts spent in 1897. The Board of Public Improvements and its six subsidiary departments will receive for 1900 $9,797,000, of which over $7,500,000 is for wages and salaries, and of this about $350,000 is for centralized, additional, duplicated, and unnecessary salaries. The budget and bond issues for 1900 will probably amount to $140,000,000, (and Mr. Sherman forgets the other large sources of city revenue from interest, rents, wharfage, fees, fines, &c., above mentioned.)

Responses to subpoenas addressed to the most prominent departments in the City Government showed that between July 1, 1898, and Sept. 1, 1899, their pay rolls had increased over a million and a half dollars, and their employes had increased over a thousand, excluding from the computation firemen, policemen, and teachers, and excluding about 400 "temporaries" who had just been discharged under the provisions of the civil service law. (Page 7,654.) Increases are still going on, and it is fair to assume that these 400 "temporaries" will be replaced by permanent employes as rapidly as civil service examinations are held. (The excuse for keeping these "temporaries" for many months was that the Civil Service Board had not held examinations for their positions.) It is a conservative estimate that since July 1, 1898, the pay rolls of these departments, outside of policemen, firemen, and teachers, have increased about two million dollars.

NUMBER OF EMPLOYES IN DOUBT.

Mr. McAneny, Secretary of the City Reform Club, and Mr. Pryor, Secretary of the City Club, (Page 7,689,) testified to careful examinations of The City Record and other documents and records to determine the number of employes and the salary increases, and they found glaring errors and evasions of law in the published notices, and had not been able to secure any reliable figures. Mr. McAneny said that the list printed in The City Record January, 1899, showed 37,692 persons, but he had himself found cases where employes did not appear in that list, and believes there are many omissions. He estimated the total number at about 40,000, (Page 7,628.) He believed there were about 33,000 prior to consolidation. We examined Mr. Spencer (Page 7,623) and Mr. Phillips (Page 7,618) of the Civil Service Board and could not get anything more definite. Mr. Phillips estimated the number of employes at 31,000 on Jan. 1, 1899, but The City Record published about that time showed over 37,000, (Page 7,621, &c.)—there is no roster now, (Page 7,622.) Mr. Spencer (Page 7,623) estimated the laboring force at 30,000, and all city employes at 60,000. Mr. Phillips afterward said that Mr. Spencer had included county employes in the estimate. The Bureau of Municipal Statistics could not help us, any more than to give us the total number of employes shown in The City Record list, which they, however, had not verified, and to say that they were not able to get any further information from the Finance Department.

The Controller testified: (Quoting:) "Q.—Are you able to tell us what has been the increase in the number of employes, and in the annual aggregate of wages and salaries, since Dec. 31, 1897? A.—That would cost $50,000 to find that out." He could not tell the number of city employes, or the proportion of salaries, without withdrawing clerks and making a laborious tabulation for that purpose, and it had cost a good deal to furnish the information we had already asked for. This we can well believe. It required two sets of subpœnas and took much time in the different departments, and much tabulating by our own employes to find the increase between July 1, 1898, and Sept. 1, 1899, above mentioned.

The pay rolls of the city are in the hands of the Commissioners, who are the lieutenants of the "boss," rather than the assistants of the Mayor, and the testimony of Commissioners themselves has proved that they deem themselves bound to look out for their organization. Being under the control, not to say influence, of that organization, we can understand the political necessity of expanding the payrolls, and the unanimous bungling of the records, that makes exact discovery an impossibility. Mr. McAneny plainly showed the various evasions of the law by which the Commissioners had succeeded in filling the new positions with their friends rather than with civil service competitors. At the close of his testimony he said, (Page 7,683): "The ease with which appointments have been made without examinations has led virtually to a revival of patronage dispensation, and it is now the common understanding that the intervention of district leaders is generally necessary to insure either appointment or retention." The evidence of Mr. Pryor showed serious variations between the answers of the departments to subpœnas and the figures published in The City Record (Page 7,705,) so that it is clear that we have no reliable information of the full truth in these matters that have been so carefully covered up. This testimony of Mr. McAneny and Mr. Pryor deserves careful examination, and shows the necessity of compelling a truer and prompter publishing of official acts.

BETTER LISTS OF EMPLOYES.

We recommend the prompt enactment of a law requiring each head of an office or department in the city and in each county included therein, to furnish to the Mayor, in the first week of each month, a statement of the number of employees and the amount of the payroll in his office or department for the preceding month, and all increases and decreases of salaries, and names and salaries of those discharged and appointed, and requiring the Mayor to obtain such reports and to cause the printing thereof in The City Record in the month of their receipt by him; also of a law requiring the report by the Controller to the Mayor each month of the city contracts outstanding, and the amount thereof, the total payments made, and the payments made during the month, to be published in the same way; also a law requiring that in the submission of departmental estimates, and the fixing of the annual budgets, the amounts asked, and the amounts allowed for salaries be separately stated.

When district leaders are themselves Commissioners and the authorized dispensers of patronage, and are not controlled or checked by the power that appointed them, we cannot wonder at salary extravagances.

An illustration of the patronage system is found in the case of John J. Daly, carpenter in the Department of Public Buildings, &c., and the highest man in his class in the civil service examination, (Page 7,684.) He was dismissed by Mr. Kearny for "lack of work," but his place was filled immediately by Richard Duncan, the father-in-law of district leader Commissioner Keating, who had boasted that he would secure the place. The case of William Ryan (Page 7,086) was similar. He was discharged for "lack of work," and a man named Brophy immediately took his place. Mr. Ryan was sent to various politicians, including Mr. Keating, Mr. Wood, President of the Board of Aldermen, and to the Captain of his election district, to regain his position, but as he could not qualify politically, he didn't get it.

The Legislature may be able to save some money by consolidating several departments as recommended, by abolishing Deputy Commissioners in Manhattan, and by adopting a simplified plan for the rural boroughs, but it is evident that the great swelling of salaries is due to the discretionary acts of Commissioners and other officers, which is beyond the control of the Legislature if it intends to leave the people of New York to govern themselves. All that it can do to affect this matter in a large way is to make these officers directly responsible all the time to the Mayor and to send him before the people for their approval with reasonable frequency. The people must be relied on to influence and control the Mayor, and if they cannot, or will not, the fault will not be with the Legislature, for it has not the remedy for such conditions.

THE DOMINATING INFLUENCES.

This statement of some of the evils and difficulties in the City of New York that are shown in our testimony, would not be complete nor would we comply with the Assembly's direction if we did not more directly and distinctly show the influences affecting and controlling the officers" as those influences have been revealed by evidence. It is most important to trace these evils to their origin, and when we know the power that sustains them, we may then understand the problem better, and more surely devise the remedy; and we may say here, that what has been revealed shows the danger and the folly of crushing out the independent spirit and local pride manifest in the boroughs, and the greatest necessity of fostering and encouraging it, and developing it to the highest point that is attainable without destroying consolidation itself.

The power of an absolute monarchy such as now controls New York is almost irresistible at its centre, and close to the ruler blind obedience is the rule; but we find that power and that obedience weaker and weaker as we move away from the centre, and it may well be that the future redemption of the city from its present travesty of popular government lies in the boroughs outside of Manhattan. It is well-nigh impossible for an organization that exists by reason of its hold on the compacted masses of Manhattan Island, which are always within its reach and under its power, to extend the same kind of a control over the State, and when the purpose is apparent it always fails; it is the same kind of difficulty that has prevented this absolute power from muzzling the voice of democratic opposition to its tyrannical plans, in the outer boroughs; it is the same kind of difficulty that has made it to fail of absolute control in the Municipal Assembly containing representatives from the remote as well as the near districts. Wisdom will discern in the discordant sounds that have issued from those chambers, the voices of local constituencies that have not been and will not be brought into subserviency to the present central influence, even by political considerations—and the voice, though discordant, is full of hope

In our discussion of influences we desire to be as impersonal as possible, and to take as little space as possible, our whole purpose being to show clearly the nature of the task of charter amendment, which by general consent now devolves upon the Legislature.

In the first message of the Mayor was this significant language: "Fidelity to the pledges upon which the suffrages of our citizens were asked and secured demand that we demonstrate the advantages of responsible government; that we prove that our administration for which a great political party stands sponsor can be depended upon not only to reward merit, but to deal most severely with any betrayal of the public confidence, including in this designation not alone every form of dishonesty and every degree of inefficiency, but also any want of industry and any indifference to the safety, comfort, and convenience of the public." (Page 1,449.) The Mayor conceded that this "sponsor" was the organization whose General Committee meets at Tammany Hall, but he declared that he controlled himself, made his appointments by himself, and, though he had talked them over with Mr. Croker, had determined them himself.

MR. CROKER'S ADMISSIONS.

Mr. Croker freely admitted his leadership of Tammany Hall, identified the most important officials who had been appointed as being prominent in it, and said he was the leader and they were his friends, and he would stick to them. He said he had given advice in the political matters of the city; that it would not do to have divided counsels at the head. "Q. For that reason when the party is dominant the men who are put into the city offices to administer the affairs of the city ought to be in such relation with the head that they will do what is generally considered by the organization to be the proper thing? A. We agree on that. We believe it is right. Yes, Sir." (Page 436.) He admitted that after a conference at Lakewood after the election in 1897, practically all the important officers to be appointed by the Mayor were selected, that his advice was asked on most of them; that they were selected by him or his intermediate associates, partly because of their known loyalty to Tammany Hall, and of the probability of their sustaining its strength. He said that he meets these appointees nightly at the Democratic Club, (438,) and that nearly all of the heads of the departments meet there nightly and talk about everything in general. Patrick Keenan, Chamberlain, the custodian of the city's funds and numerous trust funds for infants and others under court orders, was asked how he secured his apointment from the Mayor, and said (9756): "Mr. Croker asked me if I would accept it?" I said, "Anything he thought proper to select for me was perfectly satisfactory." He showed his appreciation of the gift by selecting Mr. Croker's company as his official bondsman. Mr. Croker admitted that he had a powerful influence over the Tammany legislators at Albany, whose actions he advised, and that he exercises the same influence upon local officials. He acknowledged the issuing of a warning to members of the Municipal Assembly (p. 445), and believed that after his warning "they attended to their duties better" (p. 447). He considered that to be his duty as a member of the Executive Committee of Tammany Hall. He admitted that the election of the present Borough President of Manhattan by the Municipal Assembly was determined and directed in the Tammany Executive Committee, and that the organization members voted for Mr. Coogan as loyal members of the party. "Q. You and your associates selected Mr. Coogan, and then as a homogeneous body of Democrats they put through the will of the organization? A. Yes, Sir." He admitted that he holds no public office and receives no official salary, and that his vital relation to public affairs is by virtue of his leadership of Tammany Hall. He readily conceded that he is the most powerful man that he knows of (451). He testified (p. 453), that the Mayor's appointments met his approval and represented the will of the organization as expressed through himself. "Q. But he (the Mayor) as a faithful member of the Tammany organization, did what it had decided upon? A. Yes, Sir. And if the organization did not decide upon that in mass meeting, did it? A. No, it did not. Q. But decided it in a conclave of leaders? A. Yes, Sir. Q. And you were looked upon as the most influential of those leaders, were you not? A. Yes, Sir."

THE JUDICIAL ASSESSMENTS.

This appears to be a contradiction of the Mayor; but it may be understood by reference to Mr. Croker's testimony at Page 465: "Every one of these gentlemen that he appointed are his friends as well as mine, and have been all along, and that is why they nominated him for Mayor. We try to have a pretty effective organization. That is what we are there for." Speaking of judicial candidates he admitted that they were assessed in their districts, and that they are selected by the Executive Committee and the advisers of Tammany Hall, and are expected to pay a part of the organization expenses. Some of the most eminent of our Judges testified to direct conversations with Mr. Croker about their election contributions, and that they went to him to secure their nominations or the nominations of their associates by Tammany Hall, knowing that its nomination was almost equivalent to election. Justice Barrett saw him on his own behalf and for Judges Van Brunt and Truax, and the subject of nominations and contributions was discussed between them, (Pages 6,806, &c.)

(Quoting:) "It was two years ago that Judge Van Brunt was re-elected, and I (Justice Barrett) went myself to the leader of one of the parties, Mr. Croker, and asked him to use his power to bring about or to help to bring about the renomination of Judge Van Brunt. * * * He very cordially received the suggestion and said that his services entitled him to be retained upon the bench, * * * and then made the observation * * * that he thought the contributions made by strictly political candidates and by public-spirited citizens who took an interest in the success of their party outside of politics would be amply sufficient to conduct the campaign, and that no contribution * * * would be expected, * * * and he (Mr. Croker) was good enough to say that if at any future time I was a candidate again it would not under any circumstances be expected from me. * * * It was to the effect that it would not cost him one penny or me one penny." Both of these Judges were subsequently nominated by Tammany, and their certificates show that they paid no money whatever; while all other Judges (excepting one) nominated by Tammany for many years back have paid substantial election contributions aggregating many thousands of dollars, some being asked by Mr. Croker and some paying directly to him. The contributions sworn to by Judges of the City Court this year were half a year's salary.

As counter examples we refer to Judge Pryor, who said Mr. Croker asked for $10,000 from him, which he paid by check, and to Surrogate Ransom, (6,891,) who paid $12,000, and was told to pay that amount by Mr. Croker, and who at first protested against the size of what he called "the assessment." Do such relations as these give Mr. Croker and his organization, whose nomination is almost equivalent to an election, any additional power and influence in the community?

APPOINTMENTS OF REFEREES.

Mr. Croker freely claimed to be entitled to the patronage of the courts for himself and members of the organization. One Judge (Daly) was refused renomination because he would not yield this patronage. Mr. Croker claimed that Tammany was entitled to the appointment of referees and street opening commissions, &c. (Quoting:) "Q. That is the theory of the city government right through, that the organization in control should have all the offices in every department—judicial, executive, administrative, and everything? A. Yes, Sir; that is what I believe the people voted our ticket for. Q. And that is why you have the emblem of the tiger who has a large mouth which is constantly open? A. Yes, Sir. That was so when we put you out of the Police Board. Q. Will you tell me how that was accomplished?" (465) "A. Recommended a man for your place the same as you spoke a little while ago." He said, (831:) "We are giving the people pure organization government. Q. And that is what you will give them as long as you stay in the business? A. Yes, Sir." He stated the thoroughness of the discipline and admitted that he keeps the whip in hand over his henchmen, and said that is the only way to succeed. "Yes, Sir. In Tammany Hall we have to keep them in line all right—it takes lots of time and patience," and he works very hard at it. He swore that he, as a partner of Peter F. Meyer, a real estate auctioneer, expected to receive the judicial sales from the referees appointed by the Judges—that he expected it would all be kept in line—that participating in the selection of Judges before election he participated in the emolument coming from their judicial proceedings, and looked on that as part of his profit. He looked upon the selection of his firm as a good party act, (Mr. Meyer is one of the Dock Commissioners appointed by the Mayor.) "Q. Then you are working for your own pocket, are you not? A. All the time, but it is satisfactory to you. Q. It is not, then, a matter of statesmanship or patriotism altogether, but it is statesmanship, patriotism, and personal gain mixed up, is it not? A. It is 'to the party belongs the spoils.' I tell you that right out, so that you can make it all right here. We win and we expect every one to stand by us." * * * "Q. As a member of Tammany Hall you are working for your share of the money as well as the glory? A. I want to get a living, yes, Sir. Q. Peter Meyer and you desire to have judicial sales. These sales come through referees who are appointed by the Judges, the line right through being Democratic, is it not entirely consistent with honor and integrity that these Judges and these referees should appoint your firm as the auctioneer? A. Yes, Sir. I should think they would, but they don't always do it. They are not asked to do it. They ought to do it without being asked. Democrats ought to be appointed to all places," (476, &c.)

SHARE OF MR. CROKER'S FIRM.

It appeared that Mr. Croker's firm gets the lion's share of judicial sales, and gets all the auctions ordered by the city departments.

It was after Mr. Croker gave this evidence that the Judges testified, and all the Judges who were nominated on Mr. Croker's ticket in October (after that testimony) made the regular contributions, the City Court Judges increasing their former contributions to half a year's salary, and Municipal Judges paying large sums likewise.

It appeared later that nearly all bonded city employees and nearly all pawnbrokers, and a majority of city contractors, are bonded in the United States Fidelity and Guaranty Company, of which Mr. Croker's friend, Mr. Freedman, is the leading spirit—that Mr. Croker was taken into it to get his influence, and that Mr. Freedman shares his profits with him, by a private agreement.

It appeared that an agent of that bond company had been furnished with an open letter (page 1,736,) signed by the Deputy Chamberlain, a member of the organization, on the official paper of the City Chamberlain, an appointee of the Mayor, recommending him for the purpose of securing bonding business. The Chamberlain testified that he had been selected for his responsible position by Mr. Croker.

It was further proven that when the Roebling Construction Company took Mr. Croker's son in, transferring stock to him, and paying him a salary for teaching him fireproof construction, and employed his nephew as counsel, it at once got the concrete system of fireproofing as practiced by itself past the objections of the city authorities, while other concerns doing a similar business were discriminated against and were compelled to remain on the outside, and now, on the cover of the first edition of the new building code, is printed the announcement that this company's construction is the recognized standard.

It was proven that efforts were made to get other concerns to hire the same lawyer, and to give up valuable property in order to secure business advantages, and to be protected in the new building code.

POLITICIANS IN CORPORATIONS.

In most of these matters Mr. Croker was fairly communicative, but when pertinent inquiries were put to him concerning other business relations which brought him more or less into contact with city offices, he declined to testify, though the declinations were most convincing that there were circumstances in those connections that were reprehensible. They are referred to because they show as plainly as direct testimony could that this influence so potent on public matters has reached out and included private business, whose proprietors, in order to ward off all danger, to secure advantages, or to overreach competitors, make direct business connections with the leader himself, as well as with relatives and associates. These arrangements bear heavily against those business men and companies that are not in the combination. The control of the leader over the various city departments with their vast powers and discretions, unchecked by any official directly representing the people, and extending for the very long period of four years, is the secret of the sudden entrance of politicians into corporations and other business concerns. The man who is the virtual ruler of the city can secure peace and advantage and business to any concern that takes him and his friends in, and can secure capital here or abroad to float any enterprise, when he guarantees that the city officials will not interfere with it. Can any duty be more imperative than the freeing of the departments from such selfish and powerful control as is now possible, and is within the spirit of the leader and the organization as admitted on oath, and the restoring of that control to the people by as direct a means as can be devised?

Mr. Croker declined to talk about his relations with the International Air and Power Company and the Auto-Truck Company (quoting): (673.) "Q. Why do you have this sudden and peculiar reluctance to discuss what you have already published? A. And tell the business of the company to you? I object to that. Q. Of course you do at this time, Mr. Croker. It is significant that you make an objection at this time. When one man who holds no official position and is in receipt of no official salary, controls the city departments, makes the officers, dictates the policy of the city in all directions, and then gets into companies without having to pay anything for his stock—A. How do you know that? Q. I want to find out. A. I won't let you know. Q. We have a right to know how a man that controls the municipal actions is able to go and put his hand on business men and put their stock in his pocket for nothing. A. You do not know that. Q. Will you tell me—have you done it? A. I won't tell you whether I have or I have not—that is my private affairs. Q.—You dare not say you have not done it? A.—Dare? No, I won't tell my private affairs. Q.—You dare not? A.—I won't tell you my private affairs. Page 676. Q.—Isn't it a fact, Mr. Croker, that simply because you are the leader of Tammany Hall, and because as such leader you control the city departments, you have been taken into that company and given a large amount of stock to secure your influence—isn't that a fact? A.—No, not at all; you are away off. Q.—Now, you are beginning to talk. What is the fact? Have you got any stock? A.—It has nothing to do with the city departments at all; it has nothing to do with the city Government. Q.—But have you got any stock? A.—That I decline to answer. Q.—Did you pay for it? A.—You keep on; I can answer it as long as you can repeat it. Q.—The Health Board have a right to inspect their works if they are in the City of New York? A.—Yes, Sir. Q.—And whether they use soft coal or not would be considered? A.—Yes, Sir. Q.—And whether their works were sanitary would be considered? A.—Yes. Q.—And whether their method of control and containing the power was safe for human life would be considered by the Building Department? A.—Yes, Sir. Q.—It is a very great power? A.—Yes. Q.—And with such power as this it would be in its operations in the City of New York, subject to the oversight of the Health Board, at least? A.—Yes, Sir. (681) Q.—Resolutions could be passed in the Municipal Assembly affecting this business, couldn't they? A.—Yes, Sir, (682) Now, haven't your associates in the Auto-Truck Company brought you in there and presented you with a substantial block of stock in order to secure your mighty influence in preventing the City Departments from interfering with them? A.—I decline to answer because it is my personal affairs. Q.—Then if it be so, that because of your power in this community you have brought in and saddled on that company to do your share in eating up its profits simply because you are the political boss of the city, that is your affairs, and not ours? A.—That is your version, not the people's. Q.—You won't tell us whether it is so? A.—That is all my private affair. Q.—All right, (683;) it is rather interesting to see how much power you have and what you think you have a right to do with your power, and I tell you this one reason why the examination has been conducted as it has been—to allow you to tell in your own way, freely and openly, and without unnecessary prodding, just what power you have; just what you think you have a right to do with it, and what you intend to do with it, and I think we have you on the record pretty well, Mr. Croker. I am glad you think so. Q.—Were you not given $140,000 of that company's stock without the payment of a dollar? A.—I decline to answer. He declined to state (699) whether or not at a time while legislation was pending in Albany affecting the Union or "Huckleberry" Railroad, he owned 800 shares of it. He admitted (706) that persons (referring to associates of John Jacob Astor and other gentlemen) went to him to get his consent and approval for the opening of a telephone company, and that it was probably because they thought he was important in dealing with the different departments, and that he did not give his aid; and was asked whether he had made an agreement with Mr. Cutler, representing the New York Telephone Company, for the annual payment of money to him, which he declined to answer, (710.) (Quoting:) "Q.—Mr. Croker, if you took money, or made an agreement to take money, or had a contract for money from these telephone people, would you consider that an honorable or dishonorable act? A.—Dishonorable. Q.—Did you do it? A.—I decline to answer the question. Again: (Q.—862) Mr. Croker, you wanted a municipal gas plant built for Tammany Hall? A.—Yes, Sir; built for the organization. Q.—With contracts carried out by the members of the organization? A.—Yes, Sir. Q.—Tammany right clean through? A.—Tammany right clean through. Q.—You want the whole business if you can get it? A.—Yes, Sir." Mr. Dunn, Sheriff, who sent all his auction sales to Mr. Croker's firm was asked, Page 2,036:)

SUBORDINATES MUST OBEY.

"Q.—Has it occurred to you, from your knowledge of these matters and your observation, that if Mr. Croker passed an examination and became a member of the bar, he might get all the references? A.—I never dreamed of such a thing; he might. * * * I would give it to him if I was there." Mr. Carroll, Mr. Croker's deputy, at Page 549, &c., gave a remarkable exhibition of servility to his leader and of stern rule for subordinates. "He said that kickers are getting scarce," that the intention of the organization is discipline, "if they don't obey they don't last." Q. (587) So that your party is built up not only upon the political principles which it holds, but upon the way its members sustain each other in business? A.—That is right; yes, Sir. (792) Mr. Croker told of his connection with the United States Fidelity and Guaranty Company. He said that he owns some stock in it and received dividends on it, which dividends go into the firm of Peter F. Meyer & Co. (795) Q.—Of course as leader you control the district leaders. They act in harmony with you, do they not? A.—Pretty well. Q.—And your advisers generally have been satisfied with the heads of the departments; they are in line with you, are they not? A.—Yes; pretty well. Q.—And you say it was their business as members of the organization to make their appointments in line with the will of the organization, have you not said so? A.—Yes, Sir. Q.—And you say so still? A.—Yes, Sir. Q.—And it is necessary for them—to get many of them to take out bonds under the law, is it not? A.—Yes, some of them. Q.—So that you, who are the head of the appointing system in this city, have an interest in the concern to which most of them go to get their bonds? A.—Yes; I have just testified to that." Mr. Freedman said: "I was very anxious to have Mr. Croker's friendship and association in this company on account of the legions of friends that he has got all over this country, and I realized if Mr. Croker would take stock and join me in this enterprise, it would be most successful, because he has got more men that are willing to serve him through friendship than any other man in this country—that is why." (735) Q.—Then you divide with him actual profits of bonding? A.—I have informed you that.

Mr. Carroll, speaking of the appointment of referees, said, (554:) "I tell you what I would like to do; I would like to name every referee they appoint, and I would not name any but a Tammany Democrat," and that Judges should not ask the politicians to recommend them if they did not want to give their patronage. He said that politics had become a practical business; that he had given up a lucrative city position to become Mr. Croker's deputy without a salary, and was not starving, but declined to say how he got his money. The Mayor testified (1,449) that he had known Mr. Carroll twenty-nine or thirty years, and (1,509) knew him more intimately than his own brother.

Mr. Croker said (795, &c.,) that it was the duty of the heads of departments (Commissioners) to make their appointments according to the will of the organization.

MR. CROKER AND HIS TAXES.

For an example of the subserviency of the departments to the leader see Tax Commissioner Feitner's testimony to the effect that Richard Croker was not placed on the tax list for personal property in 1896, 1897, 1898, and 1899, (Page 1,089.) In 1895 he was notified of an assessment of $25,000, and on the 17th of January he swore as follows: "I hereby swear that on the second Monday of January last the value of my personal property, exclusive of bank shares, subject to taxation did not exceed $——, Richard Croker." The testimony of Principal Tax Deputy Bell (Page 954, &c.) shows that Mr. Croker's house, 5 East Seventy-fourth Street, had been reduced in assessable value from $45,000 to $40,000 while all but the immediately adjoining houses remained at their original valuation, and that subsequently $4,000 had been added, leaving the house still $1,000 less than its original valuation. The house in which district leader and Police Commissioner Sexton resides was also reduced $1,000 in value, and the testimony shows many similar marks of favoritism to members or friends of the organization.

"Like master, like man." Will it be supposed that the subordinates of this disciplined organization, who have been appointed by the Mayor to commissionerships and other important positions at the suggestion of Mr. Croker and his associates, will disregard the principles of their combination so clearly stated by the leader and his deputy, and will fail to turn their opportunities into business advantage for the leader, themselves, and the adherents of the organization? Did they not hear from him before we did those epigrammatic expressions that will always be remembered, "To the party belongs the spoils." "We win and we expect every one to stand by." "I want to get a living." "I am working for my pocket all the time." "That (patronage) is a part of my profit." "We want the whole business if we can get it." "We are giving pure organization government." "That is my private business."

WHAT TESTIMONY EXPLAINS.

This explains the enormous increases in payrolls and salaries while taxes are raised to the point of distress; it explains the outrageous discrimination, favoritism, incompetence and neglect in the Tax Department at the time when the people and the city needed the greatest ability, care, devotion and fidelity; it explains the gross favoritism in the Dock Department where Mr. Croker's partner is a commissioner, and a district leader and a liquor dealer is Treasurer, and where $700,000 of treasury orders have been issued to friendly contractors without public bidding and orders still going out to the same persons; it explains the rise of the municipal architects, Horgan & Slattery, the friends of Mr. Croker's deputy, who receive all the designing and architectural work of the departments; it explains the activity of certain Fire Alarm and Smoke Consumer companies; it explains the friendliness of city officials to the Ramapo job, in which members of both political parties are counting on the approachability of these officials to give them a contract the people hate; it explains the danger that those who are interested in certain canal, tunnel and bridge schemes, whether political enemies or not, may succeed in inducing officials to place public improvements on the lines of their private enterprises; it explains the Highway Department scandals heretofore mentioned, it explains in part that official favor to Naughton & Co., which enables it to block streets, injure business people, annoy travelers, and bleed the corporation that has had to employ it, as indicated in our evidence and in the testimony of Mr. Crimmins; it explains the permission by the Building Department of bad and dangerous building tenements condemned positively and extensively proved in our testimony; it explains the jamming into legal existence of a vicious building code, favoring certain lines of contractors and opening the way for official pounding and extortion, against the earnest protests of eminent architects, builders and philanthropists, as clearly shown in the elaborate and convincing case on that subject presented in our record; it partly explains the continuous monopoly of the electric subway companies and the difficulty of getting permission to enter into competition with the New York Telephone Company, as described by Mr. Baldwin and Mr. James of the People's Telephone Company (6,975, 6,989, &c.,) and the immense rates which the subway companies are permitted to charge, approximating $1,000 per mile of single duct per year in advance, as shown in the testimony of subway officials (page 7,073), and Mr. May (page 7,874), electrical engineer (and see 7,000—7,086); it partly explains the favoritism to those companies in the electrical rules submitted by Commissioner Kearney to the Municipal Assembly, and there being held up for reasons stated by Alderman Christman (page 7,082); it explains the awful growth of gambling, pool-selling, vice and robbery, and of police inefficiency and pretended ignorance, hitherto unequaled, most thorough and convincing evidence of which appears in many places in the record.

WHAT DARWIN R. JAMES SAID.

It is worth our time to notice what two of our prominent business men have said on these matters: Mr. Darwin R. James said (6,990): "It is a very marvelous, very remarkable power that is lodged in this single man, the Commissioner of Public Buildings, Lighting and Supplies, conferred by the new charter. It seems one man can stand between the people of the City of New York and cheap telephone service, as the thing now stands." "It is the general understanding that the New York Telephone Company has a controlling interest in the Subway Company's conduits." "It is a common rumor that there are persons in power who are working for their own private ends very largely." "I do not enter into it except as a business matter. We are not able to get our permits; why we do not get it I do not know." "The general belief in the business community is that certain powers in this city are working for their personal ends. I believe it is true. I believe it. It affects the business men and the business affairs of the city. It is a dreadful state of affairs that in a great community such as this any business interest, however humble or however large, should suffer because of the selfish motives of individuals in power, who are seeking their own aggrandizement rather than the public good. There cannot be anything any worse than such a course of proceeding."

The Commissioner was asked to explain the delay, and said, (Page 7,026:) "I wanted to satisfy myself. For the last twelve years I have had certainly twenty different people come with propositions that they were going to organize some sort of a scheme that wanted to go into the subways, or they wanted to put into some corporation's business. I bought off, and my sole object after I found out that I could give this permit was to find out who the incorporators were; if they were bona fide— * * * that they proposed to raise the money * * * I mean to give a reputable service here that would be in competition with the company that has already spent many times that—I wanted to assure those people or to be assured by them that they were prepared to furnish the money and to go into business under this permit, and not to part with this permit or sell it to somebody else or make combinations with some other people."

INTEREST IN A PRIVATE COMPANY.

This was taking a great interest in behalf of the private company that controls and uses the subways under the Commissioner's jurisdiction, and which without his interference charges excessive rents to all others who by law are compelled to use those subways. The investigation of the cheap telephone company was in wonderful contrast to the failure of a whole company of Commissioners to investigate the status and ability of the Ramapo Company.

The city should buy the subways under the law, and can do it now for about $13,000,000. They are earning a profit, and could be made to earn more even while cheapening rates, for at the present time surplus earnings are being put into new construction, thus increasing the price which the city must ultimately pay. Such a valuable right which can be so easily acquired should not be permitted to remain in private hands, especially when it tends to the monopoly and to the throttling of electrical enterprises. This immense discretion, and the similar discretion vested in the Commissioner of Highways, discretion which may be used for coercion, for monopoly, for the practical granting of valuable franchises, should not remain with a Commissioner. Applications should be referred to him for report, but the permit should require the signature of the Mayor or one of the financial boards. This Commissioner admitted that while he has an inadequate patrolling force he has permitted the Metropolitan and Third Avenue Railroads to lay many more electric ducts than they need for their service, and that he would permit them to put in 500 if they wanted them and could get them within a moderate space under and alongside the tracks. This is practically the granting by permit of a most valuable franchise for nothing.

Mr. Crimmins, referring to the changing of motive power of the Third Avenue Railroad by Naughton & Co., said (8,863) that his brother had the contract originally, though it was not signed, and began the work, but had to relinquish it to Naughton & Co., receiving from the Railroad Company pay for what he had done. Mr. McMahon, Chairman of Tammany's Executive Committee, was the active partner of Naughton & Co. Mr. Crimmins said that the company get the larger part of their business on account of their political affiliations with the dominant faction in the city government. Q.—And do contractors believe that they have a chance in competing with Naughton & Co. for such work? A.—There is no competition. Q.—There cannot be under present conditions? A.—I believe not. That is an agreement made between the principals, and that ends it. Q.—How does it enter into contracts with private corporations? A.—I would suppose you would call a railroad semi-public; its operations are under the control of the city government. * * * Q.—So it is necessary for railroad corporations or the persons having that kind of work to be on friendly relations with the city authorities? A.—A very great advantage. Q.—When it comes to the matter of letting out a large contract including great sums of money you consider the giving of that contract to a political firm gives them an advantage? A.—Certainly. Q.—That is the way business is done in the city to-day under your observation and judgment? A.—Under my observation and judgment." He stated (as did officers of the company) that the contract gave to the contractors 15 per cent. commission on their pay rolls—that is, that the railroad company has to pay the labor account of Naughton & Co. and 15 per cent. in addition—the greater the labor bills the greater the percentage and the contractor's profit. The witness, as a stockholder of the Third Avenue Railroad Company, had observed and complained of the delays in their work and the way the workmen loafed. The evidence of a willful, systematic, and serious delay by workmen was entirely conclusive, and that, with the supineness of the company now at the mercy of the contracting firm, was a startling incident of the investigation and would have been brought to its logical conclusion had there been more time, (see testimony of many witnesses, Pages 7,822 to 7,836, and of Mr. Harris in supplem tering percentages, ranging from 10 to 125 per cent.

SCORES THE COMMISSIONERS.

Tax Commissioner Grell was so ignorant of these matters that he could not tell whether the valuations in Manhattan and the Bronx had been increased $100,000, $200,000, $300,000, $400,000, or $500,000 or which of those figures was nearest to the actual increase. Tax Commissioner Sheehy was wisely non-committal on all questions calling upon his knowledge and opinion. He was unable to tell the rates of increase in either of the boroughs, even approximately (2,490.) There was read to him from Mr. Feitner's statement the increase of valuation over 1898: Manhattan—17.5 per cent.; Bronx, 22.2 per cent.; Brooklyn, 7.8 per cent.; Queens, 37.1 per cent.; Richmond, 66.2 per cent., and he was reminded that Richmond was increased very much more than Manhattan; he answered (2,501): "Well, I never considered it so, and I don't consider it so now, and those estimates there—I may have made them myself or the figures, but that has not been called to the attention of the different boroughs as to the percentage that we have made on them." Our inquiry into the collection of the personal tax showed that there is no system worthy of the term; that large numbers of prominent people have not been on the personal tax-list for years; that politicians are conspicuous by their absence from that list, and that through the defects of the law and of the system of collection, so small a proportion of the personal property in the city is under taxation that it is the rankest injustice to exact the ax from those who are compelled to pay it. Commissioner Sheehy testified that the personal assessments are a matter of guess, (2,529,) and that it is a very defective system, and may be compared to a great sieve, in which the big fish all go through, and the little fish are caught; that the great majority of those who are paying personal taxes are of small means—$10,000 or less, and that there are few people who are paying on $100,000 or more. He said that the tax system needs radical revision (2,606.) In 1898 the amount of personal tax assessed was $6,688,000, and the amount not sworn off was $428,000. In 1899 the amount assessed was $7,500,000, and the portion of that held for taxation about $500,000. It appeared that the personal taxes and corporation taxes are considered in a committee of the board, consisting of Commissioners Grell and Saimon, with Commissioner Feitner and Commissioner Grell, who testified, did not know who was the Chairman of his committee. The taxation of corporations is in a similar state of confusion—favoritism to breweries being conspicuous. Tax Commissioner Grell has had direct connection with the breweries, and on his testimony, feels great sympathy for them. The method used for getting statements from the corporations is antiquated and ineffective. The blanks used have not been improved for many years. The returns of the corporations present on the merest inspection suggestions for pertinent questioning of them, that has never been made, and it appears that statements of corporation officers are taken without investigation and without probing. In this particular, there is great discrimination in favor of the corporation and against the real estate owner, for the valuation is not imposed upon the corporation until its officer has had an opportunity to put its own valuation upon its property, while the real estate owner has no warning of the visit or of the intention of the Deputy Tax Commissioner of his district, and cannot know what valuation is to be put on his property until that valuation has become so fixed as to be presumptively correct, and subject to change only upon his appeal to the Tax Commissioners.

Referring again to real estate taxation, Commissioner Sheehy readily admitted that the vast increase in Manhattan and the Bronx was not due in any large proportion to increase in value, but that it was mostly due to the necessity of equalizing. (Mr. Feitner, early in 1898, protested vigorously against an increase of $70,000,000 made in the preceding year.)

DEPUTY BELL'S TESTIMONY.

Principal Deputy Commissioner Bell was asked, (977.) "What was the reason for the immense increase?" He answered, "The charter provides that we must equalize all parts of the greater city. Upon examination we found that Brooklyn was assessed at a very high proportion to what the property was selling for. The consequence was, we had to bring Manhattan, Queens, Richmond, and Bronx up to that figure." "Q. It is not then based upon any notion that the property itself has appreciated in any such proportion as these books show? A. Not at all. It is merely to equalize. Q. An arbitrary act? A. Yes, Sir." The witness said that no particular instructions were given to the deputies. He was asked, "Q. Were they told to bring in any increase or decrease in valuation? A. No, Sir. Q. How do they equalize? A. It is intimated to them. Q. Was there some direction and some general oversight of the valuations to be fixed by the deputies? A. No, Sir. Q. How did they get the ratio? A. There was no definite ratio. No man increased his district by a certain percentage. He was supposed to equalize each piece of property with other property in the city. Q. Then is it the fact that each deputy must attend to his own district, and get what knowledge he can from other districts to keep himself straight? A. He is supposed to, yes, Sir. Q. Each deputy in his own district is independent? A. Yes, Sir, and powerful. Q. And that deputy, not in pursuance of any general system, but by his own knowledge, fixes the value in his district? A. He does. Q. Is there no general control, no oversight, for the purpose of harmonizing these districts? A. Just as I said a moment ago, the Commissioners direct them to equalize with other parts of the city. Q. But they must do that themselves? A. Yes, Sir. Q. It is of the utmost consequence to the people of New York that Deputy Tax Commissioners should be honest men, and men of ability? A. Undoubtedly. Q. And if they are under any kind of control it is bound to be felt in the taxes? A. Yes, Sir." Commissioner Sheehy testified, (2,428:) "The deputies went out into the field and assessed the property at their own best judgment, and they are responsible for it. We gave them no instructions as to their assessment. They have taken their oath as Deputy Tax Commissioners, and have gone forth into the field and used their own best judgment and assessed the property." (2,430.) "Q. And you say that these deputies, each by himself, each in a separate section, was sent out to make their valuations for 1899 without any instructions from the Commissioners? A. I say that positively. Q. What did you do to secure uniformity—equalization—between sections? A. There were special instructions given—no more than were read to them from the charter—what they were entitled to under the law." (2,438.) "Q. You have heard that it was necessary to increase the burden of Manhattan in order to equalize. I ask you why the equalization was not equally divided between the ten sections? A. Well, the deputies are the best judges of that. Q. According to your statement, the deputies are men of great power? A. They are men of great power. Q. Was it the intention of your board to assess at the full market value? A. The intention of the board is a different matter altogether. The board has no intention in the matter. The board gave no instructions, I say." He was asked to explain how it was that when the average increase for Manhattan was 17.5 per cent. that there were many individual increases of 50, 75, and 100 per cent., but could not explain it. He admitted that the figures had to be put on in addition to the natural increase, to equalize.

We have already referred to the striking lack of qualification of one deputy, Mr. Engelhardt.

QUALIFICATION OF DEPUTIES.

Mr. Moore, another deputy, had the district bounded by Fourteenth and Fortieth Streets, Fifth and Sixth Avenues, and the East River. He was asked what qualification he had for assessing such peculiar pieces of property as the Waldorf-Astoria. He said he did not know anything peculiar about it, and he considered his knowledge sufficient for it. His knowledge was obtained by keeping records in the Tax Office. He had made increases east of Third Avenue and struck them all out. "Q.—Who told you to strike them out? A.—Nobody. Q.—How did you come to do it? A.—Just to equalize the westerly part of my section. Q.—How can striking out the increase equalize, when the general tendency is to increase? A.—I also struck out some I had raised westerly. I thought that it would be a fair way to equalize my district. Q.—When you went back to the office and looked over your figures how many pieces did you take value off of? A.—Pretty near all."

Deputy Tax Commissioner Hayden (3,280, &c.) had assessed in the Bronx District at 100 per cent. of value, and had never heard of Commissioner Feitner's intention to have property assessed at 75 per cent. of recorded sales. "Q.—What did you do, or what were you asked to do, in conferring with other deputies for the purpose of equalization of values?" (3,287) "A.—I conferred with no other deputies. I was told to do nothing. I got no instructions from anybody. Q.—Did anybody speak to you about the necessity of equalizing under the charter? A.—No, Sir. Q.—Did you receive any instructions of any kind regarding equalization? A.—No, Sir." (3,293) "I deem the adjoining assessors as intelligent as myself, and there was no need of conference."

Deputy Tax Commissioner Blumers (3,408) was appointed in 1898 on a civil service rating of 78 per cent. and was at that time a salesman in his brother's grocery business in Seventy-fifth Street, Manhattan, where he had been since 1876. He was assigned to duty at Newtown, Queens County. He said he had increased the assessments in Newtown, but he did not know how much; that he never received any instructions about assessing at 75 per cent. of recorded sales. He did not report his assessments to the Queens County tax officers, but made all his reports to the Manhattan office. "Q.—Who advised you in fixing values? A.—No one."

POOR KNOWLEDGE OF FIGURES.

Deputy Tax Commissioner Michael Ryan showed that he was incapable of forming the simplest examples in arithmetic, and was confronted with his arithmetic paper in the civil service examination, on which he received only 36 per cent. One question was (3,435): "On property assesseds at $18,567,315 a tax of $347,208.79 was levied, what is the tax rate?" "Q.—Why did you not do that? A.—Probably it might have been in the excitement. Q.—How would you do it? A.—By figuring. Q.—How would you figure that example? A.—You could figure it if you choose. Q.—How would you do it? I ask you because you did not answer it in your civil service examination. It is fair to give you an opportunity now. A.—Yes, well, I decline to do it." Another question which he could not answer was: "On a lot of land 25 by 100, there is a house running back 60 feet with an extension 18 by 23, what percentage of the area of the lot is covered by the house?" "Q.—Did you receive any instructions before you went out to make out your assessments about what you were to do? A.—Not any. Q.—Not any instructions? A.—We were invited to the office in New York, and simply the charter was read to us as to what our duties are, and that was all the instructions we ever had. Q.—So that when you went out you had the field entirely to yourself? A.—Sure."

Deputy Tax Commissioner Uihlein, residing in Manhattan, had been assigned to the assessment of real estate in Queens. He examined 8,700 pieces of property in ninety days.

Deputy Tax Commissioner Kelly testified (3,513) that prior to his appointment he was a searcher in the Tax Office. He said he assessed property at what it would bring under any circumstances. "Q.—Circumstances of boom or panic? A.—Panic, or anything else. Q.—Did you assess at the lowest panic figures? A.—I assessed at what I considered it would sell for. Q.—Under what circumstances? A.—Under any circumstances; under any conditions. Q.—Did you assess it at the lowest figure it would bring under any conditions? A. No, nor the highest, neither. Q. Did you assess it at the highest figure it would bring? A. No. Q. Did you assess it at the medium figure? A. I assessed it at what I thought it would bring. Q. You said you assessed it at what it would bring under any and all circumstances? A. Say ordinary circumstances. Q. What are ordinary circumstances? A. Forced sale, or panic, or a depression, or change of grade. Q. Are panic and depression ordinary circumstances? A. Those are what I consider ordinary circumstances. Q. A forced sale? A. Yes, Sir. Q. Are those the ordinary circumstances in the district you assess? A. Those are ordinary circumstances, yes, Sir. Q. Always under panic? A. Under ordinary conditions. No, they are not always under panic. Q. Are they always under forced sale? A. No. Q. Those are what you say are ordinary circumstances? A. Those are generalities. Q. Did you give panic values? A. No. Q. Did you give forced sale values? A. No. Q. Did you give depression values? A. No. Q. What value did you give? A. I assessed it at what I considered it would bring under ordinary circumstances. Q. You say ordinary circumstances are panic, forced sale, and depression? A. You can take it for what you like. Q. You said ordinary circumstances are panic, depression, and forced sale, and that you assessed at the ordinary circumstances? A. That is ordinary circumstances—change of grade." The witness's uncertainty may have arisen from the fact that he lived in Manhattan and did duty in the Bronx. He said that he had not received any instructions, although he knew he had to do something to equalize, and that he paid no attention to the figures of the preceding year. (2,533.) "Q.—What were they in your field book for? A. I don't know; that is the rule of the department. Q. What was the rule for? A. I'm blessed if I know." He said he had not received any instructions. "Q. How were you left, then? A. Well, I must have been left by myself. Q. Were you left by yourself to exercise your own judgment? A. My own judgment. Q. Regardless of what anybody else thought or said? A. Yes, Sir. Q. With what experience you had in the position and your judgment of your duties, you went ahead and produced those books? A. I did; yes, Sir. Q. What was the total increase in your book? A. I did not figure it out."

GOT NO INSTRUCTIONS.

Deputy Tax Commissioner Godley, living in Whitestone, was sent to assess in Long Island City, where he had no experience. He examined over 24,000 pieces of property from September to January. He said he was left to his own resources (3,536) and had no advice from the department, and did not know that there had been a reduction of $5,000,000 by the courts.

Deputy Tax Commissioner Schlieman testified, (3,539.) He said he had no instructions concerning what he was to do in his district. "Q. Your superiors did not tell you? A. None whatever. Q. They did not advise you? A. No, Sir. Q. They left it entirely to you? A. They left it entirely to me." The witness testified that he owned ten or twelve pieces of property in his district. "I looked at it that Brooklyn was already burdened enough with taxation. As a property owner, to my sorrow, I had some experience there. * * * Q. Then was not your idea as a property owner in that very district that equalizing would have to be done by putting a heavier burden upon the other boroughs than on Brooklyn? A. Correct. Q. Did the Commissioners tell you that? A. No, Sir. Q. There were no instructions that went out, so far as you know, that Brooklyn was not to be increased? A. None whatever. Q. And did you mean to say that all that enterprise and work into the field and assessed the property at their own best judgment, and they are responsible for it. We gave them no instructions as to their assessment. They have taken their oath as Deputy Tax Commissioners, and have gone forth into the field and used their own best judgment and assessed the property." (2,430.) "Q. And you say that these deputies, each by himself, each in a separate section, was sent out to make their valuations for 1899 without any instructions from the Commissioners? A. I say that positively. Q. What did you do to secure uniformity—equalization—between sections? A. There were special instructions given—no more than were read to them from the charter—what they were entitled to under the law." (2,438.) "Q. Well, the deputies are the best judges of that. Q. According to your statement, the deputies are men of great power? A. They are men of great power. Q. Was it the intention of your board to assess at the full market value? A. The intention of the board is a different matter altogether. The board has no intention in the matter. The board gave no instructions, I say." He was asked to explain how it was that when the average increase for Manhattan was 17.5 per cent. that there were many individual increases of 50, 75, and 100 per cent., but could not explain it. He admitted that the figures had to be put on in addition to the natural increase, to equalize.

Deputy Tax Commissioner Blumers (3,408) was appointed in 1898 on a civil service rating of 78 per cent. and was at that time a salesman in his brother's grocery business in Seventy-fifth Street, Manhattan, where

Court, each proceeding having its own set of costs and expenses, and each Commissioner having his own per diem allowance, and being possibly entitled to extra compensation.

Under the charter provisions relating to street openings, the power is given to the city authorities to make title vest in them, by resolution at the inception of the proceeding, and Mr. Henschel testified that it is the custom for the city to take advantage of that power. The letter of Truman H. Baldwin, in our supplementary volume of testimony, shows very clearly the great hardship on property owners who are divested of their titles on the passage of the resolution, but who get no income and no money until the proceedings terminate. The plan also is a burden on the city, for it carries an interest liability at 6 per cent. from the time of the vesting of title.

The number of pending proceedings is so great, and the prospective street openings and condemnation proceedings are so many, that it would seem to be wise to create a special Board or Commission of Condemnation, which would be specially qualified, and appointed from the highest considerations, which board or commission, while saving the expenses of hundreds of minor commissions, would bring to the whole subject an intelligence and precision that is not now known.

A number of Commissioners of Street Openings were called before the committee, and we were about to inquire into the Croton water shed condemnation, at the time of the adjournment. It was evident from the examinations that were made that many of the Commissioners were ignorant and unqualified for their positions—some of them being liquor dealers, barbers, clerks, stablekeepers—men honest enough and experienced enough in their peculiar callings, but hardly fitted to act judicially upon conflicting testimony of real estate conditions and values. One general characteristic was observed in those who testified, and that was their direct relation to Tammany Hall.

THE WATER SUPPLY.

The testimony concerning the water supply and the Ramapo scheme has been so closely followed, and is so fresh in our memories, that extensive quotation will not be necessary. The evidence taken by the committee covered every phase of the question, and is a storehouse of information. The department records and the testimony of experts showed that our present water system, both on Long Island and in the Croton and Bronx water sheds, is capable of great expansion with comparatively small expense, and such expansion would continue the settled policy of municipal ownership of water supply. It is also shown that immense storage reservoirs are now nearing completion, and that the building of new pipe lines already planned for the Borough of Brooklyn would utilize large quantities of water that are going to waste there, and the annual report of the Commissioner of Water Supply states that during the year 1898 109,476,000,000 gallons of water went to waste over the Croton dam, and that 20,000,000 of gallons a day are running to waste at Millburn on the Brooklyn system for lack of conduits to carry it, and competent testimony showed that suffering in the Borough of Queens is due largely to the intentional neglect of the municipal water plant in Long Island City.

Convincing testimony was found in the report of the Water Commissioner for 1898 that the plans of the department then for the increase of water supply were well considered, and were deemed to be sufficient, and all that without suggestion of buying water from private companies to any great extent.

The department reports, and the testimony of eminent authorities, showed great loss of water in the city through waste and leakage. The loss by waste is so great that it was made the subject of a special recommendation of the department for the great increase of water meters, (see report of 1898.) Mr. Croes, the eminent engineer, accounted for the extravagant per capita allowance of water largely on the ground of waste and leakage, though the testimony of several witnesses would indicate that the partiality of the department officials for the Thomson Water meter, with which concern the son of one of the department engineers is connected, had something to do with their anxiety for an increase of meter service.

Our evidence showed that the Ramapo Water Company had maintained a mere legal existence, and that even its technical life was so uncertain that the counsel of the company resorted to the method of securing legislative recognition by having the act of 1895 passed. That act slipped through the Legislature very easily, though the bill had been changed after its introduction so as to give the company extraordinary powers and privileges. The company had made unsuccessful efforts to secure the favor of former administrations in New York and Brooklyn, and over a year passed after it applied to the present administration before any public action occurred that would indicate a serious consideration of its propositions.

MR. LAUTERBACH'S TESTIMONY.

Mr. Lauterbach, the company's counsel, testified, (5,841:)

"I finally convinced Mr. Holahan, President of the Board of Public Improvements, that there was an absolute necessity for carrying out the project of which I was in favor. I got him to go to the Esopus water shed to examine it. * * * Before that time everybody had pooh-poohed it; there was nothing in it; it was a matter of no consequence. When they came back from their examination there was the unanimous sentiment and report from every side that the water-shed was the ideal water-shed for the supplying of water to the City of New York."

It was not supplying water anywhere, and the most diligent investigation failed to show the ownership of any real estate or water property. Other companies were offering to supply water to the city, some at lower prices than the Ramapo price, and some of these companies were actually operating.

Our testimony, which has already been alluded to, clearly showed that the water officials of the city acted in gross ignorance of the company, its standing and prospects, and that they proceeded with indecent haste—that the contract was impossible of execution, and that the officials so believed, and the contract was full of provisions that were detrimental to the city's interests, and that were susceptible of varying constructions.

The testimony clearly indicated that the enterprise was a stock-jobbing scheme, and that the company, if it had secured the contract, on its strength would have issued millions of dollars of securities for the raising of money.

Mr. Lauterbach testified that he had already secured thirty millions of dollars of English capital to take up these bonds as soon as the contract might be made. (The reputation of the leader of Tammany in England as the virtual controlling power of the public matters of this city makes it comparatively easy to raise English capital for any business enterprise which has the obvious backing of his organization.)

WOULD REPEAL RAMAPO CHARTER.

The plan to bind the city for forty years to a company which has no capital and no plant and no prospective asset except the city's contract, and that, by an ill-considered and ill-digested contract, while the city officials were in absolute ignorance concerning the company's status, and had not seen or discussed any plans of the company for overcoming the engineering difficulties, failed temporarily because of an opposition in the Board of Public Improvements, which seems to have arisen to some extent because of a conflict between the controlling political powers in Manhattan and Brooklyn, arising out of the Long Island Water Company's condemnation and purchase.

While there are differing opinions about the proper construction of the sections of the charter referring to the water contracts, it is perfectly clear that the conspirators have proceeded upon the theory that the Commissioner of Water Supply and a majority of the Board of Public Improvements (excluding all borough Presidents, but including all Commissioners and the Corporation Counsel, for this purpose) could make the contract without public bidding or public letting, and without the concurrence of the Municipal Assembly or any other board or officials. This proposed contract went so far as to delegate to the company all the powers of the city that might be necessary for its performance, and a combination of unelected Commissioners, unchecked by the Mayor, representing nobody but their own organization, undertook and still undertakes to complete this act, and they are sustained by the powerful Corporation Counsel, the Mayor's appointee, who has antagonized every injunction proceeding that has been brought to interfere with it.

We think that your committee should advise the Legislature to repeal the charter of the Ramapo Water Company for non-user of its powers, and to amend Section 471 of the charter so as to make contracts for water supply subject to the general requirements for all other great contracts, and to repeal Section 1,619 as having absolutely no relation to the charter, but as perhaps injuring by implication the city's rights in the matter of water supply.

MR. DALTON'S QUALIFICATIONS.

The urgency of the Commissioner of Water Supply for the making of this contract and the elaborate reasons which he gave for it, as against the records of the department made by experts and the testimony given to you by experts, should be considered in the light of his own testimony concerning his qualifications:

"Q.—(6,380.) Mr. Dalton, did you go into your office possessed of any special knowledge or ability in engineering or water supply? A.—Well, so far as engineering, yes, Sir; I owned an engine for some years. Q.—Where? A.—At my place of business. We manufactured butchers' supplies and did carpenter work. It was a small engine, about 8-horse power. I served my time as a mechanic at the carpenter trade. I had no special knowledge or ability on the subject of gran dengineering or in water supply, (6,364.) I am only a plain mechanic."

This is the kind of man and the grade of Commissioner upon whom now rests the great interests of the city in this most vital matter of water supply.

The suggestion of Alfred T. White, ex-Commissioner of Public Works of Brooklyn, a man of great ability and experience—that the State should appoint a commission to consider the whole matter of conserving the available water supply for the benefit of all of its cities—should be adopted, at least for the eastern part of the State.

Unless some statesmanlike action be taken in this direction there will be great conflicts of interest between the rapidly growing cities of this section of the State. New York City is already interfering with the natural water supplies of Yonkers, Tarrytown, Sing Sing, and many other small but important and growing communities. Mr. White says that the natural and unfailing source of supply for the section east of the Hudson River is in the Adirondacks, and that by wisdom and forethought at the present time exhaustless provision can be made for this entire section by which every community may have all that it needs without injuring others.

JUDICIAL ASSESSMENTS.

The committee was requested by many citizens to inquire into the matter of assessments upon or contributions by judicial candidates. Resolutions urging this course were passed by the City Club, the Chamber of Commerce, and the Bar Association, and prominent members of these societies waited upon the committee and its counsel.

Wheeler H. Peckham, formerly President of the Bar Association, and one of the leaders of the New York Bar, testified (485, &c.,) that it was well known and a subject of comment among the members of the bar that candidates for judicial position pay for nomination for election large sums of money. He said: "Judges have spoken to me about assessments, and deprecated the existence of it very strongly." Speaking of these statements he said: "I suppose the amount paid would range somewhere between $10,000 and $25,000. That is the amount talked of or assumed as being paid."

He said it was understood that "referees are to a great degree appointed in recognition of a political party or organization that nominated the Judge, or to which he owed his nomination." He said: "That is the general belief." Continuing, he said: "I can say in a word what I suppose every one knows as well as I do, or with just so much basis for knowledge as I have—that the Judges of the court here recognize their obligation to the political organization which elected them, and they have a desire—and it is carried to a greater or less extent in the distribution of the patronage that belongs to them—to recognize that fact. * * * I think the system is a bad one, as bad as it is possible to be. I think that the judicial character and position is elevated precisely in proportion to its lack of any patronage whatever. The more it is without patronage the higher it stands. If a man is the beneficiary of a party or organization he naturally feels a gratitude to those people. * * * That feeling may well carry one a little too far, and swerve him from the duty he owes to the public. It puts him in temptation. My notion of the position of a Judge is that he should be put away up above temptation." (490.) If I had the power to enact a judicial system, the two points which I would first endeavor to accomplish would be to make the Judge as absolutely independent as possible by giving him a reasonably fair salary and as long a tenure of office as could be done, and to remove him from any possible temptation to do what he might not otherwise think of doing, by eliminating from his position every possible idea of patronage."

JUSTICE BARTLETT'S OPINION.

Justice Barrett said, referring to the assessment or contribution custom:

"(6,814:) I am opposed to the whole system, and I don't mean by that—I hope it is not from any shabby feeling—but it is because of the principle that I think the judiciary—and I have always thought so, and it is getting deeper and deeper in my heart as I grow older—ought to be absolutely removed from the political arena and strife in every conceivable way that is possible under our constitution and law. I don't see any reason why the Judge who is upon the ticket for an election should be in any different position from what he would be if the Governor had nominated him and the Senate consented. Surely a contribution then would be corruption. * * * I don't know why the persons who are candidates for strictly political offices should not help bear the expenses paid. I don't think the Judges ought to at all. I think they ought to be consecrated and set apart. When a man goes into that vocation, which is second only to the vocation of a minister of religion, and devotes his life to the sacred cause of justice, he ought to be set apart, and I think he ought to be relieved from those conditions which attach to the ordinary conflicts in politics. Q.—And on that do you not think it is unfortunate that the candidate for judicial position, or one interested in another, should have to go to a so-called leader of an organization to make arrangements to secure a nomination? Do you not think it would be a great improvement if that could be changed? A.—If by 'making arrangements to secure nominations' you mean pecuniary arrangements, that is horrible."

Mr. Croker (600) corroborated Judge Pryor's testimony that he was asked for $10,000 for his nomination for a vacant half term in the Supreme Court. He said:

"I told him there were 1,300 districts in the City of New York, * * * and I thought that the Finance Committee at that time would exact about $10,000 as a contribution, and he said he was perfectly willing that it should be paid toward the election."

MR. CROKER AND JUSTICE PRYOR.

Mr. Croker said the conversation took place in Tammany Hall, where the Judge had gone to arrange matters.

"Q.—(601)—Other Judges have done the same thing, haven't they? A.—They have done it, yes, Sir. Q.—You don't mean to say that you made a special thing against Judge Pryor in that matter? A.—No, not at all. Q.—It was a common thing for judicial candidates to pay in money that way? A.—Yes, Sir; they ought to pay a part of their expenses. * * * Q.—It was a common thing for them to come to Tammany Hall at the proper time and arrange the details? A.—I should think so. I could not recollect where they would go. They may go to different places—wherever it was convenient. They might see the people who were in their districts, the district leaders. Q.—But it was for the purpose of getting into line with the organization and contributing to the organization expenses was it not? A.—Yes, Sir; helping the organization out. Q.—You heard Judge Pryor testify that his check was drawn to your order; did you see the check drawn to your order? A.—I don't recollect that; probably it was. Q.—And it was taken back to him with the suggestion that it had better be drawn to bearer—why was that? A.—I didn't want any checks drawn to my order of that sort. Q.—Were these assessments that were paid by the Judges and by other candidates entered into any account books? A.—No. Q.—No account kept of them? A.—No."

Judge Pryor testified (523) that the check which he had drawn to the order of Richard Croker was brought back to him by Michael T. Daly, the present Deputy Controller, and the man whom Judge Daly refused to appoint to a position, and for which refusal partly he was denied a renomination.

Judge Daly testified (505) that he had notification from Mr. Croker that this failure to respond to the demand for patronge was considered to be a personal affair, (506,) and that for that reason, and the faiulre to appoint Mr. Daly, (502,) he would not be renominated.

All of the prominent Judges that could be reached were examined, and with the exceptions of Judges Barrett, Van Brunt, MacLean, Cohen, and Gaynor, they had made political contributions aggregating many thousands of dollars at about the time of their nomination.

Most of these Judges deprecated the assessment or contribution plan on grounds of public policy, while some of them could see no reason why a judicial candidate should not contribute to the party that nominates him, life other candidates, (Pages 6,716 to 6,957 and 7,337 to 7,388.)

HOW THE JUDGES STOOD.

Judges who were opposed to contributions or favored a law prohibiting them were: Judges Pryor, Daly, Gildersleeve, Scott, Patterson, Bischoff, Dugro, Fitzgerald, Beekman, Barrett, Cowing, Gaynor, Freedman, Leventritt, O'Brien, Lawrence, and Cohen.

Judges favoring contributions or opposing law prohibiting them, were: Judges Giegerich, McAdam, Surrogate Fitzgerald, Maddox, Smith, Van Brunt.

Judges who were not prepared to express any definite opinion on the question of prohibiting contributions, were: Judges Beach, Truax, MacLean, and Ingraham.

Judges who favored the removal of patronage, were: Judges Bischoff, Daly, and Truax.

Judges who favored the creation of a Board of Official Referees, were: Judges McAdam, (6,744,) Barrett, (who strongly recommends also a Board of Official Stenographers to take the testimony without imposing the great burden of expense upon suitors that now exists in references,) Maddox, Ingraham, and Cohen.

Judges who favored the continuance of the present system of appointing referees, were: Judges Dugro, Beach, Beekman, and Leventritt.

(See additional testimony on the payment of contributions by judicial candidates, 9,401-9,410.)

WOULD BAR CONTRIBUTIONS.

Counsel would recommend that the committee report in favor of the passage of a bill prohibiting contributions by judicial candidates substantially in the form proposed in the draft of the City Club submitted herewith.

It would appear from the testimony and from the general knowledge of lawyers and litigants that some system should be devised by which the Judges should be relieved of the burden and the criticism attached to the present referee system, and by which litigants should be relieved from the expenses of referees; indeed, the obviously political character of many of the appointments as referees and Commissioners as proven before the committee in connection with the open avowal of Tammany's leader and deputy of their determination to control patronage of the courts, and the sharp illustration in the case of Judge Daly of the punishments that followed a refusal to yield patronage—these facts indicate very clearly the necessity of lifting this important branch of judicial work out of the influences attending upon that partisan control or interference which is bound to follow the Judges who have to sue the leader of the organization for their nomination.

Judge O'Brien's testimony (Page 7,359) showed very clearly that Mr. Croker practically determines the complexion and the personnel of the judiciary. No plan seems to be more practicable than that which was discussed by some of the Judges, of having official referees selected by the Appellate Division, and Judge McAdam's suggestion that there should be official stenographers as well who would be compensated by salaries, instead of by folio charges to be paid by the litigants, is worthy of consideration. This ought not to interfere with the right of litigants to select any lawyer as referee by consent.

PRIVATE FRANCHISES.

The testimony showed the existence of a number of private franchises for the construction of public works within what is now all the territory of the City of New York. These franchises are for the construction of large and important canals in Queens County, and bridges across the East River, and there seem to be other franchises in existence for tunnels under the river. Only one of these franchises appears to have been actually built upon, the Rainey (Blackwell's Island) Bridge, for which piers have been started. One of the franchises under the Uhlman law of 1892 was bought by the city in constructing the new East River Bridge. It is believed that the city authorities will buy the other franchises granted in that law for the second new East River bridge, and it is believed that the Rainey franchise and the canal franchises in Queens County will have to be purchased by the city, because of the location of public works upon the lines of the franchises. It does not seem likely that such great works as tunnels, bridges, and canals will hereafter be left by the city authorities for private parties to construct, but, on the other hand, the announced platforms of the great parties in favor of municipal ownership, and the great popular feeling in that direction will make it difficult for private persons to succeed in getting control of these improvements that are needed by the people.

The Chairman of this committee recently announced his views on this question as follows:

"I favor the passage of a law prohibiting the granting to private individuals of franchises for public improvements within or entering into the city limits, without the consent of the city authorities."

Counsel recommend the passage of such a law, and further advise that a bill be introduced for the repeal of the charters of all private companies holding such franchises which have not actually commenced the construction of the improvements which they were authorized to undertake.

The movements of the Ramapo Company and of certain bridge and tunnel companies that have secured private franchises show the tendency for speculators to obtain rights from the Legislature which, with the connivance of local officials, can be converted into money out of the City Treasury, and show the methods that have been in use to secure respectable and eminent heads to avert suspicion and to obtain more easily official and legislative assistance. Judge Gaynor was offered $50,000 of stock to accept the Presidency of the Ramapo Company, and he refused it. Gen. Tracy, its counsel, became its President and received $40,000 for the stock, which compensated him, and his influence was used to aid in the passage of the objectionable bill of 1895, which he said had been changed without his knowledge, and as to which he frankly blamed himself.

The presence of prominent members of both parties in these companies, based directly on State legislation by special acts, and which are not designed to do business by themselves and without city support, causes public suspicion that combinations exist to secure public action on both sides of the line of political division, and leads inevitably to scandal. Presumably, the city is competent to build and maintain all great public works within its territory, and will sooner build or buy than permit private persons to own and profit by works of necessity. The obvious remedy is to cease the granting of such franchises unless with notice to the city authorities and with their consent.

THE BUILDING DEPARTMENT.

The testimony of two building experts was introduced, and it revealed a shocking disregard of the building laws now prevailing in the erection of tenement and apartment houses in the city. They examined scores of new buildings and reported the violations of the law in detail. Some of these violations were dangerous (see 6,672 to 6,707 and 8,345 to 8,408; 8,178 to 8,180 and 8,304 to 8,344.)

The disposition of the Building Department was also shown early in the investigation in the testimony concerning the fireproofing interests given by Mr. Archer (p. 12,) Mr. Himmelwright, (pp. 18 and 993,) Mr. McCann, (p. 58,) Mr. Tubby, (p. 68,) Mr. Watson, (p. 76,) Mr. Hayes, (pp. 91 and 235,) Mr. Tostevin, (pp. 104 and 216,) and Mr. Frank Croker, (p. 240.)

A great deal of this testimony reflected upon the character of members of the Board of Examiners connected with the building interests of the city, and the lack of efficiency of said board, and that class of testimony was amplified by Witnesses Veiller, (6,558 and 6 611,) James MacGregor, (8,206,) Albert S. MacGregor, (8,266,) Flagg, (8,154,) and Gibson, (8,166.)

The reflections of these witnesses upon the Board of Examiners were more than justified by the testimony of one of that board, William J. Fryer, which will be found at Pages 6,069, 1,092, and 1,147; see also 1,072. The Board of Examiners represents societies some of which are practically obsolete, and acts as an appellate tribunal in review on decisions of the Commissioner of Buildings. Some of its members are practicing their professions and cannot keep their private interests from being connected with their public duties.

At the present time it is uncertain under the law whether appeals go to the Board of Buildings, consisting of the three Commissioners, or to the Board of Examiners, existing ex officio. The Board of Examiners is entirely out of the control of the city authorities. It has maintained its personnel, with slight variations, for many years, and a number of its members have become associated together in business enterprises more or less related to their official duties.

NEW BUILDING CODE.

A new Building Code has been prepared by a commission appointed by the City Council, which commission was notable for the absence from it of those classes of persons who were most needed in a work of this kind, and for the controlling power of the present Commissioners and Board of Examiners. The testimony of Mr. Veiller, Mr. A. S. MacGregor, Mr. Flagg, Mr. Gibson, Mr. Reynolds, (8,256,) Miss Wald, (8,263,) and Simon Sterne, (8-125,) shows how completely the interests of the people of New York City have been subverted to the purposes of the present department officials, representing the dominant control herein at length discussed and the interests of contractors and tenement-house builders.

Mr. Veiller's testimony particularly shows how the comfort and safety of dwellers in tenement houses have been sacrificed, and Mr. Sterne's testimony shows the political jobbery in the excessive, needless, and ridiculous grants of arbitrary discretion to the Building Commissioners and the Board of Examiners, which grants are well calculated to permit coercion and extortion.

The testimony of Alderman Folks (6,550) and Alderman Sherman (6,553) shows how this measure was jammed through the Assembly. Protests against this measure have been loud and continuous from architects, engineers, and philanthropists. There was no dissenting voice from the proposition made by these witnesses that the Legislature should come in to the relief of the people by the passage of a bill providing for the construction by qualified persons of a practical building code and for its enactment into law.

Counsel would go into a discussion of these matters at length, but the details are necessarily technical and would add greatly to the length of this report; therefore, we content ourselves at this time with the references to the testimony given above.

ALLEGED CORRUPT ACTS.

Testimony indicating corrupt acts by subordinates in the Building Department was given by James Quigley, (8,177,) Mr. Berry and Mr. Snyder, (7,107-7,179,) and Messrs. Hayes and Tostevin, (92, 96, 114, 224, 236, and 505.) It was with reference to this very Building Code that the Roebling Construction Company employed Mr. Croker's nephew, McCann, for $5,000, and that Mr. Watson of the Expanded Metal Company was asked to employ him, (44, 78, 83, 86, &c.)

There is no commission in the city in which is lodged such autocratic powers as are given to the Building Commissioners under the new Building Code, and none is under graver accusations. There was much testimony affecting this department in our possession, which we are located in nearly every precinct in Manhattan and in many precincts in Brooklyn, are syndicated, and are openly conducted. The adjournment of the public sitting prevented the production of further testimony which we had secured on this subject.

A number of detectives were examined upon the subject of poolrooms, policy shops, and gambling, and their testimony showed the most childlike innocence, not only as to the existence of gambling places, but as to the nature and methods of the various kinds of gambling which they were supposed to detect. (Pages 2,864 to 2,928 and 3,659.)

It would be impossible to make a stronger case of official neglect of duty than the case concerning poolrooms, which has the merit of going far enough in its research to settle the question of the attitude of the administration itself on this important question of tolerated crime. No one who has had any experience in public matters of New York and in the matters of the Police Department, can have any doubt that the toleration of this and other forms of crime is due to political and financial combinations between the proprietors or backers of criminal resorts on the one side and public and political officials on the other side. The terrible degeneration in the morale and discipline was exhibited in the persons of a large number of policemen who were brought before the committee, and who had been convicted by Commissioners—some of them again and again—of the most heinous offenses, including intoxication, insubordination sleeping on and absent from post, and had been punished with insignificant fines of a few days' pay. This branch of the testimony showed a sad deterioration of the force, which only a short time ago was practically reconstructed and brought to a high standard of efficiency. The lack of efficiency was also shown in a most conclusive manner by the proofs adduced on the subject of robberies, and of outrageously false and misleading records of the department on that subject.

INCREASE OF ROBBERIES.

The great increase of robberies from the person on the street and by women of bad character, who frequently attack pedestrians, was proved by hundreds of cases taken directly from the police blotters. While the Chief's robbery-book showed only 2,784 cases of robberies, amounting to $457,797.87, between Jan. 1, 1898, and June 15, 1899, a careful and laborious examination of the precinct robbery, felony, and complaint books showed 14,168 cases of robbery, between Jan. 1, 1898, and Aug. 1, 1899, amounting approximately to $1,233,517.21. The recoveries indicated on the precinct books amounted to $98,489.08. (see Pages 7,978 to 7,992.)

This tabulation was accomplished with the utmost difficulty, owing to the lack of systematic and legible books, and to the disagreements between precinct and headquarters records, and was done by taking the books of each precinct and examining them in detail, and thus comparing them with similar examinations of the Chief's record. The testimony of Mr. Dillon, (4,440 to 4,493,) showed comparisons between the Chief's record of robberies by precincts and the local records of the precincts, and indicated the confusion of records, and the lack of accurate knowledge of crimes committed, large numbers of which probably are never recorded.

Many of these precinct cases passed to the Detective Bureau, which had many other cases that appeared in no precinct book. The books of that bureau were separately examined. (Pages 7,992 to 8,038,) and they showed apparent losses by robbery during 1898 amounting approximately to $895,945.23 in 2,827 cases; recoveries amounting to $146,867.02 in 155 cases, and 88 arrests. They showed a steady increase in robbery; additional figures to July 1, 1899, brought the total number of cases since Jan. 1, 1898, in that bureau, to 4,210, and the apparent total losses to $1,285,014.24. (Pages 9,368 to 9,383.) an examination of the Property Recovered Book of that bureau showed $359,068.08 recovered from Jan. 1, 1898, to June 1, 1899, of which $78,654.08 was property found or recovered for non-residents, and, therefore, not included in the total of robberies in the hands of the Detective Bureau. But even these figures are misleading, for our witness on this point shows that there is frequently an increase in the figures of a robbery when property is found.

COLLUSION WITH POLICE, HE SAYS.

The testimony of robbing from the person, and especially as practiced by women on the streets, was startling. When witnesses at first described it their testimony was received with incredulity, but before we finished we corroborated it by copious extracts from the precinct books, even though they showed only the cases where arrests had been made, (4,584 to 4,671.) The testimony of witnesses showed conclusively that those female thieves were in collusion with the police. (Pages 4,494 to 4,568 and 4,698 to 4,792. See, also, 712 to 767, &c., 2,772, 2,775, 2,807, 2,720, 2,957, 2,339, 2,544, 2,936, 2,400, 2,728, 3,020.) The precinct records showing 350 cases of arrests in robberies by females of ill repute from Jan. 1, 1898, to July 1, 1899, will be found from Pages 4,690 to 4,772, and a statement thereof at 4,349. The testimony of many citizens robbed by burglars and obtaining no practical help from the police will be found at Pages 4,352 to 4,672. Tables showing police inefficiency in the prosecution of gambling and similar crimes will be found at Pages 9,250 to 9,332. Individual cases of police dishonesty and inefficiency under the relaxation of discipline will be found at Pages 7,634 to 7,641, 7,167-8, 4,828 to 5,060, 3,714, 2,805, 2,882, 8,850, 8,848, 2,278, 2,282, and appalling vicious conditions are described at Pages 3,670 to 3,701, 3,766 to 3,778.

The evidence concerning poolrooms may be found at Pages 1,713 to 1,776, 2,400, 3,724 to 3,738, 4,494, 4,804, 4,966 to 5,019, 1,792, 2,045, in the examination of Chief Devery, and at 4,811, 8,948 to 8,952, 8,830, 8,788 to 8,847, 8,753 to 8,785, 4,793. At Page 8,939, is a list of 73 open poolrooms visited by your employes in five days in October and found in full operation. A list of the pool rooms so visited and operating in the various precincts in August will be found at Page 4,811. (see, also, 5,048; see, also, Pages 1,597, 1,608, 1,576, 1,521.)

CHIEF AND COMMISSIONERS.

The utter incompetency of the Chief and the unfitness of the Commissioners appear in their own testimony at Pages 125, 150, 331, 1,639, 2,042, 3,591, (Devery;) 1,521, 1,530, (Sexton;) 1,576 and 2,210, (York;) 1,824 and 1,840, (Hess;) 1,947, (Abell.) But their conduct upon the trials of delinquent officers is sufficient to require their removal from the department. They have made hundreds of convictions for the most heinous offenses known to police discipline—intoxication, insubordination, absence from post, especially in the early morning hours, brutality and indecency—and have imposed often as small as one day's pay. Nearly 100 men are on the force who have been convicted of intoxication since Jan. 1, 1898. Frightful offenders appear again and again, getting off with these little fines. We say nothing of the charges dismissed, but confining ourselves to the convictions, it is evident that the department is being wrecked at headquarters (see extracts from convictions of policement and sentences by the Commissioners, pp. 4,924 to 4,965; also tabulation of 186 convictions for intoxication and other gross offenses with fines, and 220 gross cases of neglect of duty and absence from post, in saloons, &c., with small fines, 5,020 to 5,048; see also 5,051 to 5,060.)

We realize that this short and rapid summary of the most important lines of our police testimony is altogether inadequate to the case that stands upon the record, but perhaps it is sufficient to enforce the judgment ...at we express, that from a police standpoint the Government of our city has never been in so unfortunate a position. To propose a remedy is a most difficult task. That the control of elections should be taken from the police is a conviction which has grown steadily in the minds of the people, and is strongly enforced by the spectacle that we have recently had of a Commissioner of Police, charged with most delicate duties concerning elections, and having judicial duties to perform on important questions connected with the franchise, who, in the face of the law that has been enacted upon that subject, nevertheless was the active director on one side of an active political fight in one of our districts. We refer to this matter simply to show the advisability of removing the police as far as possible from the club. The former Brooklyn system of a separate Board of Elections should be worked into the laws governing the greater city. We believe that now good citizens of all parties favor a single head for the police, but there is as much opposition to the giving of such an appointment to the present organization that controls our city as there is to the making of a State appointment of Police Commissioner. The only solution which counsel have been able to see is the plan of State oversight of police, proceeding on the ground of the State's duty to protect its fair name and to see that its grant of police power is decently exercised without interfering with the right of localities to select their own officers. We believe that a power of inspection, and a wisely regulated power of removal for cause, still leaving appointments to the localities, would work a great improvement in our present shameful condition, and we submit to you for your consideration a bill on these lines, drawn and discussed before this committee was appointed.

PART THREE OF THE REPORT.

Instances of What Mr. Moss Declares Flagrant Contempt.

After this discussion it must be apparent that we spoke with reason and truth, when, in the early part of this report, we referred to the practical difficulties of conducting this investigation, and of handling our witnesses and getting any testimony from them at all. Our belief that the success of this investigation was imperative for the proper presentation of great charter defects at the time when they could be proven, and when it was most likely that they could be remedied, held us to this most trying task, under the most adverse conditions of difficulty and criticism. Such a labor should never be undertaken again without such an amendment to the laws as would give to an investigating committee the power to uphold the dignity of the Legislature which it represents. The law should be so amended as to empower legislative committees to perform their work between sessions, and they should be given all powers of a court of record to enforce attendance and to punish contempt committed in their presence or against their authority. We believe that they should also be empowered to proceed like a court of record against those who refuse to answer proper and pertinent questions. The Legislature should heed the warning spoken by counsel to the Lexow Committee and enforced by the experience of this Committee, if it wishes to preserve the right to inquire through legislative committees. It has been suggested that work of this kind, requiring great sacrifices of time and attention without compensation, should be referred to a standing municipal commision regularly organized and equipped with the machinery and resources for systematic investigation. We do not feel called upon to make any recommendation of this plan, but simply call it to your attention.

We report several instances of flagrant contempt committed since the passage of the enlarging resolution.

First—The contempt of Richard Croker in refusing to answer questions concerning his relations to various companies which came more or less within the jurisdiction of city departments, ... the filling of which Mr. Croker and his organization, upon Mr. Croker's own statement, had exerted a vital influence.

Second—John F. Carroll, who refused to answer similar questions.

Third—Andrew Freeman, similar matters.

Fourth—James A. Mahoney, who refused to answer pertinent questions concerning the conduct of the pool room business, in which it was alleged he was concerned—the said inquiry being directed toward the alleged neglect of duty by the police authorities, and the witness not declining to answer upon any of the recognized privileges.

Fifth—Asa Bird Gardiner, who disobeyed two separate subpoenas duly served upon him, and who accompanied his failure to obey the second subpoena with a contemptuous letter, to be found at Page 9,545, in which he abused the Committee, and denied its authority, (see Pages 9,252 and 9,367.)

Sixth—Silas B. Dutcher and Peter B. Nostrand, who refused to produce papers and answer inquiries in the Ramapo matter.

Certain witnesses were guilty of contemptuous and outrageous conduct and language, notably, James K. Price, Henry C. Henderson, George Kraus, Isaac Fromme; but, as the law defining contempts before legislative committees makes no mention of contemptuous behavior, it seems to be doubtful whether this question of misconduct can be made a subject of punitive proceedings. These violations of decorum and infractions of the dignity of the Assembly are reported simply that the Assembly may consider its own interests. As we have said, our battle was fought with these contumacious witnesses, and in their very obstinacy they were made to testify unconsciously against themselves and against the present autocratic rule of the City of New York.

We submit the foregoing report in the hope that it may assist the Committee and enlighten the Legislature upon these matters of deepest gravity, affecting the interests of the new and great City of New York.

FREE LIBRARIES CLOSED.

President Kernochan of the Board of Trustees Says No New Branch Is Possible in 1900.

All of the eleven branches of the New York Free Circulating Library were closed yesterday for the first time since the Board of Trustees decided to curtail expenses by closing the libraries on Sunday.

J. Frederick Kernochan, President of the Board, when seen, said, regarding the closing:

"The closing of the branches of the New York Free Circulating Library was made necessary by the decrease of $21,000 in the appropriation allowed us by the Board of Estimate and Apportionment. There is no friction between the Board of Estimate and Apportionment and our Board of Trustees. The Board of Estimate simply does not understand the library question quite as thoroughly as some who have made a study of the question for years. We feel that when they do understand the matter thoroughly, we will get all the money we ask for and more, and will be able to establish many other branches in various parts of the city as well as greatly increase our circulation.

"Moreover, with an increased circulation this year of 400,000 volumes and no increase in our appropriation, it is imperative that we curtail expenses in many ways and we wish to do this with the least inconvenience to those who use our books. We do not wish to close up entirely any one branch but to equally cut down the expenses of all.

"The Board of Estimate in cutting down this appropriation loses sight of one fact—that the money we receive from them is used solely for current expenses and in keeping the books in good condition. Not one cent of this money has ever been used for building purposes or in buying books. For over twelve years we conducted this business, and only when it got too large for us to support by private and public subscriptions did we go to the city for help. Our books now are purchased by subscriptions received for this purpose.

"We have property valued at $500,000 which the city gets the use of, and not one cent was ever paid by them for the improvement of the buildings or in the construction of them.

"It has been our purpose each year, when possible, to establish a new branch in some part of the city, but we will be unable to do this during the coming year."

Mrs. Potter Palmer to be Appointed.

CHICAGO, Dec. 24.—Mrs. Louise L. Mann, Secretary of the Woman's National Auxiliary to the Blue and Gray Legion, has received a letter from President McKinley, saying that Mrs. Potter Palmer will be appointed Director of the American Woman's Department at the Paris Exposition. The auxiliary had sent a communication to Washington asking that Mrs. Palmer be appointed.

Cliffs of Niagara Wearing Away.

NIAGARA FALLS, Dec. 24.—Heavy rain is again paring off the Canadian cliff. A large mass of rock from a point close to the Horseshoe Falls dropped into the river this morning. Table Rock is slowly but surely becoming smaller; the upper end of Goat Island shows the wear made by water and marks of recession are plainly visible at the foot of the American and Horseshoe Falls.

MOODY, HERALD OF PEACE

Dr. Hillis on the Religious Power of the Evangelist.

LIKE DAVID IN HIS LIFE

One of Four Supreme Teachers of the Century, the Others Beecher, Spurgeon, Phillips Brooks.

The Rev. Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis paid a tribute to the memory of Dwight L. Moody in Plymouth Church, Brooklyn, yesterday morning. The subject of Dr. Hillis's sermon was: "The Last of the Great Group; a Study of Mr. Moody's Life, Career, and Message."

Dr. Hillis said in part:

"When long time hath past, some historian, recalling the great epochs and religious teachers of our century, will say: 'There were four men sent forth by God, their names Charles Spurgeon, Phillips Brooks, Henry Ward Beecher, and Dwight L. Moody.' Each was the herald of good tidings. Each was a prophet of a new social and religious order, and each made a permanent contribution to the Christian Church; while of all it may be said their sermons were translated into many tongues and their names are known in every town and city where the English language is spoken.

"For our instruction, rebuke, and inspiration God hath raised up other preachers, representing a high order of intellect, marked eloquence, and permanent influence; but as to the first order of greatness there have been perhaps these four—no more. God girded each of these prophets for his task and taught him how to 'dip his sword in heaven.'

"In characterizing the message of these men, we say that Spurgeon was expositional, Phillips Brooks devotional, Henry Ward Beecher prophetic and philosophical, while Dwight L. Moody was a herald rather than teacher, addressing himself to the common people—the unchurched multitudes. The symbol of the great English preacher is a lighted lamp, the symbol of Brooks a flaming heart, the symbol of Beecher an orchestra of many instruments, while Mr. Moody was a trumpet, of narrow range perchance, but sounding the advance, sometimes through aspiration and sometimes through alarm. And our sorrow to-day is the more in that the last of these giants has gone down to the valley and disappeared behind the thick shadows.

THE WORLD SAFER FOR THEM.

"Oft in hours of gloom and doubt, full oft in days when wickedness seemed enthroned in high places, when the rich seemed to be selfish in their strength and the poor without an advocate in high places, when good men seemed weakness and leaders seemed a lie, in our depression we have turned our thoughts toward the three prophets in the English Tabernacle, in Trinity and in Plymouth, or toward the evangelist and friend of the common people, and have been comforted by one. We here thought that things were a little safer because these four men were in their appointed places.

"The first three were commanders, each over his regiment, and worked from a fixed centre, but the evangelist was the leader of a flying band, who went everywhere into the enemy's country, seeking conquests of peace and righteousness. Be the reasons what they may, the common people gladly heard the great evangelist. In his death the unchurched classes have lost their best friend. Fallen now their tower of strength. Changed, too, the very face of our moral landscape. For nearly forty years the multitudes have pressed and thronged into the great halls and churches to hear this great herald speak of duty, sin, salvation, and God's love in his great Christ. But disappearing from our sight he is not dead. While life continues, for multitudes he will remain a cool stream flowing in a desert, the covert of a rock in time of sorrow.

"For the Republic, the roll call of self-made men is long and brilliant. Orators, like Clay, come in from the cornfields; statesmen, like Webster, come from the bleak hillsides of New England; Presidents, like Lincoln, come from the university of rail-splitting; the inventors, merchants, and editors come in from rural districts and villages, and all are the architects of their own fortunes. But among all this group of men whose life in low estate began on the simple village green, none is more thrilling in its struggles, more picturesque in its contrasts, and more pathetic in its defeats and victories than that of the great evangelist.

A THRILLING LIFE STORY.

"Thrilling, indeed, his life story. It repeats the experience of young David, to pass from the sheepcote to the King's throne, and the sceptre of universal sway. 'Where were the hidings of his powers?' you ask. From nothing, nothing comes. Blood tells. A great ancestry explains a great man. The time was when men thought that God calls the prophet. But when God wants a John the Baptist He calls not the son, but the father and mother, and they ordain the child in the cradle and before the cradle.

"When the Hebrews were in bondage in Egypt, one mother there was brave enough to dare the King, and hide her babe in an ark, amidst the bullrushes, and the mother's courage repeated itself in the greatest of jurists, Moses. Hannah was a dreamer who loved solitude, and walked the hills alone with God, and whose eyes 'were homes of silent prayer,' and her religious genius repeated itself in her son Samuel, one of the greatest of the Judges. What was unique in Timothy, St. Paul tells us, was first of all unique in his mother, Lo's, and his grandmother, Eunice. And the greatest evangelist since Whitfield had his power through the ordainment of a great ancestry. He was of the best old New England stock. His father had the fine old Puritan fibre, and his mother, widowed, with her little flock about her, exhibits almost unparalleled heroism, courage, and hope in the hour of her sufferings and trouble.

"For the tides of power in this man flowed down from the ancestral hills. Among his birth gifts was the gift of perfect health and a perfect body. With stores of energy that seemed well-nigh inexhaustible, his also was the gift of common sense, a mind hungry for knowledge, a reason that saw clearly or saw not at all; moral earnestness, self-reliance, courage, wit, humor, pathos, an intuitive knowledge of men, the genius for organization. Like Isaiah, he had a quenchless passion for righteousness. Like Daniel, he had the courage of his convictions in the face of fierce opposition. Like St. Paul, his enthusiasm for men made him the herald of righteousness to foreign nations. Like Bernard, his was the Crusader's heart, organizing his hosts against passion, ignorance, and sin.

REACHED A MULTITUDE.

"Without the eloquence of Spurgeon, without the fine culture of Phillips Brooks, without the supreme genius of Beecher, Moody was a herald, a man sent forth from God, who called the unchurched classes to repentance, who flamed forth on them the love of God in Christ. For nearly six years, it is said, Moody's audiences averaged 5,000 each afternoon and evening, a record that has never been surpassed in all the history of evangelism. 'Our Bishops,' said The London Telegraph, 'have back of them a State income, great cathedrals, a small army of paid helpers and musicians, but where our Bishops have reached tens this man has reached hundreds.'"

Dr. Hillis concluded by pointing out lessons to be drawn from the evangelist's career.

THE FUNERAL ARRANGEMENTS.

Ira D. Sankey to be One of the Pall Bearers—Services Yesterday in the Northfield Church.

EAST NORTHFIELD, Mass., Dec. 24.—The family of the late evangelist, Dwight L. Moody, remained indoors nearly the entire day, owing to the constant downpour of rain, leaving the house only for a brief interval during the forenoon to attend services at the Congregational Church. Mrs. Moody, who had been considerably affected by the arrival of her sister and brother, Fleming Revell and Mrs. William H. Holden of Chicago, last evening, was in her usual health after a night's rest, and showed only slightly the struggle which she has experienced during the past few weeks. Mrs. L. C. Washburn, Mr. Moody's only sister, is expected to arrive from her home in Racine Wis., to-night.

The services at the Congregational Church this forenoon were conducted by the Rev. C. J. Schofield, the pastor, assisted by the Rev. R. A. Torrey of Chicago, who had been associated with Mr. Moody at the Bible Institute at Chicago. Mr. Schofield spoke very briefly, taking his text from Hebrews iv. and First Corinthians xv. He closed with a prayer beseeching Christ to forbid in our hearts the sorrow of heathen belief, but to fill our lives with Christian hope of resurrection. He referred to Mr. Moody's life with thanks for the work begun, and prayed that some one might be sent to fill the vacancy left by Mr. Moody's death.

The Rev. Mr. Torrey then spoke on the blessings of the certainty of the life beyond the grave. His talk was principally of the life of the dead evangelist.

"When the news of Mr. Moody's death reached me last Friday," said the speaker, "I said to myself the world has lost some of its realness to me, but the world beyond is increased in realness. Absent from the body; at home with the Lord. We know he is with the Lord to-day. This will be the happiest Christmas for Mr. Moody and the happiest in the life of the members of his family, as can already can be seen in their countenances. It is given to some of those who die to get a glimpse into the new life before, as was the case last Friday when Mr. Moody revived from a supposed sinking spell and was told by his son that he had been sleeping. Mr. Moody replied: 'I have been within the gate; earth is receding; heaven is opening; God is calling me; do not call me back.'"

The speaker then referred to the body which Mr. Moody had on this earth, the Christian life he had led, and of the glorious body he would have when Christ returned to give life that light with which the sun in all its glory and brightness could not compare.

He then spoke of his companionship with Mr. Moody during several Summers here, and said: "What has made Northfield what it is to me is that companionship. What makes heaven what it will be is companionship with Christ."

The funeral is to be held Tuesday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock, and all the details have been completed. The body will be taken to the church at 9 A. M. by the Mount Herman students, and will lie in state until 2:30 in the afternoon, when the services will be held, after which it will be taken to the last resting place on Round Top. The only music during the service, aside from singing by the regular choir of the church, will be the singing of "Rock of Ages," one of Mr. Moody's favorite hymns, by the Mount Herman male quartet. Honorary pall bearers have been named as follows: Col. J. J. Janeway, New Brunswick, N. J.; R. C. Morse of the Young Men's Christian Association National Committee, New York; George C. Stebbins, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Ira D. Sankey, Brooklyn, N. Y.; Gen. J. J. Estey, Brattleborough, Vt.; Col. C. A. Hopkinson, Boston; H. M. Moore, Boston; Dr. N. T. Wood of Northfield, and Prof. A. H. Cutler of Mount Herman Seminary.

In answer to telegrams sent to several gentlemen who had been associated with Mr. Moody in his work, offering to them an opportunity to speak a few words over the body of the dead evangelist, five have responded, accepting the invitation. Those who will speak are Dr. H. G. Weston of the Crozier Theological Seminary, Chester, Pa.; the Rev. Arthur T. Pierson of Brooklyn, N. Y.; Bishop Mallalieu of Boston, Mass.; the Rev. J. Wilbur Chapman of New York, and H. M. Moore of Boston.

DR. DIXON ON MOODY.

A Passion for the Salvation of Souls Possessed Him.

The Rev. Dr. A. C. Dixon, who was associated with Dwight L. Moody in a number of religious revival meetings in this and other cities, spoke yesterday morning in the Hanson Place Baptist Church, Brooklyn, on "D. L. Moody; the Man and His Message."

Mr. Moody, he said, believed in sudden conversion through blood. Lyman Abbott, in a newspaper interview, speaking of Moody's death, said he differed with him about the atonement. It was this way of thinking that had led Abbott and other men away from true religion, Dr. Dixon said. Moody had a passion for souls. Other men loved money and power; Moody loved Jesus. He loved Him with enthusiasm. Jesus had mesmerized him. In New York, Chicago, and Worcester, where the speaker and Moody had done revival work together, Moody's one thought, his oft-repeated question, was, "Is this going to please God?"

To say that Moody believed in work was a useless thing. No man worked harder or more earnestly. Moody never boasted of himself or of what he did. His boasting was about the power of God. His was a pure, clean life. Some preachers were given to telling stories with innuendoes that were not sweet or pure, but Moody was a far different kind of man.

Moody believed in the second coming of Christ, but he was no fanatic. He never set a time for this second coming, but he believed that the best way to welcome Christ was to be ready. That was the mainspring of his life. Socialism, anarchism, and all sorts of "isms" were saying "Never mind the future." Moody believed with all his heart and soul in the life. The speaker once asked him to hold a revival meeting in Baltimore. Moody replied that when the pillar of fire moved that way he would follow it.

In the meetings in Central Palace the agreement was that the time for closing should be 10 o'clock at night, but often at that hour Moody would be seen talking in some corner with three or four men and seeking to lead them to God. He had almost to be dragged away. He never cared to stop so long as there was a chance to save souls. In conclusion, Dr Dixon spoke of Moody's dying words, and said that he intended to write them in his own Bible. They were memorable words, the receding of the world, and the opening of the new life with Christ, calling to His good and faithful servant.

Moody Memorial Service.

The elaborate memorial service for Dwight L. Moody will be held at 2:30 o'clock tomorrow afternoon in the Calvary Baptist Church, in West Fifty-seventh Street, of which the Rev. Dr. R. S. MacArthur is pastor. The Rev. Dr. Russell Conwell and John Wanamaker of Philadelphia have been asked to attend. Ministers from many of the city and a number of out-of-town churches have expressed their intention to be present and take part in the service.

DIED FROM FRACTURED SKULL.

Surgeon Diagnosed Prisoner's Condition as that of Intoxication.

A policeman of the Sixth Avenue Station, in Brooklyn, on Saturday night found a man in a helpless condition in Atlantic Avenue, near Fifth Avenue, and summoned an ambulance. Surgeon Buckley of the Seney Hospital decided that the man was suffering from overindulgence in liquor and took him to the station house. After his name, Edward Lemneiroth, and his address, 677 Atlantic Avenue, were entered in the blotter the man was locked up in a cell.

The doorman of the station was unable to arouse the prisoner yesterday morning when he attempted to call him so that he could be sent to court, and the ambulance surgeon was again called. He took the man to the Seney Hospital, where it was found that he was suffering from a fractured skull. He died at the hospital last night.

A number of similar cases have occurred in Brooklyn of late. Dr. Buckley said last night that the man bore every mark of having drunk too much, and there were no indications at first that he was suffering from anything else.

Arthur J. Boulton of the Stereotypers' Union said yesterday that ex-Gov. John P. Altgeld had consented to come to New York to attend the Lincoln dollar dinner on Feb. 14.

BIG EARLY MORNING FIRE

Building Ninety Years Old Burned in William Street.

DAMAGE PLACED AT $85,000

Three Hundred Girls, Employed by the Berlin-Jones Envelope Company, Thrown Out of Work.

Four alarms were sent in at an early hour yesterday morning for a fire which nearly gutted the six-story brick building 134 and 136 William Street, and also damaged the adjoining structures, Nos. 132 and 138. After an hour of hard fighting the firemen succeeded in getting control of the flames, after they had caused losses aggregating $85,000.

Patrolman Grace of the Old Slip Station discovered the fire and sent in the first alarm. As soon as the first detachment of firemen reached the scene it was apparent that they had a difficult piece of work on their hands, for the entire interior of the structure appeared to be burning. They sent in a second alarm, and Chief Croker turned in two additional calls for assistance as soon as he reached the spot. The firemen had great difficulty in gaining access to the building, for all of the windows were covered with iron shutters, which could not be opened, and the doors offered a determined resistance to the onslaughts of the men. Finally, however, the department succeeded in forcing the main door to No. 134, and were able to work to greater advantage. The flames were also fought from the roofs of the adjoining buildings.

The burning building was like a furnace, and when the flames burst through the roof the blaze lighted up the entire lower part of the city and made a splendid spectacle. It appeared at one time as if the entire block would be consumed. Now and then loud explosions, presumably of chemicals, were heard, which lent excitement to the work of the firemen. The fire was discovered at 3:14 o'clock, and at 4:17 word was sent to Fire Headquarters that it was under control.

The burned building was occupied entirely by the Berlin-Jones Envelope Company, whose loss is estimated at $55,000. The building is said to have been the oldest on that block, having been constructed ninety years ago. No. 132 William Street, a four-story structure, is occupied by Henry Allen, wholesale druggist, whose loss will be $10,000, and No. 138 is occupied by Thurston & Bradish, importers of gum, whose loss is estimated at $15,000. No. 140 was damaged to the extent of $5,000 by water. The cause of the fire has not been determined. More than 300 girls, employed by the envelope company, will be thrown out of work by the burning of its building.

WILLIAM'S BRIDGE HOUSES BURN.

Loss of $20,000 Partly Due to Lack of Fire Apparatus.

Owing to the lack of fire-fighting apparatus, two handsome dwellings and a part of a third were destroyed by fire in William's Bridge yesterday morning. The fire started at 3 A. M. and did about $20,000 damage. For a while it looked as though the flames would sweep the entire street, as there was a high wind blowing, and the buildings were all frame. They were finally quenched after a two hours' fight.

The fire was discovered in the home of Gustave Kolle, 121 Second Stret. Kolle is a policeman attached to the Forty-seventh Precinct. He was at home, and succeeded in getting his wife and three children out of the house, which burned like tinder. He saved little or nothing in the way of clothing and valuables. The fire bells were rung and the residents turned out in full force and hastened to the scene of the fire. The only apparatus for fighting fire in the village is a hose reel, and that is of antiquated type. This was manned, however, and an effort was made to fight the blaze, which had enveloped the entire structure by the time a stream was directed upon it.

It was then found that the pressure was so low that the stream would hardly reach to the second floor. It was evident that the house was doomed, as well as others, unless the flames could be checked. A citizen then ran all the way to the fire-house in Jerome Avenue, a distance of about a mile, and gave an alarm. Meanwhile the strong wind had carried the flames to the home of Dr. B. H. Goodsell, at No. 119. Dr. Goodsell had arisen at the first call for help and was fighting to save his neighbor's house when he found his own on fire. He managed to get his mother and two children out, but with some difficulty.

Both houses were destroyed when the fire company finally arrived with its engine, and the flames had been driven across a forty-foot space to the home of Isaac Varian at No. 140. The fire was checked here, but not until it had practically destroyed the house and its contents.

Policeman Kolle's loss is estimated to be about $5,000, covered by insurance. Dr. Goodsell places his loss at $6,000, also covered by insurance. Mr. Varian's loss is $8,000, of which $4,500 is covered by insurance. The fire started, it is believed, from an overheated furnace.

NEW YACHTS OF NEW YORKERS

Isaac Stern's Virginia on the Way Here from Her Builders.

The new steam yacht Virginia, owned by Isaac Stern of the New York Yacht Club, is on her way to this port, under command of Capt. Leander Jeffries. She left the Bath Iron Works, at Bath, Me., where she was built, Saturday at midnight, and is expected to arrive at Tebo's Basin, foot of Twenty-third Street, South Brooklyn, late this afternoon.

The Virginia, when completed, will be one of the handsomest and best equipped boats in the New York Yacht Club fleet. She was launched in November, and on Dec. 14 had a builder's trial over an ocean course for four hours. Capt. Jeffries has superintended the final work on the yacht and represented the owner's interest during the builder's trial, which was perfectly satisfactory. The crew for the yacht left South Brooklyn Friday afternoon, in charge of the mate, and reached Bath Saturday evening.

George Lord Day's new schooner Endymion left Lawley's yards, at South Boston, Friday morning, also bound for Tebo's Basin, where she arrived late yesterday afternoon, after a rather rough voyage. She will be fitted out at once for an extended cruise in the Mediterranean.

KENTUCKY FUTURITY PAYMENTS

Largest in Its History—843 Entries from Twenty-nine States.

Special to The New York Times.

LEXINGTON, Ky., Dec. 24.—The second payments to the tenth annual renewal of the Kentucky Futurity are the biggest in its history. Twenty-nine States are represented and 843 colts and fillies are kept in the event. There are 226 stallons represented, of which 23 have records of 2:10 or better; 153 of the mares have records, and 174 of them are producers. Following are the breeders or breeding establishments that have named over ten entries:

Brook Curry, Lexington, 48; Patchen Wilkes Farm, Lexington, 31; Walnut Hill Farm, Donnerail, 27; Bitter Root Farm, Hamilton, Mon., 26; Allen Farm, Pittsfield, Mass., 28; Palo Alto Farm, Menlo Park, Cal., 28; Lasher, Lexington, 18; Elmhurst Farm, Lexington, 17; Suburban Farm, Glens Falls, N. Y., 15; Empire City Farm, Cuba, N. Y., 14; J. W. Bailey, Gainesville, Texas, 12; Eastview Farm, Eastview, N. Y., 12; Cochrane Brothers, Lexington, 12; Malvern Farm, Malvern, Penn., 12; J. L. Dulron, Bardstown, Ky., 11; Summitview Farm, Syosset, L. I., 11; Bowerman Brothers, Lexington, 18; James F. Calloway, Louisville, 10; W. W. Evans, Lexington, 18; W. R. Janifer, New York, 18; Lookout Farm, South Natic, Mass., 10.

Le Roy See Skates a Fast Mile.

There was a special one-mile handicap race, open to all comers, at the Clermont Avenue Ice Skating Rink, Brooklyn, on Saturday night, in which ten of the fastest amateur skaters about New York competed. Le Roy See, the New York Athletic Club and Berkeley School crack, was the winner. Arthur Yale Saroney, New York Athletic Club, who had one hundred yards start, gave him the best race, but was finally passed and beaten. See's time was 3:09 3-5, this being the fastest mile of the season.

TO OPEN BRYAN'S CAMPAIGN.

Speeches to be Made by Democratic Leaders at a Banquet of the Jacksonian Club in Omaha on Jan. 8.

Special to The New York Times.

OMAHA, Neb., Dec. 24.—The Jacksonian Club will open the Bryan Presidential campaign here Jan. 8. There will be present at the banquet W. J. Bryan, Gov. Hogg of Texas, Congressman E. W. Carmack of Tennessee, David Overmeyer of Kansas, Carter Harrison of Chicago, John P. Altgeld of Illinois, Champ Clark and Mr. Stone of Missouri, ex-Congressman Charles A. Towne, Coin Harvey, Senator William V. Allen, Henry Watterson of Kentucky, and other prominent Democratic leaders.

Mr. Bryan will speak on "The Nation," and his Democratic friends are given to understand that the speech will contain much that is new, and will in reality be a carefully prepared arraignment of the Administration.

Carter Harrison will respond to the toast "The Man of the Hour." It is understood that the man of the hour, as the Chicago leader sees it, will be Mr. Bryan.

It is not certain that Waterson will make a speech, but it is regarded by the Bryanites as a considerable concession on the part of the Kentucky orator to be present, since he was so long opposed to Mr. Bryan. Gov. Hogg will speak on the "Hope of the Democracy." The speech will be laudation of Mr. Bryan and a notice to all that he is a candidate, and a leading candidate. Mr. Stone and Champ Clark of Missouri will both speak, but their subjects have not been selected.

OUR BANKER SECRETARY.

In his very able speech before the New England Society of Orange Secretary GAGE gave another proof of the advantage it is to the country to have in the Treasury Department a banker who adds to an intimate knowledge of the practical side of his business a careful and intelligent study of its underlying principles and of the relation to it of the functions of Government.

It was evident from the last annual report of the Secretary that he regards the question of the standard of value as substantially settled, and turns resolutely and hopefully to the consideration of the problems that remain to be solved. Of these the chief is the creation of a flexible bank currency that will meet the varying demands of trade, extending as these increase and contracting as they diminish, while being at all times entirely safe in the hands of holders. That such a currency is needed is acknowledged by all. That it can best be supplied, under strict and proper safeguards, by the banks is, we think, demonstrated by Mr. GAGE in his acute and sound analysis of the real function of the banks. This is not, as often imagined, to deal in money, but to deal in credits. The bank receives the various credits of individuals and corporations, which it has the means to test, and exchanges for them its own credit, which is better known and is secured by the conditions imposed by law. In the great body of cases this credit takes the simple form of checks or orders to pay at sight issued by those whose credits the bank has received. It may also take the form of circulating notes payable at sight and protected by rigid legal requirements, since these notes pass into the hands of many who have no dealings with the bank and no means of judging of its sure payment of its obligations.

The purpose of the credits thus issued, whether in the form of checks or of circulating notes, is the same. It is solely to aid in exchanges. The farmer who sells his wheat for banknotes and with these buys clothing, or tools, or pays the wages of his farm hands, has practically made use of all that a bank can do in the business world. The whole vast and complex fabric of banking operations is built up on this single function of making easy the barter of goods and services. And the one fact of essential importance in the business of banking, if it be soundly conducted, is that at all times there is back of the credit issued by the bank the valuable thing which is being exchanged, and which the credit aids in exchanging. That is the fact that Mr. GAGE never loses from sight. It is the fact that distinguishes the notes of banks from all forms of Government credit notes. It is the fact that makes banknotes issued under sound conditions perfectly safe in the hands of all holders, and, what is still more important, it will, under sound conditions, keep the issues of the banks close to the volume, be it larger or smaller, that the actual exchanges require. The law can be so framed that the notes will return to the bank immediately when they are no longer employed in these exchanges. It will then be profitable for the bank to issue them when they are needed and not profitable for the bank to try to issue them when they are no longer needed.

It was hardly expected by the Secretary of the Treasury when he sent in his report at the beginning of the month, in which he called attention to the unwholesome effect of the rigid currency we now have, gorging the financial centres when it is not employed in active exchanges and stimulating speculation, that the reaction from this speculation would so soon work its manifold injuries. But the brief panic in Wall Street last Monday was unquestionably greatly aggravated by precisely the forces pointed out by the Secretary. Certainly he would not say that either the undue speculation or the reaction from it was wholly caused by currency conditions or that they could have been entirely avoided by any change in the currency system. Such periods of inflated credit and contraction occur in countries that have not our system. But they occur less frequently and they are not so acute. The utterly unnecessary loss that we suffer is enormous, and the service Mr. GAGE is rendering in his intelligent efforts to guide the country to more sensible and secure methods is very great.

DORMAN B. EATON.

Mr. DORMAN B. EATON was a man of unusual ability and of a very high standard of conduct in the public and private relations of life. He had made for himself an honorable place in the profession of law when in the prime of life he was stricken down by the hand of an intending assassin, whose blow disabled him from active work for several years. It has never been doubted that the assault upon him was inspired by the desire to get rid of one of the most efficient and fearless of the men then engaged in exposing and pursuing the corrupt gang in control of the Tammany machine and the Erie Railroad. One of the indirect consequences of the act was that for the rest of his life Mr. EATON's energies were devoted chiefly to the cause of political reform.

His contributions to this reform were of high value and were most unselfishly given. His study of the history and the principles and methods of the reform of the civil service in Great Britain, and his exposition of these in his well-known book and in his frequent articles and addresses after his residence in England, were of incalculable use in spreading the ideas underlying the merit system. They were especially effective in combating the absurd falsehood that the merit system was in some way an invention of the English aristocracy, the fact being that it was adopted for the express purpose of breaking up the costly and corrupt monopoly of place holding so largely enjoyed and so desperately cherished by the aristocracy. By his patient and intelligent study of the British system Mr. EATON was able to aid greatly in the constructive work of the reform in this country, and to suggest the modifications required by the differing conditions.

Mr. EATON had in a remarkable degree the power of exhaustive inquiry and the complementary gift, which does not always accompany that power, of orderly, logical, and luminous exposition. There was really no limit to the amount of labor that he would expend to obtain accuracy in the details of any subject he was pursuing, while those details were used afterward in true perspective, without regard to the effort they had cost him. In his later years these qualities were especially shown in his treatment of the question of municipal administration, as to which he acquired an authority very generally respected.

In private life he was a man of singular kindliness, and his manners had the courtesy as well as the dignity that we associate with the "old school." He will be long remembered by those who had the privilege of his friendship, and the work he did was of so solid and essential a character that its influence will be felt for good long after his name passes to inevitable forgetfulness.

ST. THOMAS.

In his third annual message, sent to Congress on Dec. 3, 1867, President ANDREW JOHNSON pointed out with a good show of reason the need of an advanced naval outpost between our Atlantic Coast and Europe. "With the possession of such a station by the United States," he declared, "neither we nor any other American nation need longer apprehend injury or offense from any transatlantic enemy. * * * The islands of St. Thomas and St. John, which constitute a part of the group called the Virgin Islands, seemed to offer us advantages immediately desirable, while their acquisition could be secure in harmony with the principles to which I have alluded. A treaty has therefore been concluded with the King of Denmark for the cession of these islands and will be submitted to the Senate for consideration." The Senate was then engaged in a bitter quarrel with President JOHNSON, and CHARLES SUMNER, one of his most determined opponents, was Chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations. The treaty was dropped without even so much as a decent expression of regret to Denmark.

The possession of the Island of Puerto Rico gives us an advanced naval outpost a thousand miles southeasterly from the coast of Florida. We do not now need St. Thomas. At the same time, if it is necessary to buy the island to prevent its falling into the hands of Germany, there should be no hesitation in making the purchase. However much we may esteem the Germans as a people, we do not want any more of the military powers of Europe for island neighbors. The objections would be the same were the purchase of St. Thomas proposed by any other leading power not now having a foothold in the West Indies.

Our policy of discouraging fresh European acquisitions of territory near our coast is an ancient one. The objections which we have repeatedly urged to the transfer of Cuba to a strong power were precisely the same in kind as those which now lie against the transfer of St. Thomas from Denmark, who would never give us the least trouble, to Germany, a stirring and ambitious power, which might give us a great deal of trouble. When JOHN QUINCY ADAMS was Secretary of State, in 1823, he wrote that "the transfer of Cuba to Great Britain would be an event unpropitious to the interests of this Union." JEFFERSON, in the same year, said such a transfer would be "a great calamity to us." Two years later CLAY, then Secretary of State, wrote that we could not consent to the occupation of Cuba and Puerto Rico by any other country than Spain "under any contingency whatever." Secretary FORSYTH wrote in 1849 that the United States would employ the military and naval forces of the Union to resist any attempt by a European power to wrest Cuba from Spain. Secretary MARCY said the same thing in 1853.

Cuba is a larger island and she lies nearer our shores than St. Thomas, but the establishment of a strong naval station by Germany in the harbor of Charlotte Amalie would give us cause for anxiety about the commerce of the Gulf and the traffic which will seek the isthmian canal when it is constructed. Besides, with a German outpost at St. Thomas, only forty miles east of Puerto Rico, the value of our own outpost at San Juan would be largely neutralized. A power having no harbor for refuge, coaling, and refitting on this side of the Atlantic would be at a very serious disadvantage in any controversy with the United States. CERVERA's fleet gave us trouble and anxiety only because he had a place to run to for shelter and supplies. It is not for our interest to permit any increase in the number of naval bases in the islands near our shores which may some time be used against us. From Great Britain we have nothing to fear so long as the two nations continue to be upon their present footing of friendship and common interest. We look with indifference upon the presence of France in the Leeward Islands. But Germany, with her colonial ambitions and her restless policy at home and abroad, would be a neighbor not to be desired, and, indeed, not to be permitted. It is reported in dispatches from Berlin that objections on the part of this Government would be sufficient to dissuade Germany from seeking to acquire St. Thomas. If that be the case, we cannot doubt that our opposition to the bargain has already been courteously manifested.

That would be an easy ending of the matter. If, however, we should be compelled to buy the island, Denmark would be likely to profit by the appearance of two rich bidders in the field. SEWARD's treaty of purchase with Denmark in 1867 fixed the price of St. Thomas and its smaller neighbor, St. John, at $7,500,000, the Island of Santa Cruz not being included in the trade, although we had earnestly sought to have it transferred with the others. Probably we should find it to our interest to take the three islands. Within the last five years we could have bought St. Thomas for a very low price—much less than we shall have to pay now if we have to outbid Germany. Commercially the island is now of very little value, but in the days when the sugar industry was prosperous it produced a good deal of wealth for the owners of its soil. But its strategic importance is too great to permit us to see with indifference a great European power come into possession of a station so near our eastern outpost of Puerto Rico.

THE BANKERS.

There still lingers in the minds of the uninformed and prejudiced so much vague but mischievous animosity toward capitalists, and especially toward bankers, that the following plain statement of fact from the columns of The Financial Chronicle regarding the action of the bankers in the panic of last week on the Stock Exchange is peculiarly timely:

To the credit of our bankers and banks be it said that they arrested the ruinous liquidation we have referred to and stayed the panic. How often the unthinking body of our people glibly tells us that these classes of our citizens are unfeeling, heartless, and wholly selfish. When the financial history of this country during the last thirty-five years comes to be written—a period during which the generation now about to lay off its armor has been active and prominent in affairs—no class, if the inside facts are disclosed, will be found to have assumed greater risks and shown greater forgetfulness of self and personal interests than they have done on many occasions to tide the country safely over its crises. What are generally called capitalists are very conservative men. They as a whole never run risks to make money for themselves, so they are always able and prepared in time of danger to lend a hand in bridging the chasm less conservative men cause.

While this statement is true of capitalists as a class, it should be said of bankers that they act on a still more praiseworthy motive both in their conservatism that leads them to avoid undue risks and in their readiness to protect the general public from the consequences, as far as may be, of the recklessness of others in incurring risks. The bankers know that they are in reality trustees, and they observe with rare fidelity the conditions of their trusts. It is true that if they did not they could not prosper, but it is also true that as a class they are far more careful of the interests intrusted to their care than the average business man is of his own. And it is to be remembered, too, that as a class they take broader views of the effect of their policy on the general welfare, act together with greater wisdom and with more effective cooperation, and secure more and more lasting benefits for the public than any other class. These are sober facts with which all well-informed students and observers of our financial affairs are perfectly familiar, and they should be generally recognized.

GEN. LAWTON'S "MESSAGE."

The letter from Gen. LAWTON read by ex-Minister BARRETT at the New England dinner on Friday evening was of such significance and importance that we reproduce it here in full:

I would to GOD that the whole truth of this whole Philippine situation could be known by every one in America as I know it. If the real history, inspiration, and conditions of this insurrection, and the influences, local and external, that now encourage the enemy, as well as the actual possibilities of these islands and peoples and their relations to this great East, could be understood at home, we would hear no more talk of unjust "shooting of government" into the Filipinos, or of hauling down our flag in the Philippines. If the so-called anti-imperialists would honestly ascertain the truth on the ground and not in distant America, they, whom I believe to be honest men misinformed, would be convinced of the error of their statements and conclusions, and of the unfortunate effect of their publications here. If I am shot by a Filipino bullet it might as well come from one of my own men, because I know from observations, confirmed by captured prisoners, that the continuance of fighting is chiefly due to reports that are sent out from America.

This was written last month, when LAWTON was still at the front engaged in that arduous and heroic movement which it is hoped has broken for good the military power of the Filipino insurrection. It is the fervent and yet sober and fair statement of a soldier who wrote of what he knew by personal observation and experience, and who was daily facing the death that finally came to him in a war that he believed to be needlessly prolonged, if not occasioned, by the conduct of the opposition at home. It will be noted that in the intense earnestness of his statement, made, as it was, in the security and freedom of private correspondence, and with the feeling strong upon him that his own life and the lives of his men were being exposed, there is not a trace of bitterness or of anger. He speaks of the "anti-imperialists whom I believe to be honest men misinformed," and he talks only of "the error of their statements and conclusions, and of the unfortunate effect of their publications here." This is perfectly characteristic of the man, who, with all his fearlessness in the face of danger and his relentless vigor in fighting, had a heart as gentle as that of a child and a sense of justice as calm and impartial as that of a Judge in ermine.

The appeal will come with all the more force to those who will be brought by it to see that they have committed the error that LAWTON condemns. Those of them who are what this scrupulously fair gentleman, writing from the very battlefield, called "honest men misinformed," will give the great weight that is due to it to the testimony of their critic. Surely none could be more convincing and none could be more disinterested. At the same time it is to be remembered that there is another message from the gallant soldier even more important than is conveyed in this letter. It is embodied in his own acts and witness is borne to it by the multitude of Filipinos, including some who met LAWTON in fight, who now mourn his death. These men know that our General was as just and humane as he was brave and skillful, and that he never lost an opportunity to prove to the Filipinos by acts the motives by which he and his Government were guided. What he was able to do in his own sphere of activity and influence he would have had all the agents of the United States do everywhere. It is the judgment of those that had ample opportunity to know him that, had he survived the war which he sustained so heartily and in which he took so large a part, he would have been one of the most efficient instruments in the administration of the accessions which it is now certain that we shall not abandon.

Taking Sides in Boer War.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

I think that you are doing our country a great wrong in taking sides with England in the Boer war, and are to some extent violating our neutrality laws. We have no right and no business to help either British or Boer; we must be strictly neutral. We might embroil our country in a foreign war, for there is no telling how many countries will yet attack England, and if we figure as her ally, they will attack us also. Neither have we any right to assist the Boers, and by so doing earn the hatred of England. Hands off, I say! Let them fight it out among themselves! And if the other nations of Europe choose to mix into the fight, it is all a better reason for the United States to keep out of it. We will then sell to all these fools of fighters, food, clothing, &c. It would be indeed a very dear Philippines and Cuba to us if their acquisition by us brought us another foreign war on the ground that we had abandoned the Monroe doctrine. I say that we have never given up that saving doctrine, and never will. The expanded territory we got is simply spoils of war, and does not pledge us to give up our policy of non-interference in the affairs of Europe and Asia.

A Christmas Warning.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Each year at Christmas time we have the shocking record of children burned to death—happy gatherings turned into tragedies. And this gruesome story will go on until Sunday school Superintendents learn that cotton, wool, and unprotected gas jets are as dangerous neighbors as gunpowder and a lighted coal. Poor little Lawrena Menke, at Quincy, Ill., is truly a lamb sacrificed. Your dispatch of to-day telling of her death, with that of her ten young companions, is heart sickening.

Let each State pass a law restricting these exhibitions within prudent limits. With electric lights they would be safe; with open gas jets they are murderous.

NO POCKETS IN A SHROUD.

From The Denver Post.

O! ye who bow at Mammon's shrine,
Whose hearts with greed are growing cold,
Who turn your backs on things divine
And worship but the god of gold.
What will it profit you when death
Lays low the head so kingly proud
And robs the wasted form of breath?
There are no pockets in a shroud.

Your thoughts by day, your dreams by night,
Are but of grasping golden gain,
Your guide is but the beacon light
Of riches burning in your brain.
You cast all nobler aims behind
And struggle as a madding crowd
To clutch the dollars, but you'll find
There are no pockets in a shroud.

Ye usurers who grind the poor
Beneath a cold, relentless heel,
Who overshadow many a door
With cloud of misery, and feel
No sympathy to see them lie
Beneath the hand of sorrow cowed,
Remember when you come to die
There are no pockets in a shroud.

What is the profit to the man
Whose life to Mammon has been given?
A bridge of gold can never span
The gulf between the earth and heaven!
What will it be to him to find
The wealth with which he is endowed
At death's gate must be left behind?
There are no pockets in a shroud.

This life is but a span; to-day
We're here; to-morrow we are gone,
Have faded from the earth away
Into eternity's strange dawn!
Yet in the hungry greed for gains
Too many at the gold shrine bowed,
Forget that when the life-spark wanes
There are no pockets in a shroud.

RIVAL THEATRES IN PARIS

The Odeon Is Crippled by Antoine's Latest Venture.

DREYFUS CAUSES THE TROUBLE

New Play by M. Gaston Devore Is Produced at the Comedie Francaise—Campaign Against Claretie Still Violent.

Foreign Correspondence NEW YORK TIMES.

PARIS, Dec. 15.—The theatrical season is now in full swing, and the new pieces absorb the Parisian mind more than anything else, except perhaps the Anglo-Boer war. There are no direct references to Dreyfus on the stage, but Dreyfus preoccupies us all the same. At the Odéon the management is distinctly anti-Dreyfusard. In a measure, the Odéon is always opposed to the Comédie Française—"the rire gauche against the rire droite, the student versus the bourgeois." Moreover, M. Ginisty, the Director of the Odéon, has a pet foe, his former co-Director, M. Antoine, whom I saw at Rennes on the day of the verdict in the Dreyfus case, and who wept when the result was read out. M. Ginisty will never forgive M. Antoine for leaving him and founding Antoine's theatre, which knocks all the receipts out of the Odéon. So he has mounted at vast expense a five-act drama by the Vicomte Henri de Bornier, entitled "France d'Abord," which is meant as a sort of rallying cry to the two sections of the Conservative Party whom the Dreyfus case has divided. This play is intended to be a sort of pendant to "La Fille de Roland," by the same author, a great patriotic drama, which had an immense success in its time, and procured Bornier's election as an Academician, and is still in the répertoire of the Comédie Française.

The principal personage in "France d'Abord" is Blanche de Castille, widow of Louis VIII., and Regent of France during the minority of her son, Louis IX. The idea of the author has been to personify in Queen Blanche young France of to-day, the dominant thought being that of patriotism. As Regent of France, Blanche has against her the great vassals of her kingdom, all of whom are anxious as regards their independence and demand certain rights over the control of the royal power. They enjoin her to select a husband from among themselves. Blanche finds herself loved by one of these, Count Thibault of Champagne. She returns in secret this love, but destiny prevents its ever being expressed either on one side or the other, and the Count goes off to the crusades without even declaring his passion. There is a tragic figure suggesting Mignon, who supplies the melodramatic element of the play, in the person of Comtesse Allenor, who has been adopted by the little King's uncle—the wicked Comte d'Anjou—and though a gypsy, is really the daughter of Charles VIII. She has an undying hatred against the Queen Regent, who had cruelly whipped her when she was a child. The King's uncle, whose adoptive niece she is, bids her place a poisoned crown upon the head of the little King Louis IX. when he is crowned at Rheims, but blood proves to be thicker than water, and, rather than execute so cruel a mission, this daughter of Charlemagne places the crown upon her own head and dies. Of the four acts, the first is by far the best. In the scenes which follow the note of patriotism too often repeated becomes somewhat wearisome; a love which fails to find expression is in its essence egotistical, and our interest in the Queen diminishes. The play, however, was received very warmly, though it cannot be looked upon as a second "Fille de Roland."

The first performance of "La Conscience de l'Enfant," a four-act comedy in prose, by M. Gaston Devore, was given this week at the Comédie Française. It belongs to the category known as pièces à thèse, and consists of an exposition of the workings of conscience in a juvenile mind exposed to antagonistic influences, which, in this case, spring from a lofty sense of honor and justice, and owe their existence to the promptings of the heart. A position is created in which two currents of feeling are at war, and a young girl of twenty is shown to be the cause of considerable family unhappiness, because from the high but limited moral ground of her own convictions she chooses to view with harshness certain acts of her father.

The principal characters are four in number: Couvelin, (Silvain,) a wealthy, elderly, and high-minded gentleman; Jenny, (Baretta,) his daughter; Montret, (Worms,) Jenny's husband, an enterprising but unscrupulous speculator, whose questionable finances become a subject for journalistic attacks, and who ends by compromising the name and honor of Couvelin. The fourth is Germaine, (Lara.) Montet's daughter and the grandchild of Couvelin, a girl of marriageable age. In the first act Couvelin inveighs against the lack of principles in men, deplores their weak sense of justice and easy-going consciences, and explains to Germaine his views on honor and justice.

Act II. shows the ending of a love affair between Montret and Eva, (de Boncza,) a friend and relative of Jenny. Montret's financial position becomes untenable. Jenny hears of her husband's liaison. Germaine's conscience makes her side with her grandfather against her father. The latter, who adores his daughter, is in despair at the thought of losing her esteem and love.

Act III. is one long succession of moving scenes. Jenny confronts Eva with the latter's love-letters to Montret, Cauvelin has the indelicacy to inform Eva's husband (Beer) of his wife's guilt. Cauvelin next launches the bitterest invectives against Montret, in the midst of which he declares that a public scandal is preferable to private shame, and that suffering is of no account if only the family honor remains intact. Montret, apparently calm, accepts all blame and renounces his right over his wife and child. Cauvelin then undertakes to save Montret from bankruptcy. Jenny, however, loves her husband, and forgives and follows him. Germaine clings to her grandfather. Between Acts III. and IV. three years have elapsed, during which time Montret has remade his fortune. Germaine recognizes that she has been guilty of haste and prejudice in judging her father, that many of his acts have been motived by influences of which she had no comprehension—that, in short, her point of view, though lofty, has been narrow. A general reconciliation follows, which may be said to be based on the theory that when love is present everything can be arranged. Cauvelin alone remains obdurate, and retires into solitude, resolved to maintain his honor invulnerable at all costs, even at that of family affection.

Such is the play. It consists, as I have already said, of the struggle between a sentiment of honor, which admits of no compromise, and a kindly indulgence that is born of affection and the heart. The conclusion of the author appears to be that virtue is often of less value than goodness, that human suffering is always worthy of something of our sympathy, and that when conscience and love are found to be in conflict, it is better to yield to love. It may be said that the author leaves himself open to the reproach of immorality, in that he has presented as sympathetic, a person devoid of principles, and as unsympathetic a man of the highest virtue and honor. To this it may be replied that the aim of the stage is not so much that of exposing the currently adopted conventions, opinions, or principles of society people as that of endeavoring to point out the weak points in those principles. It will be seen that the subject of M. Devore's play is both new and interesting. There is at times a want of simplicity. The personages often enter the scene without other motive apparently than that of airing their views, although it must be readily admitted that these views are worthy of expression. The success of the play was considerable, Acts II. and III. being received with enthusiasm. It may be questioned, however, whether a partially triumphant experiment of this kind will save M. Claretie from the hornets' nest of criticism and recrimination into which he has tumbled of late.

The campaign against him as manager of the first theatre in France is still very violent, and when the exhibition is finished he will probably be sacrificed to his foes, so many scores are to be wiped out after the exhibition.

The Colonial Party will revenge Fashoda, and M. Le Bargy will settle M. Claretie. For ten years past, ever since he was appointed "administrateur" of the Comédie Française, M. Claretie has been the object of attack. In the United States people possibly do not recognize generally that the manager of the State theatre in Paris has not only his artistic concerns to mind, but is a political personage. He does not fall with successive Governments. But he comes near to doing so. M. Claretie made the mistake of taking up the defense of Dreyfus in a most energetic fashion. He converted himself into a daily reporter of the Temps at Rennes, so that the work might be well done. Now he is paying for his enthusiasm.

HEARD ABOUT TOWN.

"Don't tread on the alligator," is a sign that might be appropriately displayed in the central one of the three big plant houses at Central Park just back of the Magown's Pass Tavern on the East Drive. There are three of the alligators at large in that house, which is devoted to palms and semi-tropical plants. They are little fellows and there is a pool of water for their benefit, as well as a miniature stream running through the central foliage display where they should disport themselves. But they are peculiar alligators, and prefer to wander about the house and keep away from the water. It is rather startling to the visitors to see one of their ugly little snouts sticking out as he bends to better examine some plant in which he is particularly interested. Since the cool weather has come the alligators have rather abandoned their roving habits, and there is less danger of treading on them. A favorite resort for them now is the warm bit of sandy loam just under the steam pipes that run along the sides of the house. When they take refuge here it takes a sharp eye to discover them. When one is discovered and shown to a feminine visitor her usual exclamation—if it is the first time she has seen one of them—is "And is that an alligator? Why I thought they were big enough to eat people!"

"Profits?" remarked the manager of the big department store as he was chatting about the Christmas trade. "Why, we made our profits when we bought the goods. The margin we get when we sell them pays for the running expenses, advertising, and rent. The real profits of our business are in the discounts we get by paying cash for what we buy, instead of asking for long credits. That's where the principal profits of the big department stores come from, and that's why the smaller stores cannot compete with us successfully."

"I'll tell you just the kind of man John E. Madden is," said a Kentuckian, who has known him for years, and has had much to do with him in a business way. Madden's successful sales of horses to W. C. Whitney and other rich owners of racing stables was the topic. "Madden is a born horse trader, and he once told me of his first venture in that line. His mother, a widow, had three horses and a small farm. John was a mere boy at the time, but had already developed the trading instinct. One of those traveling horse traders happened by and saw among the horses a mare that he wanted. He offered John $300 for her, if he would induce his mother to part with her. Young John went to the house and that evening suggested that there was a bit of extravagance in keeping three horses, and advised the sale of this particular mare for $100, which sum he told his mother he thought he could get for her. The mother refused to sell for less than $150, but finally, on John's disinterested (?) advice, agreed to sell for $125. Then John hied himself to the near-by town where the dealer made his headquarters and disposed of the mare for $300. He went back home, gave his mother her $125, and pocketed the other $175. John told the story with a deal of gusto and as an evidence of his own shrewdness, and I don't believe he saw anything out of the way in the transaction. It is his own story, at all events, and shows the beginning of perhaps the most successful horse trader in America."

Daughters of the American Revolution are already engaging quarters in Washington for their annual convention, to be held there in February. These meetings have come to be a sort of social reunion in which a lot of women from all parts of the country take an intense interest. If one wears the badge of the order while in Washington it gives her a chance to get a glimpse of the official life of the capital that she could get in no other way, as there are a score of receptions in which "the ladies of the Cabinet" participate. To the Daughters, then, the President's reception has come to be something in the nature of a Queen's Drawing Room, and there is as much wire pulling among the dear creatures from distant States to secure an election as a delegate as there is here at home to secure a ticket to the Assembly dances. Elections of those delegates will be held next month, and every woman who wears a badge of membership is cherishing hopes that she may be among the chosen ones for the Washington trip.

"Speaking about animals," said Augustus Thomas, playwright, chatting with a party at The Lambs, "the queerest ones I ever came across are the mountain rats one sees at the mines in Colorado. They are about as big as a wharf rat, but they have a bushy tail like a squirrel, and are pets of the miners. Whenever the luncheon hour comes you will see the fellows come from their holes or nests or wherever they live in the intervals between meals, squat on their haunches, and sit there until one of the miners shares his dinner-pail meal with them. Whatever they get of the scraps of that meal they sit up and eat just as a squirrel does. The miner doesn't exist that would not share his meal with them. The rats are intelligent and mischievous as they can be, and to me they always seemed imbued with a sense of humor that I never saw in any other animal. They are thieves by nature, but their thievery is peculiar. Now, here's a yarn about one of them, or perhaps about a colony of them. When I was in Southern Colorado there was a box of tallow candles in the rough cabin where the men slept. We got up one morning and the box was empty, not a candle in sight anywhere, but in the box was a pile of sticks and rubbish of all sorts. 'It is the rats,' said the miners as soon as they saw that rubbish, for they claim that one of these rats never steals anything without leaving something in the place of the stolen article. Of course, we of the camp never expected to see the candles again, but two days later I give you my word, there was the whole boxful of candles back again. The miners say that the rats brought them back, and I suppose it must be true. At another time the rats made a raid on a sack of potatoes in the cookhouse and brought them all into the hut used for sleeping quarters. We found them in the morning, all piled up much after the fashion that one used to see those pyramidal piles of cannon balls in the navy yards in the days of the old-fashioned round ammunition. A mountain rat will steal nails, scraps of iron, and even the iron skewerlike candlesticks the miners use, and when they are stolen a fellow can tell if the rats did it, for, if they did there were always the telltale markers they had left behind in place of the stolen articles."

NEW ST. JOHN'S HOSPITAL.

Long Island City Institution to be Opened in January.

It was announced in the Catholic churches of the Diocese of Long Island yesterday morning that the new St. John's Hospital, Twelfth Street and Jackson Avenue, Long Island City, would be consecrated and its doors thrown open to the public on Jan. 7. The ceremony will be performed by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Charles E. McDonnell, at 10 o'clock A. M. on that day. This hospital, which is under the direction of the Sisters of St. Joseph, is one of the most commodious structures in the Borough of Queens. It will accommodate over 200 patients. Owing to its close proximity to the terminus of the Long Island Railroad, this institution receives emergency cases from all points of the counties of Queens, Nassau and Suffolk. The numerous factories which surround the hospital supply the greatest number of emergency cases—cases in which delay would in every case nearly prove fatal.

ROME'S HOLY DOOR OPEN

Imposing Ceremonial Conducted by the Pope.

SACRED YEAR INAUGURATED

All the Bells in the City Rang Out as the Pontiff Entered the Basilica.

ROME, Dec. 24.—The Pope solemnly inaugurated the holy year by performing the impressive ceremony of opening the Holy Door of St. Peter's Cathedral at 11 o'clock this morning. The ceremony was performed in the vestibule, which was handsomely decorated, in the presence of the Papal officers, the members of the Diplomatic Corps, leading representatives of the Roman nobility, and a number of invited guests.

After donning the Pontifical robes, the Pope, borne on the sedia gestatoria and escorted by the Papal Guards, proceeded with the Cardinals and the Court to the Sistine Chapel, in the Vatican Palace, where were gathered representatives of the Roman religious orders and clergy. After a brief prayer before the Holy Sacrament, which was there exposed, Leo intoned the "Veni Creator," and then again ascended the sedia gestatoria. Preceded by clergy and friars, who bore lighted candles, the Pope proceeded to the Vestibule of the Basilica, priests lining the halls and staircases en route.

The Papal throne had been erected in the vestibule. The Supreme Pontiff ascended the throne, which was immediately surrounded by Cardinals and dignitaries.

Suddenly a heavy bell boomed. Leo arose and, preceded by the Grand Penitentiary, walked toward the Holy Door. Cardinal Mgr. Serafino Vannutelli, Prefect of the Congregation of Bishops and Regulars, met him and handed him an artistic golden mallet given by the Italian Bishops. Leo, wearing the mitre, uttered the verses of the Liturgy and struck blows with the hammer on the door, which had previously been cut with a saw.

A few moments of solemn silence followed, the Pope and the Papal dignitaries in their State robes being grouped before the door. Then the latter swung back; and the officials of St. Peter's laved the threshold and doorposts with holy water, while Leo opened the Psalm "Jubilate Deo," which was taken up by the Pontifical choir.

The Pope, having again covered his head and holding in his right hand a crucifix and in his left a lighted candle, knelt at the threshold amid the strains of "Te Deum." Rising to his feet, he stepped alone within the portals of the vast and empty basilica. The Cardinals and others followed.

At this moment all the church bells in Rome rang out. Leo stopped before the altar of Michael Angelo, where the Janitore of the Holy Door for the coming year kissed his feet. He addressed a few words to them on the importance of the ceremony and then proceeded to the altar, where sacrament was offered, followed by a short prayer. Then, advancing on the sedia gestatoria to the high altar, he pronounced a solemn benediction, according plenary indulgences.

By 1:15 he had returned to his private apartments, having performed the ceremonies with great apparent satisfaction. He was smiling throughout, but grew pale and showed signs of fatigue toward the end. Nevertheless, he gave the three blows upon the door with considerable force.

Profound silence was maintained throughout the ceremony save when the Pope gave his blessing, which evoked loud "Vivas." The weather was fine, and an enormous concourse assembled in the precincts of the Basilica. Order was preserved inside by the Pontifical Guards and outside by the Royal Carabineers and the police.

RECIPROCITY WITH FRANCE.

French Journal Says Treaty Is an Evidence of America's Friendship.

PARIS, Dec. 24.—The Journal des Débats, in the course of a long article favoring the Franco-American reciprocity treaty, says:

"Some are opposing the treaty because they have become the dupes of English newspapers, which are spreading the idea that the United States is only a branch of Great Britain. The Americans, however, have affirmed their determination to be independent. President McKinley's message showed their ability to disentangle themselves from English embraces when these became compromising.

"As for ourselves, until there is some proof to the contrary, we must regard the Americans as our allies and friends. Their conclusion of a treaty with us was a friendly act, and must be considered as such. Our only desire should be the ratification by our own Chamber of Deputies and the American Senate of an agreement so significant and precious for the maintenance of the traditional relations between the two countries."

AN ANCHOR LINER DAMAGED.

The Steamer Tainui Collides with Another Vessel in the Clyde.

LONDON, Dec. 24.—A report was received here this evening from Greenock, Scotland, to the effect that the Anchor liner Tainui had collided in the Clyde with the British steamer Gulf of Ancud, and had been sunk. The Gulf of Ancud, according to the dispatch, was then returning to take repairs, but subsequently the rumor was found to be partially incorrect, as the Tainui proceeded to Glasgow after the collision occurred. The extent of the damages she sustained in the collision is not known.

The Tainui sailed from New York Dec. 13 for Glasgow, touching at Moville yesterday, and proceeded for her destination. She carries a number of passengers, among them being Mrs. Graves Colles and maid, Mrs. Archibald Smith, Mrs. Russell P. Jacoby and infant, Mrs. John Wilson, Miss Veronica, Miss McNeilly, Dr. Mary Lougdore, and William L. Beunie.

CUBANS ARE SATISFIED.

Believe They Will Soon Secure Their Independence.

HAVANA, Dec. 24.—The events of the last few days have had a great effect on Cuban politics. The circumstances attending the arrival of Gen. Wood and the departure of Gen. Brooke, taken with the speech of the former at the farewell banquet to the latter, in which the intentions of the United States Government were restated, have satisfied the Cubans that Cuba will certainly be independent within a reasonable time.

More than this, the arrival and public and private utterances of Horatio Rubens have increased the restful feeling that now apparently exists among all classes. Mr. Rubens has, without doubt, considerable influence. Wherever he goes he is cheered by the people; his room at the hotel is thronged with Cuban officials seeking an interview, and, altogether, he is regarded somewhat in the light of an oracle.

The Patria, commenting upon Gen. Woods's remarks at the farewell dinner to Gen. Brooke, says:

"It was a most satisfactory speech, with a pleasing military simplicity. Obviously, the United States Government intends to ful

[illegible] IN NEGROS ISLAND

The Sixth Played Havoc with Papa Issio's Bandits.

ISLAND UNDER CIVIL RULE

Gen. Smith Supervises the Actions of Native Officials, Who Were Elected in October.

BACOLOT, Island of Nefiros, Nov. 7.—The mountains of Negros run down its centre and length, and between the foothills of this range and the sea there is a belt of lowlands averaging in width from five to twenty miles. On these lowlands are the farms and plantations producing the island's yearly crop of sugar, all of which is sent to Iloilo, on the Island of Panay, for shipment. In the lowlands are found almost all the important towns and villages, as well as most of the roads.

This geographical distribution of low, productive lands on the coast and mountain fastnesses in the interior was the comfort of the early bandits and marauders, and had much to do with making their profession possible and profitable on Negros Island. There were always, under Spanish rule, bandits in the mountains who lived by raiding the valleys, and when we secured possession of Negros they were part of our heritage from our predecessors. They exist to-day, but since last July they have encountered the Sixth Infantry, and they are not nearly as numerous as formerly, and consequently the profession has lost much of its popularity, and may be considered to be upon its last legs.

It would be unwise to state just how many of these marauders have been killed by the Sixth—the number is large, and there would surely be people at home in ignorance of the fact that drastic and severe measures alone can remedy this evil, and who, consequently, might raise an outcry against the killing.

PAPA ISSIO, THE BANDIT.

A part of our inheritance from Spain is the robber chief known locally as Papa, or Pope, Issio. He is the leader of the band called Babaylanes, who operate in the southern portion of the island. In the light of information gathered by American officers on Negros to-day, the Babaylanes were formerly a religious sect composed of natives of the island, who preferred their own religion, with its curious observances and wild feasts, recurring once every seven years, to the tenets of the Church of Rome, which Spain tried to force upon them. But the natives objected to the efforts of the priests and took to the hills for religious freedom.

This was in the old days, and their prophetess, Babaylan, went with them. And being kept in the mountains by religious prosecution, robbery in the lowlands as a means of livelihood soon developed among them and proved profitable. Hence the name Babaylanes, and hence their present occupation of robbery. What their religion is to-day is hard to fathom. It bears traces of Mohammedanism and some traces of Catholicism, but is apparently largely composed of shallow superstition and a belief in their present leader, Papa Issio.

Issio is described as a cunning, shrewd, and ignorant man. It is said he mystified them and gained his ascendency over them by having some third-class conjurer, whom he picked up upon the coast, do tricks at his bidding. He issues and signs passports to the mountain people, charging them therefor according to their means and his needs. All tales of him point to the fact that he has a strong hold upon their ignorance and credulity, and that he poses successfully as their Governor, god, and father. He provides them with small, round pieces of paper, scrawled with dog-Latin, which he declares make a man invulnerable to American bullets. His followers believe him in all things, and his charms are often found upon the enemy's dead.

WORK OF AMERICAN TROOPS.

As soon as the Sixth were settled upon the island they began an active campaign against the bandits. The wet season was beginning, but the rains were ignored. The bandits never thought the Americans could penetrate their hills and meet them upon their own ground, as the Spaniards had never attempted such a thing. But the Sixth did it. There were forced marches through country that was considered impenetrable. Over mountains and through swamps our soldiers forced their way to meet the enemy at break of dawn. In fancied security and never expecting an attack, the enemy were killed, demoralized, and scattered.

A handful of American troops have taken positions that forty trained men could have held against an army corps. They have fought up the face of mountains and in swamps where the rank grass grows ten feet high, and men stagger and drop from want of air and the heat. Hardships, which the officers say cannot be adequately described in words, were endured with courage and determination. It was hard work and it was well done. The men operated in small bodies, for the Sixth are scattered in some thirty detachments throughout Negros, while two companies of the regiment are at Cebu, on the next island.

The officers of the Sixth have many interesting stories to tell. There was, for instance, the capture of a fortified village high up in the mountain, which our men surprised at daybreak after an almost incredible night march. This village was an ideal bandit rendezvous, well located against surprise, entrenched and stockaded. Our men began while the enemy were at breakfast, and there followed a good fight of 400 bandits against 100 Americans. Finally the village was charged and captured, and inside was found the plunder of years, mixed with carnage indescribable.

In the fight an American Corporal, pressed close by the enemy, killed five of his opponents in less time than it takes to read these words. Three he shot with his Krag held at his hip, he not having room to lift it to his shoulder, a fourth was bayoneted, and the last was killed by a blow with the butt of his gun.

The leader of this band, a tall, handsome man, with all the appearance of a pure Spaniard, well mounted, well dressed, and well armed, fought from the back of his horse until finally shot to pieces. "He carried a very fine pair of French field glasses, which are now in my possession," remarked Capt. Byrne of the Sixth, who was in charge of this expedition.

ROBBERS LAY DOWN ARMS.

The loss in killed inflicted upon the bandits in this encounter disconcerted them vastly, and it will take but a few such lessons to annihilate them utterly. They are now beginning to come unarmed into the valleys, anxiously seeking a vocation of peace and saying the trade has become unprofitable and too dangerous, that food is scarce, and that Papa Issio is losing his influence; that the American soldiers shoot very straight and that the charms of Issio fail to protect. Papa Issio himself will sooner or later be captured, and this will probably end it all, and then for the first time in many generations brigandage will be impossible on Negros Island.

Since last July there have been revolutionists on Negros, Tagalog leaders and soldiers from Panay and Luzon having come over to stir up revolt and discontent. They landed on the northern coast of the island and effected a junction with the bandits of that locality, known as the Tulisanes. These are marauders pure and simple. They operate in the north, as do Papa Issio's people in the south, and they have their own leaders. Their name is the vernacular for bandits.

The revolutionists made an alliance with the Tulisanes, and the work began. But they counted without the Sixth, which met them in the mountains, killing and scattering them until the revolutionary leaders sent in to Gen. Smith to humbly ask permission to return to Panay. Gen. Smith said no, declaring he would do all in his power to prevent their leaving Negros, and that as he considered them nothing more than murderers and robbers, punish severely all whom he caught. Several of the rebels' officers, and many of the soldiers, were killed in battle, until finally the last of them, about forty in number, managed to escape to Panay—and this was the end of the revolutionary movement in Negros.

SUCCESS OF CIVIL RULE.

When we fought in Negros we fought seriously. No half-way measures were adopted. We had here, as we have elsewhere, an enemy who construed every evidence of consideration and kindness as a sign of fear and weakness, and on Negros we did not mince matters. We fought to a finish, and we fought hard, and the enemy suffered greatly in consequence.

On Oct. 2 elections for a President of the Island, for Councilmen, and for a Supreme Court were held, and the successful candidates were inaugurated yesterday. The suffrage was determined by ability to read and write Aspino, Spanish, or Visayan, or the possession of $500 (Mexican) worth of property or the payment of rent upon $1,000 worth of property. There were in all some forty candidates in the field, and over 5,000 votes were cast. Meliscio Severino was elected President of the island by a majority of thirty.

When the new Government was inaugurated on Nov. 6 it took over all the functions of the provisional civil government, operative until that time, and began its career with a three days' feast in Bacolot. To-day this village is covered with home-made American flags, none of which, however, have more than a dozen stars and half a dozen stripes. Country people have come in in bull carts from miles around to attend the festivities. There has been a most successful official dance at the Government House, and this afternoon there will be horse races and wrestling on the plaza. Native bands have been playing incessantly all over the village for two days, cock fights are fixed for every afternoon, and the monte games are running full blast. No untoward incident occurred.

HOW GOVERNING IS DONE.

The power of veto and final decision is vested in Gen Smith, the Military Governor, and the whole system of civil administration is controlled by the American authorities. This is imperative in the beginning; and latitude can only be allowed later.

"The greatest danger that threatens the success of this experiment," said Gen. Smith, in the course of conversation, "is political intrigue among themselves. If we can avoid or prevent that, we stand a very good chance of success."

Negros is the first and only example of the application of the principle of self-government under American control, to any of the Philippine islands. If the experiment results successfully, it will have an excellent effect upon all the other islands.

The island has seen a happy and successful division of labor among the American authorities. Gen. Smith, as the Military Governor of the island, and Col. Miner, as commander of the Sixth, have done excellent work. Gen. Smith is a volunteer officer and Col. Miner a regular. Gen. Smith is primarily a man of affairs, while the Colonel is a trained soldier. The division of labor has been along these lines. Col. Miner has attended more directly to military matters, thus leaving Gen. Smith more free to attend to civil matters, more time to be diplomatic, and more time to study and understand the men who compose his civil government.

The result of the experiment in Negros will undoubtedly have important bearings upon the larger problem of government throughout the archipelago.

FIGHTING ON ISLAND OF PANAY.

Insurgents Held Every Town But Iloilo Before Gen. Hughes Arrived.

ILOILO, Island of Panay, Philippines, Nov. 13.—This Island of Panay, sister island to Negros and another of the Visayan group, has for months past been in insurgent hands. To-day the American forces are taking the aggressive for the first time and are moving out to cover and hold more territory. Up to the present we have possessed the half-burned town of Iloilo and nothing more. The Twenty-sixth Regiment, under Col. Rice, arrived here two weeks ago from the United States.

"We at home knew," said officers of this regiment, "that our troops were on Panay, but we had the impression they occupied the island; that the important towns, at least, were ours; that our possession was more than nominal. Hence we are surprised to see the American forces actually besieged by the insurgents upon three miles of land immediately surrounding Iloilo."

People in the United States may have the same ideas as had the officers of the Twenty-sixth Regiment, and to them it would be well to say that our lines, up to the present, embrace the suburbs of Jaro and Molo, both within three miles of this port, and nothing more. Insurgent trenches face us on the north and west and outpost firing is to be heard at any time.

With the coming of reinforcements a battalion of the Nineteenth and the Twenty-sixth Regiment entire, Gen. Hughes, in the midst of a typhoon that swept the country with driving rain, flooded rice fields and made quagmires of the roads, an expedition composed of the Eighteenth regulars, under Col. Carpenter; the Second Battalion of the Twenty-sixth Regiment, two battalions of the Nineteenth, Light Battery G of the Sixth Artillery, under Capt. Bridgeman, and Capt. Gordon's mounted scouts of the Eighteenth Regiment, advanced into the enemy's country. The battalion of the Twenty-sixth and the two battalions of the Nineteenth constituted a provisional regiment under Col. Rice, while the First and Third Battalions of the Twenty-sixth garrisoned Iloilo and Jaro.

The objective point of the expedition was the alleged insurgent stronghold at Santa Barbara, eight miles north of Jaro, but as the direct road between these two points had been strongly intrenched the American forces made a detour to the west in order to approach Santa Barbara on its unprotected side.

Yesterday Gen. Hughes's command had occupied successively the villages of Oton, Tigbauan, and Gurmal, on the coast, and west of Iloilo, likewise Cordoba, four miles north of Tigbauan. There was no resistance by the enemy, their forces retreating as ours advanced.

Company C of the Twenty-sixth Regiment had the only contact with the rebels on the first night out. One of the men of the company, which was under command of Lieut. Fales, was seriously wounded, two of the enemy were found dead when the trenches were captured, and considerable ammunition fell into our hands as a result of the brush.

To-day Gen. Hughes's column is resting in the four towns mentioned, waiting for ammunition and provisions to be conveyed to it and also for the rains to stop and the country to dry.

This movement was handicapped and interferred with from the start by lack of a proper and sufficient transportation. A totally inadequate number of army wagons and mules were recently landed at Iloilo. These were added to by a number of bull carts and bulls, and the sum total of transportation facilities for the expedition was about one-third what it should have been. Consequently it was with the greatest difficulty that the expedition started on schedule time, and as soon as it was once on the road there began the days of waiting while the transports did three times their proper allotment of work.

HOW MAJOR LOGAN WAS KILLED

Stopped to Aid a Wounded Man and Was Shot Through the Head by a Filipino from a Tree Top.

KANSAS CITY, Mo., Dec. 24.—Apropos of the reports put in circulation at the time of the death of Major John A. Logan, killed in action in the Philippines, the following letter received to-day by L. S. Leiberman from his son, Dr. B. Albert Leiberman, Major and surgeon of the Thirty-third United States Infantry, (Major Logan's regiment,) effectually disproves the statement that Major Logan was shot by his own men:

"San Fabian, Luzon, Nov. 12, 1899.—As I wrote you day before yesterday that we were to attack a town, I will now tell you that we did it, and, although we whipped them, the cost was severe, the killed including Major Logan. We left here at 7 A. M., and marched about two or three miles, when we ran into the enemy, who were in houses, rice fields, and tops of trees alongt he road, and in intrenchments without end. Corporal Robinson in the advance was wounded by the first volley. Major Logan in passing him stopped and asked him if he had a first aid package, and was shot through the head just above the temples.

"I was only a short distance behind, and I called to my acting hospital steward, Mercier, and we went forward to him. I took Major Logan's head and Mercier his feet, so as to move him, when poor Mercier was shot through the heart from a tree under which Major Logan was. I looked up and saw the fellow about fifteen feet above me, and, drawing my revolver, I shot him, and he fell from the tree.

"Then, right at that spot, several others were killed or wounded, and when I established my dressing station at that place the sharpshooters in the tree tops made things very lively for us until a detail of men cleaned out the tree tops. One hundred and fifty natives were killed, and fifty prisoners and about two hundred guns captured.

"The road was something terrible, as it had been raining; the rice fields were like lakes, the streams were greatly swollen, and the bridges destroyed, so that we had to ford or swim all of them. The natives all had Mausers, and they knew how to handle them. The battle lasted about three and one-half hours. Gen. Wheaton to-day sent us a letter of congratulation on our victory, the biggest one since the war started."

BEVERIDGE ON THE PHILIPPINES.

Senate Will Discuss the Islands After Passing the Currency Bill.

INDIANAPOLIS, Dec. 24.—Senator Beveridge said in an interview to-night that the currency bill would undoubtedly pass the Senate the first thing after the holiday recess, and that immediately after its passage the question of the Philippines will be taken up. He says the Republicans of the Senate will take a stand for expansion and will fight for the retention of these islands.

The issue, the Senator says, will be one of the leading ones in the next campaign. He does not know when he will speak on the Philippine question, in fact, he will not speak at all unless he can be of some service in settling the question.

Sergt. Rinn's Body Home.

The body of Sergt. Michael Rinn of the Ninth Infantry arrived at the home of his sister in Flushing, L. I., yesterday. Sergt. Rinn had been in the regular army for fifteen years. At the battle of San Juan he was a Corporal and performed an act of bravery, for which he was promoted. Col. Kent was wounded while leading a charge and Rinn ran to his assistance. Although the bullets were falling thick, Rinn improvised a bandage and bound up the Colonel's wounds and then carried him to a place of safety. After the Santiago campaign he was ordered to Manila, where he was taken ill and sent home. He died in San Francisco. He will have a military funeral.

Horses and Mules for Manila.

SAN FRANCISCO, Dec. 24.—The United States transport Westminster sailed for Manila to-day with 400 head of horses and mules.

The transport Valencia arrived to-day, forty-two days from Manila, via Nagasaki. The Valencia experienced very heavy weather during the entire trip, and was compelled to put back three times for shelter. Her pasenger list consisted of three civilians.

MONEY FOR THE LAWTON FUND.

St. Louis People Subscribe $1,200—Work Will Be Continued.

ST. LOUIS, Dec. 24.—Charles Parsons, who was selected to receive and forward money donated to the Lawton fund, has telegraphed $1,200 to Adjt. Gen. Corbin as the result of the first day's subscriptions. Most of the sums subscribed were in amounts of $50 and $100. The work will be continued next week.

Another Lawton Monument.

LANCASTER, Penn., Dec. 24.—Members of the National Association of Spanish-American Veterans talk of raising a monument in honor of Major Gen. Lawton. A number of prominent soldiers throughout the country have interested themselves in the movement, and a fund is about to be started, to be known as the "Henry W. Lawton Memorial Fund."

Fund Reaches $1,902 in Chicago.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Dec. 24.—Contributions to the fund for the widow and children of Gen. Lawton so far collected here amount to $1,902.

DEATH FOLLOWS A SCUFFLE.

Artillerymay Gave Watson's Neck a Twist in Friendly Christmas Greeting and Paralysis Followed.

Edward Watson, twenty-three years old, of Battery Place and Ninety-second Street, Fort Hamilton, Brooklyn, died late last night at the Norwegian Hospital, to which he had been removed from the home of his brother, in Fort Hamilton, as the result of a peculiar injury, peculiarly received.

Policeman Finnerty of the Fort Hamilton Station was called into the Dewey Hotel, at One Hundred and First Street and Fourth Avenue, late on Saturday night by some men in the place. The policeman found Watson lying helpless on the floor of the barroom. The young man was unable to stand on his feet, and appeared to have lost all control over his limbs. The policeman had him removed to the home of his brother, George Watson, at Fifth Avenue and Ninety-fifth Street.

Dr. Corish of Fifth Avenue and Ninety-second Street was called to attend Watson. Upon examination the doctor found that the young man's body was paralyzed from the neck down to the hips, that his arms were also paralyzed, and that the paralysis was extending itself to his lower limbs. In a short while Watson was unable to move a muscle below his neck. He had not lost the power of speech, however, and made a statement in which he said that he had received his injury in a scuffle with Thomas Leary, a soldier attached to Battery N, Fifth fArtillery, the garrison at the fort.

Watson said that Leary had given his neck a violent twist. Immediately afterward Watson felt a series of swift, sharp pains shoot through his body, and then a feeling of complete numbness came over him. His legs suddenly gave way under him, and he fell in a heap on the floor.

Several of the men in the saloon tried to get Watson on his feet, but he could not stand. After a while it was seen that he had been seriously injured, and Policeman Finnerty was called in. Watson's condition became rapidly worse until shortly before 10 o'clock last night, when his death occurred. The twist given Watson's neck, it is believed, snapped a spinal nerve, causing paralysis.

Leary, the artilleryman, who, it is alleged, caused Watson's fatal injury, was arrested early last evening. Several conflicting stories as to the manner in which Watson was injured were told in Fort Hamilton last night.

Leary refused to make any statement, but others who claimed to know the facts in the case declared that there had been no quarrel between the two men, and that Watson was injured as the result of a friendly but too hearty Christmas greeting on the part of Leary.

According to these authorities Watson and Leary were friends. When Leary entered the Dewey Hotel on Saturday night he found Watson there. Watson was somewhat deaf, and had his back turned to the door as Leary entered. Leary called out a "merry Christmas" to Watson, but the latter did not hear him. Then Leary walked up to Watson, and after slapping him on the back, caught him by both shoulders and turned him suddenly around. Instantly Watson dropped to the floor.

Dr. Corish said last night that by means of questions which he had written because of the injured man's deafness he had learned from him that affairs had occurred as told by Leary's friends. Ambulance Surgeon Kelgard of the Norwegian Hospital, who removed Watson, said that Watson told him also that Leary's action was simply a too emphatically friendly greeting.

CONCERT AT THE OPERA HOUSE.

A large and appreciative audience attended last night's concert at the Metropolitan Opera House. It was the first since the opening of the operatic season, and betokened a generous support for those to come. The boxholders were conspicuously absent, but the lower floor, balcony, and family circle were comfortably filled.

Mme. Suzanne Adams was compelled to sing the aria from Bizet's "Carmen" twice, while Schumann's "Two Grenadiers," sung by Mr. Plancon in French, in response to an encore brought "bravos" from the lips of many. The most fervent demonstration of the evening was awarded to Mme. Schumann-Heink for the spirited manner in which she rendered a series of German songs. A waltz song by Hermann Devries was demanded again by the audience, after which the contralto sang Donazetti's "Toast to Lucrezia Borgia."

CORRALS DUTCH FARMERS

Gen. Gatacre Issues a Reconcentrado Order.

ALL MUST MOVE INTO CAMPS

Order Applies to Males Over Twelve Years of Age of Whatever Nationality.

CAPE TOWN, Dec. 18.—Gen. Gatacre, in order to check insurrection among the Dutch colonists and to prevent disaffected persons giving information or other assistance to the Boers, has issued a modified reconcentrado order.

By its terms, all males over twelve years of age, of whatever nationality, residing outside of towns or villages, but within a radius of twelve miles of military camps now established or hereafter to be established north of Sterkstroom, are required immediately to vacate their places of residence and either to remove to some place outside the twelve-mile radius or to form a camp in close proximity to the nearest military camp—the place to be selected by the officer commanding—where they must reside until further notice, providing for their own needs. All persons found within the area without passes will be arrested.

Advices from Colesburg assert that not many colonial Dutch have joined the Boers in that district.

Certain residents of Malmesbury celebrated Gen. Gatacre's repulse at Stormberg by a dinner.

TRUCE OF BOERS AND BRITISH.

Opposing Forces Appear to be Observing Christmas—Boer Works at Modder River Extended.

LONDON, Dec. 25.—The War Office has received a cablegram from Gen. Forestier-Walker, dated at Cape Town yesterday, saying: "Have no further news of the general situation."

It may be almost safely predicted that nothing will occur to-day. A truce, either formal or informal, is being kept for the observance of Christmas by the opposing forces.

The Duke of Connaught again pressed to be allowed to go to the front, but the Government declined to give its assent. Then, waiving considerations of rank, he offered his services to Lord Roberts in any capacity as a staff officer. Lord Roberts consented, but the Government again declined.

The Morning Post's correspondent at Chieveley, telegraphing on Monday, Dec. 18, and confirming intelligence already cabled, says: "At dawn to-day the column struck camp and formed a new one three miles to the south, owing to the scarcity of water."

A dispatch from Modder River, dated Dec. 18, says:

"The Boers continue extending their trenches. They now have nearly twenty miles of intrenched works due north of the British camp, which sites is in an admirable position for the defense, as the surrounding country is perfectly level. The Boers, moreover, are compelled to keep a force estimated at 20,000 in order to contain the British column. A large number of Lord Methuen's wounded have recovered and are ready to resume their places in the ranks."

A dispatch to The Daily News from Modder River, dated Dec. 18, says:

"We are now waiting until England shall have realized the actual facts. It has to be admitted that, man for man, we have found ourselves pretty well matched; but the Boer has not the choice of positions.

"Let England, then, become alive to the need for a further 100,000 men. Such a force will prove the truest economy in both blood and treasure."

Gen. Kitchener Leaves Malta.

MALTA, Dec. 24.—Gen. Lord Kitchener, Chief of Staff to Gen. Roberts, arrived here to-day from Alexandria on the British second-class cruiser Isis. He went immediately on board the British cruiser Dido, which sailed for Gibraltar, where he will join Lord Roberts.

Duke of Westminster's Body Cremated

LONDON, Dec. 24.—The remains of the Duke of Westminster, who succumbed to pneumonia last Friday at his town residence, Grosvenor House, were cremated today at Woking Cemetery. The deceased had been active in the promotion of cremation, and was President of the Chester Cremation Society.

Berlin-Paris Telephone.

BERLIN, Dec. 24.—On New Year's Day direct telephonic communication will be opened between Berlin and Paris.

ATTACKS THE LAND BOARD.

Fight Against Astoria Grant Not to be Abandoned—Statement of Platt's Son.

Frank H. Platt, son of Senator Thomas C. Platt, said yesterday that he had been informed that the city had abandoned the proceedings brought by the Corporation Counsel to defeat the grant made to the Astoria Light, Heat and Power Company by the State Land Board. The Corporation Counsel sought to enjoin the board from making the grant. Corporation Counsel Whalen made a statement last night in reference to the matter. He said:

"I have no intention whatever of abandoning the proceedings against the Astoria Company. On the contrary, I am going ahead with increased vigor and with the firm belief that the courts will prevent this robbery of the city by the State. On Dec. 9 it was known in Albany that I had written a letter to Gov. Roosevelt, asking him not to sign the grant until the question had been settled in the court, and it was also known there that papers would bring the matter into the courts were being prepared in my office. That was on a Saturday. The Land Board did not meet until the following Wednesday.

"Then, with full knowledge that the city wanted to test its rights in the courts, the Land Board hastened to sign the grant, in order to get ahead of the legal proceedings. It acted with unseemly haste. It took some time to prepare papers, and they were taken to Albany and served by a messenger from my office, who did not know of the plunge the Land Board had taken.

"The grant having been signed by the members of the Land Board, injunction proceedings became useless, because the Land Board could not be enjoined from performing an act that it already had performed. All that was needed to make the grant operative was the signature of the Governor, and under the Constitution the Governor is safe from injunction.

"I believe that the Land Board acted as it did intentionally, but we can get at the matter and protect the city as well as we ever could. The Astoria Company cannot get away with this grab. The injunction proceedings would have been brought in Albany County. We are preparing papers applying to the courts in this county to set aside the grant, and I am perfectly satisfied that my contention, that the City of New York cannot be robbed by the State, will be sustained. The papers probably will be served on Tuesday or Wednesday."

The California Senatorship.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 24.—Californians in town assert that great pressure is being brought to bear upon Gov. Gage to get him to call an extra session of the Legislature. The Governor is waiting for the Quay case to be disposed of, and it is well understood that if Quay is seated, he will immediately appoint a Senator, relying upon the Quay precedent to secure his admission. But Mr. Quay's chances are becoming slimmer and slimmer all the time and California Republicans are becoming importunate in their demands that the Governor shall not wait for the Pennsylvania man's case to be disposed of, but give the Legislature a chance to choose Senator White's successor.

CHRISTMAS EVE AT TRINITY.

Dr. Dix the Significance of the Incarnation.

The Christmas decorations were all in place yesterday in Trinity Church. Great bunches of greenery were massed about the pillars, and branches of fir trees decorated the windows, the whole interior presenting a beautiful appearance. There was only a small attendance at the morning service.

The Rev. Dr. Morgan Dix, the rector, preached from Galatians, iv., 4, "When the fullness of the time was come, God sent forth His Son, made of a woman, made under the law." The preacher said that the incarnation, present in the thoughts of every one at the present time, was the central point of all history, sacred and profane. In it was found a life which begot and sustained all other life in its most complex form. In it creation had attained to its full flower. The Christ Child was the answer to every vexing question of this age. When the divine entered the plane of humanity in the form of Jesus Christ He was the heir and outcome of no Jewish tradition, Grecian culture, or Roman imperiousness. He was the Son of God.

FUNCTION OF THE FESTIVAL.

Dr. Eckman Refers to the Human Side of the Lord.

The spirit of Christmastide pervaded the services at St. Paul's Methodist Episcopal Church in West End Avenue yesterday, when in the morning the Rev. Dr. George P. Eckman, the pastor, preached from a text in St. Luke, ii., 40-52. The interior of the edifice was tastefully decorated with intertwined Christmas greens, and special music by the organist and the quartet was rendered, A. L. Crawford singing "The Christ Child" as the solo accompanying the offertory. Bad weather, however, reduced the size of the congregation. Referring to the text, the pastor said, in begining:

"These words introduced to us the purely human aspects of Jesus, and this is the distinct function of the Christmas festival—to concentrate our minds upon our Lord and Master in this way. All the other church festivals leave us to the contemplation of the Divinity of Christ, and it is easier for us always to conceive of Jesus as the Son of God rather than to pronounce Him the Son of Man.

"The perfect humanity of Christ is absolutely indispensable to the true significance of the philosophy of the New Testament, and to think of Christ as the perfect man is one of the most necessary conceptions in Christian theology."

"Unless St. Matthew and St. Mark are unreliable witnesses," Dr. Eckman continued, "Christ did not know the hour of his return to earth. If you take refuge in the declaration that He knew, but did not wish to tell, then I must say to you with one of the old fathers, that He told what was untrue, and that He whom we call the Truth was guilty of a falsehood. To deny that His omniscience was disclosure to rob His self-renunciation of its supremest elements. Unless Christ was tempted as you and I there was no significance in His temptation, or else the trial was a fraud or merely spectacular. It is true He threw off these temptations with a mighty impulse, but it is none the less true that Christ was met with great temptations to which He had no lust within to respond, but which beat against his soul as they beat against ours.

"There is a difference between faultlessness and perfection, and Christ was not perfect until He had worn the crown of thorns, and bowing His head upon the Cross, said: 'It is finished.' We cry out with the centurion of old, 'Truly this Man was the Son of God!'"

Before the benediction the congregation rose and sang the Christmas carol, "It Came Upon a Midnight Clear This Glorious Song of Old."

Elaborate preparations have been made for the Sunday school celebration at St. Paul's, to be held in the chapel to-morrow evening, and it is rumored that Santa Claus will pay a visit to the school in person.

AT THE HOUSE OF INDUSTRY.

Children Sing Carols and Recite the Ten Commandments.

The 300 child inmates of the Five Points House of Industry, 155 Worth Street, gathered in the chapel of that institution yesterday afternoon and sang Christmas carols. They marched in singing a processional hymn. The larger ones, ranging from twelve to fourteen years, came first. The last were barely able to toddle to their seats. All remained standing, with faces toward the centre of the room until the organist began the Doxology, when in perfect time they faced the audience. Interspersed with the carols were some Scriptural responses. Each of the Ten Commandments was recited by a different child.

Superintendent Barnard announced that the House of Industry had had so many toys left over from its Christmas tree Friday that about a hundred children outside of the house had been made happy. A hundred deserving families had been provided with Christmas dinners, he added.

After the services visitors were permitted to see the children at their luncheon. At the tap of a bell all hands were folded, and a grace was said in chorus. Then at another bell tap the children, still standing, began to eat their bread and milk.

STAGE CHILDREN'S FETE.

Gifts, a Banquet, and Dancing in Theatre and Hall.

Four hundred "little children of the stage" made merry last night at Tony Pastor's Theatre and Tammany Hall by celebrating their annual Christmas festival. The company was made up of children who appear at various times during the season in the theatres.

The evening's gayety started with a vaudeville entertainment in Tony Pastor's Theatre, given entirely by children. This was followed by a cake walk of a dozen couples, which aroused great enthusiasm. Jap, Baby Charlie, and Baby Allen carried off the honors.

After the performance the children repaired to the basement of Tammany Hall, where covers were laid for 389. The distribution of the Christmas toys took place in the large hall, where three Christmas trees, besides the platform and stairs, were laden with gifts. The gifts represented $2,000 in subscriptions. J. Pierpont Morgan subscribed $100.

When the gifts were finally delivered the hall was cleared for dancing, which was kept up until a late hour. On the committee which had charge of the entertainment were Mrs. Louisa Eldridge, President; Mrs. E. L. Fernandez, Vice President; Mrs. Antonio Pastor, Mrs. Joseph Herbert, Miss Anna Robinson, Miss Kenyon Bishop, Miss Beatrice Moreland, Miss Mattie Ferguson, and Mrs. Edgar Norton.

ASIATICS LIKE CHRISTMAS.

Children of Chinese and Korean Ministers Greatly Enjoy the Day.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 24.—The children at the homes of the Asiatic diplomats will have just as merry a Christmas to-morrow as any Christian boy in America. The Asiatics have adopted the Santa Claus feature of Christmas with great enthusiasm, and that is about the only feature of the sacred holiday that interests the children.

The son of Wu Ting Fang, the Chinese Minister, always has his stocking full of toys, and when he gets up to-morrow he will have as much fun as any young Caucasian in Washington. This youngster always celebrates Christmas by presenting the President's wife with a huge bouquet. The twleve-year son of Chin Pon Ye, the Korean Minister, is another admirer of Santa Claus. This will be his last American Christmas, as Mr. Ye is slated for a European post next year.

Services in the Tombs Prison.

Christmas carols echoed through the corridors of the Tombs yesterday and the inmates numbering nearly 400, all joined in the services. The Rev. Dr. John J. Monroe conducted the services in the morning. In the afternoon Mrs. John A. Foster, with a company of girls from God's Providence Mission, visited the women's ward, containing over thirty women prisoners, and sang carols. Each inmate received a Christmas card and listened to a Christmas story, read by Mrs. Foster. At the same time the Rev. Dr. Proffett was holding a service in the men's ward, which was attended by 300 men and boys.

The Kaiser Makes Christmas Gifts.

BERLIN, Dec. 24.—This afternoon Emperor William left New Palace, following his custom of several years past, his pockets filled with gold and silver coins, and strolled through the parks at Potsdam and the poorer quarters, distributing Christmas gifts to the needy. This evening gifts were distributed among the employes in the royal factories, those of the higher rank receiving 100 marks each.

TASTE OF ALL SEASONS

Christmas Eve Weather Astonished Experts and All Citizens.

WINTER TRIUMPHED FINALLY

Velocity of the Wind and the Heavy Rainfall—Some Damage in the Suburbs.

There was a rather unusual mix-up in the weather conditions yesterday which rendered it exceedingly difficult for the weather man to keep his bearings. A taste of each of the seasons was experienced during the twenty-four hours, but Old Winter got the mastery finally and showed up good and strong at the end.

The city awoke in a downpour of rain, which shortly after daylight turned into a fine drizzle, as the east wind took a hand and made things interesting for churchgoers and other pedestrians. Sixty miles an hour was the speed, and it reversed umbrellas and played havoc with exterior Christmas decorations. Many signs throughout the city were torn from their fastenings and long sections of evergreen and cedar streamers, mingled with hats, were scattered about the streets. The rain increased in volume again toward noon and pedestrianism was rendered almost out of the question. The temperature, never very low, kept rising.

There came a change shortly after 1 o'clock as sudden, almost, as if some great, mysterious lever above had been shifted. The rain ceased absolutely. The big gray storm clouds were swept clear of the heavens and the sun shown down as on a day in April. The wind moderated to thirty-six miles within half an hour, and the temperature seized upon the occasion to make an upward spurt. At 3 o'clock the mercury stood at 55 degrees, making the pedestrians in heavy mackintoshes decidedly uncomfortable. It seemed as if Summer were coming back to spend Christmas in New York. Then, with never a change in the deep blue sky and the rays of the sun still undiminished, it began to grow colder. The undimmed, it began to grow colder. The kept up the thirty-six-mile gait. People with overcoats and mackintoshes on their arms began to put them on. Slowly the mercury gave way, and the thermometer's spirits sank by degrees, until at 10 o'clock last night it registered 36 degrees and was "on the run" downward.

The weather man last night said he wouldn't be responsible for the weather at present.

The heavy rains yesterday caused a cave-in of a section of the White Plains Road, about 250 feet, between Elizabeth and Juliana Streets. The Mount Vernon branch of the Union Railway, which passes by the spot where the cave-in occurred, was made unsafe and the passengers had to be transferred around the dangerous portion. This was a most disagreeable task as the mud was almost to one's shoetops. The Union Railway officials put gangs to work and expect to have their line repaired for this morning's traffic.

DAMAGE ON STATEN ISLAND.

Wind Uproots a House—Yacht Pounded to Pieces on the Rocks.

The storm of yesterday morning was very severely felt along the shores of Staten Island, and many small craft were washed ashore and beached. At Stapleton several large schooners dragged their anchors, and only the good management of the crews saved them from going ashore. The sloop yacht Lillie, owned by A. Fuchslocher of the Ocean Yacht Club, was washed ashore and pounded to pieces on the rocks. The tide was unusually high at Tompkinsville and Clifton, where the waves broke over the railroad embankment.

The storm reached its height about 11 o'clock, and the wind increased in velocity to about forty miles an hour. A large brick building on Griffen Street, Tompkinsville, owned by William Butler Duncan, was unroofed about 11 o'clock and the roof carried across the street. The building is two stories high and stands near the bay. The wind struck the cornice in the rear of the house and tore the tin roofing and part of the planking from the building and carried it straight up into the air, over the telephone and electric light wires, and deposited it in the road sixty feet away.

When the building was unroofed, the chimney fell and struck the kitchen of the residence of Richard Keyes, adjoining, and completely wrecked it. Miss Mamie Keyes was sitting in the dining room and had a narrow escape from injury. The damage to the Duncan building amounts to about $1,000, and Mr. Keyes places his damage at about $200. The two upper floors of the Duncan building are occupied by four families, and the lower floor by the firm of McKenzie & O'Neil, fur dealers.

THE FINANCIAL MARKETS

Speculators on both sides of the market "evened up" their contracts in so far as they could toward the end of last week, neither bull nor bear deeming it prudent to have large one-sided commitments over a holiday extending from Saturday noon to Tuesday morning—with so many market-making events possible of development. The trader on the short side could foresee sharp advances if an important British victory were to come in South Africa, and the speculative buyer of long stocks could understand what might be involved were there to be yet another British reverse. And, of course, so many and complex are influences having effective bearing in financial affairs both here and abroad that no ordinary security market trader wants to challenge them with the Stock Exchange closed.

Though Wall Street is much depressed over gruesome Christmas records, they who really do more than pay attention to superficial showings can find scant reason for such hopelessness as is in many quarters insisted upon. Taking top notch prices of the year for comparison, and Christmas figures disclose terrific shrinkage, hundreds on hundreds of millions of dollars of market value having vanished. But this takes into consideration a boom overdone, a bulge that was transient. It does not rate of account, as should be, the potent and continuing fact that outside of Wall Street American business conditions are good beyond precedent; that industrially and commercially there has not been a month during the year without extraordinary progress. The very gold exports which Wall Street chooses to lament stand as thoroughgoing evidence of National prosperity, of National financial independence—just so much testimony to the expanding fact that the United States is become the creditor nation of the world.

Even taking Christmas market values—depressed as they are—they make no such sad exhibit as forlorn Wall Street estimates suggest. The terrific shrinkage in Stock Exchange quotations from a boom's top notch is not a shrinkage from what a year ago were regarded in Wall Street as normal values. In fact, as many stocks show advances from Christmas, 1898, to Christmas, 1899, as in the same period showed declines. And last Christmas sane men were finding reasons in abundance for confidence and satisfaction, even for enthusiasm.

On a broad business basis Wall Street's prospects now are incomparably better and brighter than a year ago, for good times hoped for then are good times now realized.

HOPEFUL FOR THE FUTURE.

Views taken by representative Stock Exchange brokers of the present situation and of the outlook for the future are interesting and suggestive.

A Time for Coolness.

John H. Davis says: "It is a time for coolness and not for panic; for prudence and not fear. Circumstances have caused a stringency in all the international money centres. The Transvaal war is the chief inciting cause at European points, and our own market is affected to a greater degree than ever before by foreign influences by reason of our growing importance in finance and trade. At the same time, there is an exceptional demand for money here to carry on the present unparalleled activity in our manufactures. This is a far more healthy condition than to have the great accumulation of idle funds which marked the recent years of trade depression. Money, like every other productive factor, is expected to earn its living. With a lack of buying power in the community, and a consequent lack of work, laborers suffer. With depressed industries money is idle and can be had at abnormally low rates. Under our present industrial conditions a vastly increased amount of money is wanted to pay for raw materials, for labor, and for transportation throughout the country, and this fact is one for congratulation and not apprehension.

"While the early effects of the South African war are disturbing to our market, the later effect will be largely to augment American industries. A large part of the productive bone and sinew of Great Britain is being withdrawn from her mines, her mills, and her farms. This will decrease her production and increase the demands for our breadstuffs, our cotton goods, and our iron and steel output.

"The stringency, not only here but abroad, is largely local to the leading financial centres. It is especially so in this country. The consolidation process of our leading industries has transferred the financiering of the individual concerns from their various localities to New York. This process makes an especial demand here, but, at the same time, relieves the interior cities from the burdens they have heretofore borne. The result is that times are easy and money plenty in the West and South, even when it is almost unobtainable in Wall Street. There has never been a time in our history when the country at large was so comfortable, contented, and prosperous.

"Under such circumstances as these, and especially when prices have fallen from a speculative to an extra conservative basis, I am strong in the opinion that purchases of standard railway securities, and of the stocks of many leading industrials, may be made with a degree of confidence that has not been warranted for years."

Future Very Promising.

J. S. Bache says: "The enforced liquidation of accounts, which has been, in my opinion, very thorough, leaves the financial atmosphere, so far as Wall Street is concerned, very clear and the future very promising. It is needless to go into the causes which led to the severe shaking up which we have had. There is no doubt that the Transvaal war is the main one, as without the severe flurry in the money capitals of Europe we should never have had the stringency which the past week has witnessed. No great improvement in values will be seen here until the Transvaal war is over; as while it lasts the financial requirements of the British Government alone will be sufficient to keep the London market stirred up, and London affects the markets of the world. The situation in Berlin is really more strained than in London. In Germany business has been very large; the commercial world is extending, and the banks' position is by no means strong enough to stand any great strain without running rates very high. It is therefore possible that the demands on the banking houses here may become acute, and the large withdrawal of capital from this side may disturb values at any time. Such withdrawal cannot, however, precipitate anything like a panic, as the general liquidation has been too complete for that. As it is, I do not look for any great improvement in values or any increase in speculation until this danger is removed, and it can only be removed by the settlement of the Transvaal war. Economic conditions here continue good, and while the enthusiasm of the mercantile world may have been somewhat checked by the sudden flurry of money, I think that unless the situation abroad becomes much more serious, banking capital here will prove amply sufficient for mercantile requirements, and in the long run the check to expansion may prove of service generally, as it will prevent overtrading and the ultimate collapse which always follows such.

"It is unfortunate that the severe shrinkage in values and consequent heavy losses have occurred at this, the holiday season of the year, as it no doubt curtailed Christmas shopping and marred the season for retail houses which have large stocks on their shelves; but I doubt that any of our merchants have overstocked or will need to take any losses on merchandise, and hence I believe that the situation will slowly but surely right itself and business continue its course uninterruptedly, and I anticipate a good season, all told. The chartering by the British Government of the larger ships of the transatlantic companies, and the likelihood that the remaining boats of the White Star and Cunard Lines may be taken at any moment, ought materially to curtail the exodus of American visitors to Europe during the coming season, and this is a beneficial development rather than otherwise, as it will keep money in this country which would otherwise be expended abroad.

"I look for a gradual improvement in stock market values after the turn of the year, which will be reflected by developments in the Transvaal and in the foreign money markets, and a marked enhancement in values may be looked for just as soon as the Transvaal difficulty has reached a solution, although I will not attempt to predict when that will be."

Looks Forward Hopefully to 1900.

Theodore H. Price—It is an old tradition in Wall Street that the month of December rarely passes without a panic. It is claimed that December, 1898, was the first time in a great many years that Wall Street had escaped a convulsion more or less acute. There may be a logical reason back of this superstition, and if so, the reason is the necessity under which nearly all firms and corporations find themselves of making up statements of their business at the end of the year, which generally brings them into an attitude of sober reckoning and forces them to attempt by liquidation to undo whatever has been injudiciously done during the previous months of the year. However this may be, Wall Street will for some time retain a bitter recollection of the Venezuelan Christmas that it had in December, 1895, and the panic of December, 1899.

After a panic there are almost always two stages that develop in succession. The first is the reaction which follows the acute panic, and the next is a period of spotted and slow liquidation which succeeds the reaction. Into this latter period we appear now to have entered. How long it will continue is a question, but it does not seem to me that it can continue very long. Intrinsically, the business situation—at least the commercial side of it—is sound. Nearly all corporations, both railroad and industrial, are making large money. The Finance bill, which has passed the House, means an addition to our currency that few people appreciate. It makes possible the establishment of a great many new banks and a total increase in the circulating medium of over $500,000,000. The recent trouble has developed entirely as a result of the fact that, with the Government absorption of money, the currency of the country was insufficient to meet the demands of its trade; or to put it in the words of a financial magnate who enjoys an occasional game of poker: "So many people were playing that there were not chips enough to go around."

Abroad the situation cannot long remain as strained as it is at present. It is impossible for me to believe that the English arms can long be unsuccessful in the Transvaal. We have therefore to look forward in my opinion to a brief period of further liquidation, the effect of which upon prices will probably be in a great measure offset by the purchases of those canny individuals who keep their money for such moments as these, and who are buying stocks now that are undoubtedly cheap and will pay them large profits later on, and after that to a revival of speculation and an enhancement of values, that it seems to me must certainly follow the passage of the Finance bill by the Senate and a settlement satisfactory to Great Britain of the war she is now engaged in with the Boers.

I therefore look forward to the year 1900 with hopefulness and confidence, and believe that the energies and industry of the American people will not long be unrewarded by prosperity and increasing wealth. So far as the stock market is concerned, prosperity and increased wealth are synonymous with higher prices.

The Worst Is Over.

F. M. Dick: "The past week in Wall Street has been trying to the country, but has proved the strength and sound business principles that have been pursued in financial circles. That the tremendous drops and enormous liquidation could have been accomplished with so few failures would not have been believed. In time of panic and depression stocks look dangerous to buy, but in reality the reverse is true. The underlying business conditions of the country are good, we are richer than ever before, and our railroads are earning more money. We cannot expect after this knock-out blow, to have an immediate bull market, but it seems to me that the worst is over, and for the first time in two years bargains are to be had."

Overtrading and Overenthusiasm.

Henry Clews: "The recent depression in prices has been all a matter of liquidation. We had too much trading, and there was overenthusiasm inspired by the general prosperity of the country. Prices have now got down to their true value, to their investment value. Now is the time to come down to the Street with money and take securities away. It must be remembered that, though prices are down, the railroads and manufacturers are doing a better business than ever, and are earning more money. The present dividends on the railroads are assured for the next year, and in some cases higher dividends will be paid; while some other at present non-dividend roads will be put on a dividend-paying basis."

Good Chances for Investment.

Daniel O'Dell: "Things are bad all over the world. The financial condition is unsettled, and we do not know how far we are loaded up in industrials. We are selling good things to protect the industrials. When this wave of liquidation which is sweeping over us is past, then we will be all right. The one thing sure is that the present time presents an excellent opportunity for investment purposes. Prices on some first-class securities, which yield and will continue to yield good dividends, are down very low. And as a matter of fact, this already has been recognized, as recent purchases by moneyed men who have taken the securities off the Street have shown."

MORE EQUIPMENT.

Among the orders for new equipment placed by the various railroads during the past week are:

Chesapeake and Ohio, 100 coke cars; Minneapolis, St. Paul and Sault Ste. Marie, 250 coke cars; Oregon Railway and Navigation Company and Oregon Short Line, 35 passenger cars and 300 stock cars; Southern Railway, 600 cars; Mobile and Ohio, 100 box cars; Central Railroad of New Jersey, 25 freight engines; Chicago and Eastern Illinois, 5 locomotives; New York, Chicago and St. Louis, 5 engines; Intercolonial way of Canada, 275 cars; Wisconsin 100 freight cars.

MONEY SITUATION IN GERMA...

BERLIN, Dec. 24.—The advance in the Reichsbank rate to 7 per cent. had a great effect upon the security of the market. Values declined only moderately. There was nothing in the nature of a panic, as occurred in New York and London. Notwithstanding the fact that the advance in London exchange continued, reaching yesterday 4 pfennigs above the gold point, gold exports have hitherto been but moderate. The Berlin joint stock banks are doing all in their power to prevent exports.

Persons in the highest banking circles said to-day that the continued rise in London exchange is due to the fact that New York has sent large amounts of three months' money bills here for discount, taking in return London exchange. A further cause assigned is the heavy purchases of American railway securities by Germany, payment for which is now due in London. These shares are chiefly Canadian and Northern Pacific.

Private discount is declining. Call money is rising. The outlook for business remains excellent, excepting that of dear money. It is impossible to raise money on mortgages, owing to the decline in house building, which is expected eventually to react upon the iron trade.

Domestic Exchange National Bank.

The Domestic Exchange National Bank of New York, which was organized on Nov. 14, will open for business to-morrow at its temporary quarters, 11-13 Maiden Lane. On May 1 it will remove to the new building, 275 Broadway, corner of Chambers Street. The new bank will have as its specialty the collection of out-of-town checks for other banks and for large mercantile firms. The officers of the bank are: President, Robert D. Kent; Vice President, William Kent; Cashier, Charles H. Spencer. The Directors are William P. Aldrich, Samuel S. Bradley, Thomas H. Cullen, Ethan Allen Doty, Horace W. Fish, Robert D. Kent, William Kent, Edward S. Peck, and Charles D. Spencer. The bank has already completed arrangements with about six hundred out-of-town banks, from Maine to California, to act as its correspondents. The greater number of these banks are within a radius of 400 miles of New York City.

Will Open a Large Coal Shaft.

SHAMOKIN, Penn., Dec. 24.—The Union Coal Company officials at this place have announced that work on the Scott shaft, which was postponed on account of the coal trade depression two years ago, will be resumed in a few weeks, and that when in operation 1,500 men and boys will be given employment. It is expected the coal veins will last fifty years, and that the shipments every working day will be about 3,000 tons. A modern breaker will be erected at the mine.

FIFTH AVENUE ASYLUM SOLD.

Catholic Board of Managers Closes Negotiations with a Syndicate—The Consideration $2,050,000.

The negotiations for the purchase of the Roman Catholic Orphan Asylum property in Fifth Avenue by a syndicate represented by George R. Sheldon, and Charles T. Barney, were definitely closed yesterday afternoon, when, at a special meeting of the Board of Managers of the asylum, the details of the contract were approved. The officers of the board were directed to affix their signatures and the seal of the corporation to the necessary papers some time this week.

The property involved lies between Fifty-first and Fifty-second Streets, with a frontage of 200 feet 10 inches on Fifth Avenue. It has a depth of 345 feet. The Madison Avenue frontage, with a depth of 75 feet, is retained by the orphan asylum authorities for a young men's seminary. The consideration named in the contract is $2,050,000. Among those persons said to be associated with Messrs. Sheldon and Barney in the purchase of the property are William F. Havemeyer, John A. McCall, and Edward N. Gibbs. The Union Club has voted to purchase the corner at Fifth Avenue and Fifty-first Street. It is understood that private residences will be erected on the remaining lots.

THE BOSTON BANK FAILURE.

Receiver Wing Explains ex-President Cole's Transactions with the Globe National.

BOSTON, Dec. 24.—National Bank Examiner D. G. Wing, who was last week appointed temporary receiver of the Globe National Bank, gave out a statement tonight in which he says that in the course of his regular examination of the bank's affairs Sept. 9, he found $600,000 of Globe Bank checks outstanding, which did not appear upon the books. President Charles H. Cole admitted this to be his personal loan. Feeling that to close the bank at that time would cause dire results, Mr. Bigelow, the only Director within reach; Mr. Cole, and Mr. Wing, went to Washington and laid the matter before Controller Dawes. Mr. Wing then says:

"Mr. Bigelow agreed to personally guarantee that Cole's shortage should be made good to the bank at once, Cole having turned over certain securities to him, and Messrs. Clark and Coolidge assisting in guaranteeing Mr. Bigelow.

"The Controller of the Currency directed that Mr. Cole should resign at once as President, that the whole matter should be laid before the Directors, and that I should at the proper time report the facts to the District Attorney. On the following Monday Coolidge and Clark gave Cole $80,000. Cole added $120,000 of his own money, and repaid $200,000 of the $600,000. The balance, $400,000, was repaid in three days by the sale of Cole's securities, a part being bought by Coolidge and Clark through their respective brokers.

"The bank's assets were thus bettered by $600,000 in cash. About a month later the facts, so far as known, were laid before the full Board of Directors, and further investigation showed that there were $200,000 more of checks outstanding not on the books, and that the indebtedness of the Lovell Arms Company was really much in excess of the amount shown by the books, and that Mr. Cole was himself personally the holder of nearly $500,000 of the Lovell paper. There was also found an apparent overdraft of the Squires amounting to $525,000, in addition to their regular loan, which itself was in excess of the $100,000 limit.

"Mr. Cole admitted his responsibility for this overdraft, and turned over to the bank his own securities, including the Lovell paper owned by him, to secure the entire indebtedness, for which he admitted responsibility. This amounted to nearly $1,000,000 and the securities turned over, at their then market value, were considerably in excess of this amount. The six Directors and Messrs. Coolidge and Clark then entered into a written guarantee that these securities should be sufficient to make good the Cole indebtedness.

"The bank's assets are better off to-day by about $700,000 cash, over $1,000,000 of notes and securities, and the personal guarantee of these gentlemen, than they were at the time it brought the condition of affairs to the attention of the Controller.

"The connection of Cole with the so-called copper interests was not the cause of the Globe National Bank's failure, but his connection with these companies had provided him with securities amounting in the aggregate at the then market prices to nearly $1,500,000. These securities were not in the bank when I examined it, but were put up later by Mr. Cole to secure his indebtedness.

"I make this statement at this time to correct the various rumors now in circulation as to the failure of the Globe Bank. In justice to Mr. Bigelow, it should be stated that, as on Sept. 9, he was the largest individual depositor in the bank; he also was the largest when the bank closed its doors."

LOVING CUP FOR DR. WEBB.

BURLINGTON, Vt., Dec. 24.—Shelburne House, the home of Dr. and Mrs. W. S. Webb, was the scene of a pleasant event on Saturday evening when eighteen well-known railroad officials, in behalf of the 4,000 employes of the Wagner Palace Car Company, presented to Dr. Webb, who is President of the corporation, a magnificent loving cup. The cup is made of solid silver, lined with gold, and is twenty inches high. It is elaborately ornamented with figures in relief representing the development of the palace car service and bears the following inscription:

"Dr. William Seward Webb, from the four thousand employes of the Wagner Palace Car Company upon his retirement from the Presidency December 31, 1899."

University Chapel Still Undecided.

Chancellor MacCracken preached in the Auditorium of the New York University yesterday morning. He announced that no definite decision had been arrived at as yet in regard to the denomination of the university chapel, as the votes of the members had not all been handed in. The congregation is voting on the question of adopting either the Presbyterian or Collegiate Reformed discipline.

DEAF-MUTES AT CHURCH.

The twenty-seventh anniversary of the Church Mission to Deaf-Mutes was celebrated last night at St. Matthew's Protestant Episcopal Church. The usual form of evening prayer was conducted by the Rev. Dr. Thomas Gallaudet and the Rev. Dr. John Chamberlain, respectively General Manager and Assistant General Manager of the mission. While one read the service the other translated it into sign language for the benefit of the deaf-mutes who occupied the front pews.

Dr. Gallaudet read a report reviewing the work of the Church Mission since its foundation in 1872. The pioneer of church work among deaf-mutes throughout the United States, its efforts since the first few years have been confined to the dioceses of New York, Long Island, and Connecticut. In addition to its church work, the society now maintains a home for aged and infirm deaf-mutes on a farm of 156 acres between New Hamburg and Poughkeepsie. In concluding his report Dr. Gallaudet appealed for funds to continue and enlarge this charity.

John D. Crimmins's Gift.

The annual Christmas dinner given to the inmates of the Home for the Aged of The Little Sisters of the Poor by John D. Crimmins will be served at noon to-day at the Home, 213 East Seventieth Street. Arrangements have been made to take a flashlight photograph of the 400 or more seated at the tables.

Gifts for Widows and Orphans.

The hearts of several hundred poor children and their widowed mothers were made happy, yesterday afternoon, at the mother house of the Immaculate Conception Day Nurseries, at 117 Sands Street, Brooklyn. The children gave a Christmas cantata and at its conclusion each child was presented with a suit of clothes, shoes, and a good supply of toys, candies, oranges and stockings. When the presents had been distributed to the children, each mother was presented with a basket containing a turkey and other eatables, suitable for a Christmas dinner. These provisions were donated by the merchants in Wallabout Market.

Dr. Parkhurst Says Its Use Is False to Christ's Teachings.

DECLARES BIBLE IS ADEQUATE

When He Concludes It Is Not Without Gunpowder's Aid He Will No Longer Be a Preacher of the Gospel.

The Rev. Dr. Charles H. Parkhurst, in the course of his Christmas sermon yesterday morning, referred to the war in the Transvaal and the troubles in the Philippines. He said, in part: "Two nations recognized as standing in the van of Christian civilization are to-day in the thick of carnal warfare, one attempting to subdue a promiscuous horde of heathen and the other to destroy the independence of what purports to be a nation of Christians. Now in the brief reference that I am going to make to this matter I shall take particular pains to hold myself inside the province that belongs to me as a preacher of the Gospel, as a man, I mean, whose duty is to declare the mind and spirit of Jesus Christ.

"I should judge that the conviction rather widely prevails that as a people we shall make money out of the Philippines, and there is no doubt that Great Britain anticipates a bonanza in South Africa. But all of that is for you to decide upon, not for the pulpit. Then, too, it is claimed—rather generally, I should judge—to be for the interest of the Filipinos—that is, for those of them who survive—to be subjugated to our authority rather than to be left to be preyed upon by themselves or by other nations. And as for Great Britain, there are probably very few of English blood who do not consider that the overthrow of those two Dutch republics is indispensable to the diffusion of civilization.

"Great Britain has conquered the East Indians and has made a good thing of it for herself and apparently for them, and she has done it with her guns. All those things you are as perfectly in a situation to judge of as I am, and some of you presumably understand the intricacies of that whole situation more thoroughly than I. I am willing that you should, and I am prompt to conceive that you do.

"But when all those matters are put one side and we come on to the ground that is distinctly my province as a representative of Jesus Christ, then I do not yield to you; and I am going to say to you, without any 'buts' or 'wheresoevers,' that to promote civilization by the use of swords and artillery is false to the word, example, and life of Jesus Christ and of all his apostles and alien to the entire genus of Christianity.

"Thousands of ministers have practically been confessing to the world these last twelve months that Christ's way of saving the world will not work and that when Paul said that the weapons of our warfare are not carnal he stated a principle that he would have recanted if he had lived longer and known more. Perhaps they are right; at least I am not here to say they are not right. I should be sorry to have to conclude that the Gospel is inadequate without gunpowder to support it, and when I do conclude that I shall stop calling myself a preacher of the Gospel."

THE CURSE OF MILITARISM.

Madison C. Peters Sees "War on Earth, Ill-Will Toward Men."

"The Guns of the Gospel" was the subject of a sermon preached by the Rev. Dr. Madison C. Peters at the Bloomingdale Reformed Church last night. Dr. Peters said the history of the Christian world since the proclamation of "Peace on earth, good-will toward men," has been one in strange contrast to that utterance. It has been one of almost continuous bloodshed.

Great Britain alone in the last eight hundred years had spent the greater portion of seven hundred years at war. She has, it is true, he said, carried the Bible to heathen lands. But when she was through the heathen had the Bible and Great Britain had his lands.

"It is high time for the Christian world to learn that truth must not be forever on the scaffold and wrong upon the throne," he said. "Never has there been such a century of progress as the one just closing. But its one great curse and largely a growth of this century has been militarism.

"Russia has two and a half millions of her most able-bodied men under arms. The Dreyfus trial proved that it is the army that is the life of France and it is rotten beyond any hope of redemption. Great Britain, despite her tremendous power, in 1896 paid $91,000,000 for her navy; in 1897, $120,000,000; in 1898, $127,750,000. Germany paid $95,000,000 for her army in 1895, and it now costs her double that sum.

"Russia and Japan are adding great forces to their arms, and it looks as if the proclamation of 'Peace on earth, good-will toward men,' has been amended to read, 'War on earth, ill-will toward men.'

"The nations ought to organize a grand jury that will sit in judgment upon the first nation that goes to war or prepares for combat."

DR. VAN DYKE ON PEACE.

Refers in a Prayer to Mr. Moody and Announces Date of His Last Sermon.

Dr. Henry Van Dyke preached yesterday morning at the Brick Presbyterian Church, Thirty-seventh Street and Fifth Avenue, taking for his text the words, "And on earth, peace," from the Gospel of St. Luke. "Nineteen hundred years have passed," said Dr. Van Dyke, "since these words were spoken, and still the world is not at peace.

"The nineteenth century was ushered in to the clash of swords crossed in deadly combat, the reverberation of death-dealing cannon, the anguished cry of men wounded unto death. Since then a hundred years have passed and still nations are warring against nations.

"The dawn of the twentieth century reveals the same awful sights of war and carnage as did the dawn of the nineteenth. Yet, despite the strife and the turmoil caused by war, there is peace to be found on earth by those who seek it. Peace of heart, peace of mind, spiritual peace—the peace of being divinely controlled and divinely disciplined."

In conclusion Dr. Van Dyke said that it is often remarked that people are losing interest in Christmas, that the spirit of Christmas is dying out. He said that if this is true it is because the world is striving to celebrate Christmas without Christ. He expressed the hope that the day would regain its true significance, that "the memory of the manger in Bethlehem" would in the future permeate and influence its celebration.

Dr. Van Dyke made a reference in a prayer to the late Mr. Moody.

He announced that he would preach his last sermon at the Brick Church, as its pastor, on Jan. 7. Dr. Babcock will take charge of the church and preach his first sermon as pastor on Jan. 14.

MIXED MARRIAGES IN 1900.

Decree Issued at Rome Suspends Bishops' Power of Dispensation.

A circular letter, just transmitted by Archbishop Corrigan to the clergy of the diocese, announces that the Catholic authorities in Rome have issued a decree which, it is said, will make difficult the marriage of a Catholic and a Protestant by a priest during the year 1900. Such marriages in the Catholic Church are allowed only by dispensation of the Bishops, and for the holy year this power of dispensation is suspended.

Archbishop Corrigan, in the circular to his clergy, says the Pope suspends special faculties to ordinaries of dioceses, "so that, at this season particularly, Rome should be the great fountain of mercy and spiritual favors for the Catholics of the entire world." This is understood in Catholic circles to mean that only by applying direct to Rome shall dispensations be granted during the year 1900.

FOOTBALL AND CHRISTIANITY.

Yale and Princeton Men Speak at the West Side Y. M. C. A.

Three members of the 1899 football teams of Yale and Princeton addressed a meeting of men at the West Side Young Men's Christian Association, 318 West Fifty-seventh Street, yesterday afternoon. They were Howard Richards, left half back of the Yale team: H. R. Reiter, right half back of the Princeton team, and S. G. Craig, guard of the Princeton eleven.

Mr. Richards told of the work done by the Young Men's Christian Association in New Haven and in Yale University. He said that in the centre of the campus stood Dwight Hall, in which was the religious life of the institution. In addressing the audience he frequently made use of the college term of comradeship, 'fellows.'

Mr. Reiter said that in Princeton there was a prevalent study of philosophy, and that Princeton always could boast of her professors, for the reason that through this study they endeavored to bring out strongly the imminence of God. "If we can accept God in other ways," the speaker continued, "we can accept him on the football field. There's courage in it, and self-reliance in it. It helps to trample down the animal in us, and it drives out of existence the 'quitter.' If any of you saw that game between Yale and Princeton, you know there were no 'quitters' on either side; and it was a clean game and one of which both sides could well be proud."

When Mr. Craig was introduced he prefaced his remarks by saying: "It would be a great deal easier for me to line up on the football field than to line up here on this platform before you fellows. I was told it was my duty to come, however, and if I can perform any of the duty I owe to Christ in this way, I am glad to have the opportunity." Mr. Craig then told of some of his personal difficulties in accepting the Christian faith, and explained the method by which he finally mastered them.

To Wait on Dr. Purves Wednesday.

Immediately after the services in the morning yesterday, at the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian Church, the Board of Trustees, the Elders, and others constituting the General Committee met and the call to the Rev. Dr. George T. Purves of Princeton was signed. Arrangements were also made for the special committee appointed last Wednesday night to call on Dr. Purves at Princeton next Wednesday and officially present to him the call.

J. Rene Vilatte Not in Roman Church.

News has been received in this city from Rome that J. Rene Vilatte, head of the sect of Old Catholics in this country, who a year ago announced his submission to the Roman Catholic Church, has had a disagreement with the authorities in Rome, and, as a result, has not become a Roman Catholic. Vilatte claimed to be an Archbishop of the Old Catholic rite, but it seems the Roman Catholic authorities would not recognize him as such. The Old Catholics, whose head Vilatte was in America, are seceders from the Roman Catholic Church who do not accept the decrees of the Vatican Council of 1870, including the doctrine of the infallibility of the Pope.

THE FALL OF SANTIAGO.

To be Reproduced at the Seventy-first Regiment Armory.

Elaborate preparations are being made for the reproduction of the bombardment and fall of Santiago at the Seventy-first Regiment Armory, next Thursday, Friday, and Saturday evenings for the benefit of the regiment. There will be earthquakes, trenches, army mule trains, signaling, assaults, and all the features of life around a beleaguered city.

The guns will be furnished by the Second Battery, Major David Wilson, and will be mounted on the positions held by the Spaniards and Americans. The Spanish lines will be at the east end of the armory, and the American lines at the west end. Between them will be the famous surrender tree, under which men of the Seventy-first Regiment will impersonate the chief characters in the surrender scene. Fifty thousand rounds of ammunition will be consumed in the reproduction of the siege. After each evening's spectacle there will be dancing.

DIED IN A BATH TUB.

Heart Disease Kills Continental Tobacco Company Employe.

Frederick H. Harris, twenty years old, died of heart disease while taking a bath at his boarding house, 20 West One Hundred and Fourth Street, yesterday morning. The bathroom had been locked for an unusually long time, and upon the door being forced by a servant Harris's body was discovered face down in the tub, the head being completely submerged.

One of the young man's friends said he had been ill for some days, and had complained of heart trouble. He was an employe of the Continental Tobacco Company, and came to this city several months ago from North Carolina.

AMONG THE UNCLAIMED DEAD.

Body of Contractor Michael Gilligan of Easton in the Morgue.

Michael Gilligan, forty-five years old, believed to be a wealthy contractor of Easton, Penn., died from nephritis in Bellevue Hospital on Saturday, and his body was transferred to the Morgue. It lies with the unclaimed dead. Gilligan was brought to the hospital from the Union Market Police Station on Dec. 16. He gave Broadway and Thirty-first Street as his place of residence. He said that James Smith of South Easton, Penn., was his nearest friend, and asked that he be notified if he grew worse. The Bellevue authorities have telegraphed to James Smith.

Brooklyn Hebrew Charity Ball.

At the annual meeting of the Hebrew Orphan Asylum of Brooklyn, held in the asylum building, in Ralph Avenue, between Dean and Pacific Streets, yesterday afternoon, Moses May was re-elected President of the institution. The auction sale of boxes for the twentieth annual charity ball of the asylum, which will be held in the Academy of Music, Montague Street, on Jan. 24, was held prior to the meeting. Several thousand dollars were realized by the sale of the boxes and tickets. The annual entertainment and ball given in aid of the destitute Hebrews of the Eastern District was held last evening in Arion Hall. The event was given under the auspices of the Ladies' Hebrew Benevolent Society.

ON JEW AND CHRISTIAN

Dr. Silverman Demands Full Measure of Justice for Both.

THEIR WORK FOR THE WORLD

Mankind the Better for Christianity, but Its Greatest Doctrines First Exemplified in Judaism.

"Justice to the Christian and the Jew" was the subject of a lecture delivered yesterday morning by the Rev. Dr. Silverman in Temple Emanu-El, at Fifth Avenue and Forty-third Street.

The lecturer drew a contrast between the teachings of Christianity and what he alleged to be the actual practice of Christian nations and people, even in the nineteenth century, and remarked that there must be wrong somewhere. But, nevertheless, he maintained that the world is much better than it would have been without Christianity, and held that Christianity owes its best doctrines to Judaism, of which, he said, it is an outgrowth.

He called attention to the Gospel of love and peace and good-will that is now being preached in all Christian churches at Christmastide, and then pointed to the Anglo-Boer war, in which, he declared, all these doctrines seem to be thrown to the winds.

"It is not for us to criticise either side," he said, "and we must be diplomatic and maintain a neutral attitude toward England.

"However, there must be something wrong, if while the Christmas bells ring out the tidings of God's love to mankind and while the churches proclaim peace the loud drum is heard calling to war, and people bear hatred to each other. The pulpits annually and weekly preach the doctrine of love and justice, while reports of injustice and corruption and vice come in from everywhere. The injustice against the Jews in France has not yet been righted, and in Bohemia a Jew was condemned to the gallows on the old false charge of using the blood of a Christian child. In Slavic countries such charges have often been followed by pillages of the Jewish quarters. In spite of all the preaching in this country we make our land blush for shame by torturing poor negroes to death by fire. Notwithstanding the nineteenth century Christianity and the preaching of the doctrine of love and righteousness by other religions, these evils exist under the sanction or under the eye of the churches without any protest.

"But we must be just to Christianity, and I rejoice that we have Christmas to protest against the horrors of the nineteenth century. Let the bells ring louder and drown the alarm drums in the war in the distant Continent. We must discriminate between the true and the false. Many entered the Church under the guise of conversion, but really to further their own selfish purposes. They are loud in proclamation of the faith, and torture and kill dissenters and unbelievers, or force them to make unwilling confession of faith. There always were hypocrites in the Church who used it for revenue and self aggrandizement. There are those men who teach that the end justified the means, who persecuted and tortured men by the auto da fe and thumbscrews. These men were either madmen guided by hallucination, or were diabolical fiends masquerading under the guise of followers of the Church. But we cannot believe that they were true Christians. A true Christian is one who loves his fellowmen and lives a pure and simple life; one who loves God and religion, but who loves his fellow man better than he does his religion, and who will never cause pain and torture to the people of the world. The true Christian is tolerant, and believes that all men are God's children.

"The Christians of this type never burnt nor persecuted those of a different religion. It was these men who were often themselves persecuted. We must thank God for this kind of Christianity, for though evil still exists, it has received a foothold check, and if it were not for Christianity barbarism and cannibalism might still be stalking through the streets."

The speaker called attention to the great vices and crimes that existed in ancient Greece and Rome, to the gladiatorial contests and other brutal pastimes, to slavery and poligamy which Christianity checked and finally abolished.

Then the speaker demanded justice for the Jew. The Jews, he said, did not ask for the flattery that many of them were learned, were poets and philanthropists. They demanded the acknowledgment of the truth, that Christianity was only "Judaism plus Jesus." Christianity was at first a sect of Judaism, and blossomed and flourished. The apostles made Judaism palatable to the heathen. The beautiful ceremonies of Judaism were attractive to the old Romans, and many of the Roman women, even those of royal families, became converts to Judaism. These facts were proved by Philo, by the New Testament, by Greek and Roman writings, and by the Talmud. The doctrine of the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man was originally Jewish. The Jews claimed that as Christianity was necessary for the progress of to-day, so Judaism was necessary for the creation and establishment of Christianity. There was room for both religions. At no time was there one religion dominant in the world, and there never will be on account of the complexity of the human mind and its variable conceptions of God.

The Jews demanded that Christianity should teach the world what it owes to Judaism, that persecution is blasphemy against God, and that Judaism and Christianity can live side by side and work together for the elevation of mankind and the advent of God's kingdom on earth.

REGENTS OF THE UNIVERSITY.

Dr. W. H. Watson's Argument on the Unification Plan.

The following is a portion of the argument of Dr. W. H. Watson of Utica, one of the Regents of the university, made at the latest meeting of the board, against the proposed appointment of the Chancellor by the Governor:

The medical profession, as well as its sister profession of the law, would be greatly injured by an unworthy choice of the executive head of the proposed Department of Instruction.

For more than twenty years before I became a member of the Board of Regents I was deeply interested in the cause of medical education, and in the advancement of the requirements for admission to the medical profession, and I well recall the solicitude and anxiety which all those who then acted with me entertained as to the proper and most fitting place in which to lodge the power for the administration of the medical boards which were to be formed. It was suggested at various times that it be lodged in the Governor, but that was not regarded as satisfactory, and only when the proposition was made to lodge the important power in the absolutely impartial body of the Board of Regents could the profession be brought to favor the bill.

The State of New York to-day stands in the very vanguard of medical education, and I voice the opinion of all educated men in the medical profession when I state that it considers itself particularly fortunate in having a central educational and administrative body which is at the same time an impartial court (the exact analogue of which exists in no other State) to pass upon the preliminary requirements for medical education and to supervise and conduct the examinations for medical licenses to practice.

JUROR CORNELIUS VANDERBILT.

Supposed He Had Been Excused, and Was Surprised When Fined.

Cornelius Vanderbilt made a statement yesterday concerning his failure to appear for jury duty, which was the basis of remarks made in the City Court on Friday by Justice Fitzsimons. Mr. Vanderbilt said:

"The jury notice was mailed to me at the wrong address, and I did not receive it until the day on which the jury was to convene. On such short notice it was impossible for me to arrange my business affairs so as to attend in person, and I therefore sent my representative, who explained to the Court that the notice had been sent to the wrong address, and had only just been received by me. My representative informed me that the Judge, whose name I do not know, had excused me from service. When I received the notice that a fine had been imposed for non-attendance I again sent my representative to learn why I had been fined after being excused. He informed me that the imposing of the fine was a mistake and would be rectified when the facts were explained to the Court.

"I have no desire to escape jury duty, and should have certainly obeyed the summons had it been served on me. I would not have tried to avoid payment of the fine had I not been informed that I had been excused by the Judge. I make this statement because I do not want it to appear that I seek to shirk my duties."

MARRIAGE MAY SAVE LIFE.

Typhoid Patient at Death's Door Is Better After the Ceremony.

Theodore S. Thorseh, a Swede living on Jersey Street, New Brighton, is in the S. R. Smith Infirmary there, apparently recovering from an attack of typhoid fever which until last week was considered likely to cause his death. He is twenty-eight years old, and was to have been married to-day to Miss Mary Nilson of Tyson Street, New Brighton. When it became apparent some time ago that he could not recover in time to be married on Christmas Day he seemed to lose hope and courage, and last Monday his case reached a stage where it was thought to be hopeless.

On Tuesday he manifested great sorrow over being unable to be married, and expressed a desire to have the ceremony performed before he died. His wish was communicated to Miss Nilson when she called at the hospital that day. She summoned her sister, Miss Tillie Nilson, and after a talk with the sick man it was decided that his wish should be gratified. Venerable Archdeacon George D. Johnson of Christ Church was summoned and performed the ceremony, while Thorsen lay on his cot and the bride stood beside it holding the sick man's hand.

Immediately after the ceremony Thorsen appeared much brighter, and he has since continued to improve, although on Tuesday morning the attending physicians did not think he would live longer than one day. He now has chances of recovery.

A LANDMARK TO DISAPPEAR.

The Suydam House, in Brooklyn, 200 Years Old, to be Torn Down.

The Suydam Homestead at Bushwick and Johnson Avenues, Brooklyn, which is over 200 years old, and the oldest of the few Dutch houses now left in the Williamsburg section, will be razed to the ground in a few days. The site has been purchased for church purposes, and when the old structure is demolished, excavations will be begun for the erection of a German church. The Christmas festivals held in this old mansion will always be remembered by the residents who were reared in that locality. Adrian Suydam, who was the last survivor of the Dutch family of that name, lived in the house and preserved there many of the old Dutch customs until his death five years ago. On the afternoon of Christmas Day, Mr. Suydam was accustomed to throw his doors open to his neighbors. Rich and poor were equally welcome and drank the health of the host. The children received toys and candies from a huge tree in the parlor. Mr. Suydam, who commenced life as a farmer, filled responsible positions in the State and city governments, and in financial and educational institutions.

DIED IN A MASSAGE BATH.

Bottle Supposed to Contain Poison in the Dead Man's Pocket.

Coroner Delap of Kings County yesterday decided upon a thorough investigation touching the death of George L. Smith in a massage bath establishment conducted by Max Nitzart and his wife at 1,116 Myrtle Avenue, Brooklyn, on Saturday night. Smith was seized with convulsions and died shortly after the arrival of Dr. John B. Meury of Stuyvesant Avenue, who was summoned by the proprietor of the place.

A search of the dead man's pockets disclosed several bottles containing medicine and an unlabeled bottle half filled with what was believed to be poison. There were also found a bottle containing cocaine tablets, and some newspaper advertisements of furnished rooms. Through these advertisements the police discovered that Smith had rented a furnished room in the house of John Godfrey, at 447 Monroe Street. Godfrey told the police yesterday that Smith, when he came to him two weeks ago and rented a furnished room seemed to be ill. Smith had very little to say, and the only information he would give of his family was that his wife lived in Rome, N. Y. Smith was about fifty-two years old.

CASTORIA.

FUNERAL OF CHARLES SMITH.

Greatest East Side Crowd of the Kind on Record Pays Honor to the Memory of "Silver Dollar."

The greatest funeral crowd ever assembled on the east side gathered yesterday to pay honor to the memory of ex-Assemblyman Charles ("Silver Dollar") Smith before his body was laid away in Cypress Hills Cemetery. Despite the pouring rain, hundreds of residents of the Essex Market neighborhood lined Essex Street and filled the tenement windows for many blocks, rendering necessary the presence of thirty policemen, under Capt. Herlihy, of the Eldridge Street Station, to clear a passageway for the carriages and to keep the people from under the horses' feet.

The funeral services were held at 12 o'clock in Mr. Smith's rooms, above his saloon, at 64 Essex Street. For many hours before the services began, a constant stream of people passed around the handsome black coffin, lying in the crêpe-draped parlor, to take a last look at the face of their dead friend. The funeral services were conducted by Rabbi Gabriel Hirsch of the Synagogue Shaaral Berocho, Fiftieth Street and Third Avenue, and by ex-Police Justice Koch and Normal Lodge, No. 523, F. and A. M. Rabbi Hirsch delivered a short eulogy after reading the Jewish service for the dead, dwelling chiefly upon Mr. Smith's loyalty to his family and friends, and declaring him to have been a man of high principles and sense of honor, and an ideal father, husband, and friend. The Masonic ceremonies, conducted by ex-Judge Koch, followed, after which the procession took up its way to the cemetery.

According to the dead man's wishes, many friends desirous of sending floral offerings gave the money they would have spent for them to the poor of the streets. Four black horses, with no spot of white on their bodies, according to his wish, drew the hearse The pall bearers were John F. Carroll, Martin Engel, Senator Timothy D. Sullivan, Assemblyman T. P. Sullivan, ex-Judge Koch, Max Hochstim, Bernard Rourke, Edward J. Sparenberg, ex-Assemblyman Charles Adler, ex-Assistant District Attorney H. J. Goldsmith, ex-Alderman Philip Benjamin, and Edward Butler, all of whom were selected by Mr. Smith before his death.

Delegations were present at the funeral from the Martin Engel Association, the Jefferson Club, the Metamora Club, Normal Lodge, F. and A. M., and Emerald Lodge, A. O. U. W. Among those present were Justice Giegerich, Magistrates Zeller and Meade, Civil Justices Roesch and Stiner, Register Fromme, Police Commissioner John B. Sexton, ex-Assemblyman Solomon Rosenthal, County Clerk Sohmer, Assemblyman Julius Harburger, Fred S. Gibbs, Samuel D. Untermyer, Assistant District Attorney Unger, and John C. Sheehan.

OLD WOMAN PROBABLY STARVED

Found Dead in Her Room in Brooklyn —Relatives Said to be Rich.

Mrs. Annie Murphy, seventy years old, was found dead yesterday in a furnished room which she occupied at 887 Gates Avenue, Brooklyn. The woman's death is believed to have been due to starvation. She hired the room from Mrs. Mary Williams five weeks ago. From the time she took possession of the room she never went out, but occasionally sent boys after food. The woman was ill, and a doctor sometimes called upon her.

According to the neighbors, Mrs. Murphy had rich relatives in the upper part of the State and a rich niece living in Canada. When Mrs. Williams went to the old woman's room yesterday she found her dead. Coroner Delap was notified, and ordered an autopsy.

FIRE IN A BROOKLYN CHURCH.

Rope of Evergreen Ablaze, but Congregation Remains Calm.

Father Peter Donohue of St. James's Pro-Cathedral, Jay Street, Brooklyn, had occasion yesterday to commend the members of his congregation for their cool-headedness at a time when calmness was necessary to avert a probably serious panic. Such a situation developed in the church at the conclusion of the 9 o'clock mass.

The opening of the street door allowed a gust of wind to enter the church, and a rope of evergreen, hanging from the south gallery and forming part of the Christmas decorations, was blown against a gas jet. The evergreen took fire, and burned with a crackling noise, audible to most of those in the crowded church. Everybody turned and beheld the blazing rope of evergreen, but all remained quietly in their seats, however, while two men sprang upon the back of a pew, and, pulling down the bit of blazing evergreen, stamped out the fire.

DIED ON A RAILROAD TRAIN.

E. B. Schofield, a New York Jeweler, Succumbed to Heart Disease.

Ezra B. Schofield, forty-eight years old, died yesterday while on a New York Central train returning from Larchmont. Heart disease caused his death.

Mr. Schofield and his wife had been visiting his mother, who is eighty-eight years old, and lives in Larchmont. He seemed in excellent health as he bade her good-bye and a Merry Christmas, and promised to make another visit soon. When the train was half way to this city he became very ill, and died in a few minutes.

Mr. Schofield lived with his wife and a son at 48 West One Hundred and Thirty-second Street. He was in the jewelry business, and had a shop at 35 John Street. The son is in the publishing business at 8 Murray Street. The Coroners' office issued the necessary permit, and the body was taken to the West One Hundred and Thirty-second Street home.

MR. MALONE'S RESIGNATION.

Trustees of the Henry McCaddin Institute Accept It.

At the annual meeting of the Trustees of the Henry McCaddin Memorial Institute, in Berry Street, Brooklyn, the new parish house, connected with Father Sylvester Malone's Church, held yesterday afternoon in the institute, the resignation of Sylvester L. Malone, a nephew of Father Malone, who has managed the building since its opening, was accepted. The resignation of Mr. Malone was tendered over a fortnight ago, but action was deferred upon it until the annual meeting. Hereafter, the building will be managed jointly by the Trustees and the Rev. Joseph O'Brien, acting pastor of the church, who has been appointed by Bishop McDonnell as treasurer of the institute.

The donor of this building did not endow it, and as a consequence, lectures, entertainments, &c., were given to aid its fund. Mr. Malone's management was objected to by the majority of the members of the church and whenever an event was given under his management, the church people as a rule refused to patronize it. As a consequence the entertainments and lectures were unproductive. The annual expense of the institute, in which a free public library for all classes and sects is maintained, is $5,000. The receipts for the year just closed, are nearly $1,000 less than the disbursements. It is expected that in the future under the incoming management, the institute will prove a success.

Father Malone is rapidly sinking and his demise is only the question of a short time. No one, other than the immediate members of the priest's family are permitted to visit him.

MEMORY OF MRS. L. H. CRALL.

Window Dedicated in the Holy Trinity Church of Harlem.

A memorial window erected by Leander H. Crall in memory of his wife was dedicated yesterday in the Holy Trinity Church of Harlem. The Rev. Henry T. Nichols, rector of the church, officiated.

The window, which is of opalescent glass, is built into the north transept, and is 23 feet high by 7 feet wide. The subject is the "Adoration of the Magi." Thirteen life-sized figures are shown. The Virgin and Child are portrayed seated on a raised platform, while back of them St. Joseph stands.

The interior of the stable, with the heavy timbers, is shown. In the clouds above there is a group of angels singing the hymn, "Glory to God in the Highest," while in the sky is the crescent moon and the Star of Bethlehem. The wise men kneel in the foreground.

The window was designed by Francis Lathrop, and is one of seven depicting scenes in Christ's life which it is intended to erect from time to time in the transepts of Holy Trinity.

OUR LONDON CABLE.

A BAD WEEK IS EXPECTED

Between Thirty and Forty Failures Likely This Week—Prominent People Said to be in Difficulties—A Transitory Assuagement May Occur in January.

Cable Correspondence.

Copyright, 1899, THE NEW YORK TIMES.

LONDON, Dec. 24.—Your readers cannot be surprised at the turn events took in the week just ended. I have always said that the pinch would become severe at the end of the year, and I much fear that the new year will bring but temporary relief.

Here the week was superficially uneventful, but under the surface an agony of adjustment proceeded, and the losses to be met this week are the most formidable I have seen in many years. Happily there had been time to get ready, and the Bank of England is doing its utmost to minimize the strain by continuing to lend and discount for short terms at 6 per cent. Upward of £5,000,000 was obtained from it last week, so the probability is that the demand this week will be less severe.

In short, we shall pull through unless the credit rope breaks at some point, and of that there is as yet no sign. All the banks seem to be working cautiously, and as for the discount market, it is scarcely working at all below 6¾ per cent. One or two brokers ask 7 per cent. on all bills under three months, although, thanks to the heavy borrowings from the Bank of England, call money is often 4 per cent.

What upset the bill market was, first, the advance of the Reichsbank rate to 7 per cent.; a figure unprecedented in its history, and, second, the Bank of France's move to 4½ per cent. The former was expected; the latter was not, in spite of the fact that French exchange boded large withdrawals of gold from Paris for London. It now looks as if 4½ per cent. will not be enough, since exchange is still strongly in our favor. No further move, however, is probable anywhere this year, and which bank's rate must go up next cannot be guessed until it is seen how the markets shape during January.

I look at the Czar's rescript approving M. Witte as ominous of more affliction for that Minister with the St. Petersburg market. The Czar was most reluctant to grant the prayer of that market, and to allow more paper money to be issued, because such a step might imperil the whole gold currency system, established at such cost to the country. But, with open market discount at 7½ per cent. and rising, credit users are not likely to be satisfied with a mere letter of commendation of the Finance Minister. In short, the rescript is a signal of distress, and M. Witte may have either to go or let notes out. The latter event would allow gold to come from St. Petersburg, and slacken the pressure in Western Europe.

The shipments of metal from your side have not yet produced any effect, because we are completely absorbed in our own troubles. By the new year, however, we shall begin to raise our heads and look around to discover what help may be at hand. All the recent arrivals of metal have gone into circulation, and considerable sums in addition, but part of that outflow will begin to come back next month, especially with trade dampening down under the influence of money rates.

Were we free of war and the dangers from the condition of the Continental markets, I should say the worst would soon be over, but under the actual conditions I fear a recrudescence of trouble, after a transitory assuagement in January. It looks as if the Bank of France might have to go to at least 5 per cent., and the Bank of Germany will have a hard struggle to draw in its issue of taxed notes, expected to amount to £20,000,000, by the end of this week. The pull on it is unprecedented, and the exchange on London still rising. How your market will fare I cannot presume to judge, but we expect recurrent spasms there likewise.

Real permanent cheap money is consequently as far off as ever, and therefore reliable firmness on the stock markets anything but assured. Lack of certainty in the prospects is sure to chill enterprise, and the manager of a leading discount house remarked to me yesterday, "Any colony coming here to borrow just now would have difficulty in getting money in large amounts at 10 per cent. Over 400 projects for light railways have been deposited for passing at the next session of Parliament, and not one of them can hope next year to raise capital on terms admitting of the project being carried out at a profit. Existing railways seek powers to raise between thirty and forty millions of new capital, and could not raise a penny at 4 per cent." This inability must continue while the war lasts, and play endless mischief with the industries of the country, all habitually too dependent upon borrowed money or new issues of share capital.

Yesterday was the first day of the final Stock Exchange settlement of the year, a day when bargains in mine securities were carried over. Money for this purpose costing from 10 to 20 per cent., many operators were forced to close because unable to command loans at any price. Failures this week will consequently be numerous, say from thirty to forty, and fashionable society is struck as with a plague. More than one titled person of prominence is stated to be in difficulties, but whether these will come to light is doubtful. The general account begins to be arranged on Wednesday, and money for it promises to cost between 7 and 8 per cent. But in Roumania the bank rate is now 9 per cent., and the bankruptcy of that country has not yet been proclaimed. A. J. W.

BOSTON STOCK MARKET.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Dec. 23.—Trading was fairly well distributed during the two hours of business to-day, but as it was still almost wholly on a cash basis, the transactions did not reach large proportions. The Copper shares, as a class, showed slight gains. Montana touched 280, a gift of 5 points over Friday's closing, but just at the end it fell back to 253. Butte was up nearly 3 points, to 43; Amalgamated sold as high as 81, but fell off to 80; Arcadian was quoted at 22; Centennial touched 17; Utah sold at 23 and 24, and Parrot pushed up from 35½ to 36⅞. While there is still much uncertainty hanging over the Copper shares situation, because of the recent troubles, there is, none the less, a growing belief among conservative people that the better class of these securities are now an exceptionally good purchase. The buying certainly for the last few days has been of a most excellent character, and much of it was for investment account.

In the general market, Bell Telephone sold as high as 341, United States Oil was up to 24, but closed a point under that; New England Gas and Coke was firm at 12, Boston Elevated sold at 98 and 98½, Erie Telephone at 100 and 101, and American Zinc gained a point, to 12. The closing was quiet but firm.

The week closes with a decidedly better tone in the money market. As a rule, brokers have placed themselves in a very strong position, and say not in need of accommodations. Money on call is still quoted at from 6 to 7 per cent., and time money is quiet. The banks are not seeking new loans, but are taking good care of their customers. Nothing less than 6 per cent for all dates is quoted. There is not a large demand for commercial paper, best names being quoted at 6@6½ per cent.

PHILADELPHIA PRICES.

Special to The New York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Dec. 23.—There was marked improvement in the local speculative situation to-day. Confidence has been partly restored, and it was found at the opening to-day that large buying orders were distributed through the market. The result was a general advance. Pennsylvania Steel rose 3, to 7; the preferred 5½ to 91½. United Gas, 5, to 140; Asphalt, 1, to 12; Electric Storage Battery, 2, to 77. bid; Marsden, 1½, to 10¾; Welsbach Light, 2, to 37; Cambria Steel, ¾, to 19; Philadelphia Traction, 1¼ to 94; Union Traction, 1⅛, to 35⅝, and Tidewater Steel, ⅜, to 11⅝. The extreme gains were not held to the close, owing to late realizing sales, but most stocks left off with substantial net gains.

CHICAGO QUOTATIONS.

Special to The New York Times.

CHICAGO, Dec. 23.—The local market followed the lead of Wall Street. With few exceptions values went to a considerably higher level than was seen yesterday. The trading was principally in Biscuit common and the Linseed stocks. Biscuit common advanced to 34¼ and closed at 34. Linseed common was in good demand around 12, and the preferred was well held above 52; in the case of Diamond Match there was a sharp recovery on a very small amount of business. The stock moved up to 123, against a close last night of 117, and even at the higher level offerings appeared to be light. The traction stocks all showed some improvement, but the trading in them was small. Closing prices:

Another week of liquidation heavier than any recorded recently brought about serious declines throughout nearly the entire list of outside securities. In all the groups were stocks showing losses that in many cases amounted to several points, and the net changes for the week more than at any time of late showed a record of losses brought about either by heavy selling or by offerings of stock in the absence of any demand. Early in the week, when conditions in the Stock Exchange market approached panic, the outside market reflected those very unfavorable conditions, and a general disposition was shown to let stocks go even when the prices necessarily entailed heavy losses. Some of the selling was forced, but much of it appeared to be by holders who were alarmed at the conditions that appeared to be developing in the general market, and who preferred to remain out of the market when its future seemed to be surrounded by so much uncertainty. Fortunately only a few stocks were offered in large amount, else the record of the week could hardly be as little disastrous as it is.

In looking for a cause for the heavy declines of the past week, it would be difficult to assign them to any other than a more or less general apprehension that general market conditions for some time to come were likely to be very unfavorable. The extremely high rates for money which prevailed early in the week naturally kept buyers out of the market, but it can hardly be considered as a direct cause of much of the selling that occurred. But outside market conditions depend largely upon the course of the Stock Exchange market, and when prices were falling so alarmingly in that market it could not be expected that outside stocks could escape serious loss.

On the first two days of the week liquidation was heaviest, but it did not cease then, and throughout the rest of the week it was in evidence here and there in the market, leading to further declines, and in conjunction with factors working toward better prices, brought about much very considerable changes are shown in contrast by these figures.

Following are the latest quotations for securities not listed or inactive on the Stock Exchange. THE NEWS CONDENSED.

FOREIGN.—Gen. Buller's artillery has destroyed the foot bridge at Colenso to prevent the Boers crossing to the south of the Tugela River. Ladysmith is still being bombarded. The Boers state their losses were only thirty in killed in the battle with Gen. Buller. French miners at St. Etienne have decided to go on strike today. The companies have refused to meet their demands for an increase of wages. Queen Victoria and the royal family spent Christmas at Windsor. The Kaiser and his family observed the day at Potsdam. Oscar Wilde may have to fight a duel. Baron Ludlow of Heywood died at London yesterday.—Pages 3 and 7.

OPERATIC SURPRISE RUMORED.

Reported that Manager Maurice Grau Has Engaged Either Mme. Melba or Jean de Reszke.

Rumors were plentiful last evening at the Metropolitan Opera House regarding an important engagement which it was said Maurice Grau would consummate this morning with the representative of a prominent prima donna.

It was strongly hinted that Mr. Grau's surprise, which, it was said, he intended to make public to-night, was none less than the engagement of Mme. Melba, while another rumor had it that word had been received from Jean de Reszke announcing that he would return to this country to fill a brief engagement, making his last appearance in America.

TALK OF A NEW BIG HOTEL.

Boston and Philadelphia Men Said to be Negotiating for the Brunswick and Other Property.

The report is in circulation that a syndicate of Boston and Philadelphia capitalists is negotiating for the purchase of the old Brunswick Hotel property, on Fifth Avenue, and that it also seeks to purchase four houses on the north side of Twenty-sixth Street, facing Madison Square.

Should it succeed it is said it will build on the site a hotel equal to the Waldorf-Astoria.

Man and Woman Killed by a Train.

BUFFALO, Dec. 25.—George Webber, forty years old, and Magdalena Weiner, aged thirty-eight, residents of Depew, attended church at Lancaster last night. As they had not returned to their homes this morning a search was made for them. The mangled bodies of both were found near the New York Central station at Grimesville. It was evident that they had been struck by a train while walking on the tracks.

Five Killed in Montana Collision.

Special to The New York Times.

HELENA, Mon., Dec. 25.—In a head-end collision between two freight trains on the Northern Pacific Railway a short distance west of Drummond, Mon., at 9:30 o'clock this morning five men were instantly killed. The dead are Engineer Rhein, Fireman Cutler, Conductor McCarthy, the head brakeman, name unknown, and a man named Beebe. The accident was caused, it is said, by one of the freight trains running beyond the designated meeting point.

Bushrod Underwood Dead.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 25.—Bushrod Underwood, who achieved fame as a scout in the Army of Northern Virginia, died here today aged fifty-six years. Many deeds requiring great coolness and courage were credited to him by Gen. R. E. Lee and Col. John O. Mosby of the Third Virginia Cavalry, to which command he belonged.

President Commutes a Sentence.

BALTIMORE, Dec. 25.—John S. Hoshall, who was sentenced eight months ago, in the United States District Court, to ten years' imprisonment in the city jail for a violation of the postal laws, has been released from jail, his sentence having been commuted by President McKinley. Hoshall was a medical student at one of the colleges here at the time of his arrest.

PLATT ON MOSS'S REPORT

Senator Thinks Committee Will Make Its Own Recommendations.

HE KNOWS NOTHING OF MOSS

On Charter Revision in Legislature—Tammany Officeholders Say Counsel's Suggestions Are Borrowed.

Organization Republicans were much interested yesterday in the report made public by Frank Moss, counsel to the Mazet Investigating Committee, in which he presented his case to the committee. There was considerable discussion as to the probability of the committee accepting Mr. Moss's report, and the opinion was freely expressed that the committee would prepare a report of its own to submit to the Legislature. Senator Platt was asked last night if he had read the report. He said:

"I don't know Moss. I never met him, and I know nothing about his report. Mr. Moss evidently has been laboring under the delusion that he is the committee. I have understood that the next Legislature would expect a report from the committee appointed by the last Assembly. I don't know that they expect a report from Mr. Moss."

Senator Platt was asked if any amendments to the city charter, based on the testimony brought out at the investigation, would be made this Winter.

"When it was decided that the Governor should appoint a Charter Revision Commission," he said, "I understood it was agreed that certain emergency amendments would be made in the Legislature this Winter.

"Whatever amendments are made will be based on the report and recommendations of the investigating committee."

"Will one of these amendments be to reduce the Mayoralty term?" was asked.

"It may be," was the reply.

"Will another abolish one branch of the Municipal Assembly?"

"Probably, although all these questions will be left to the Legislature to decide," was his reply.

OFFICEHOLDERS' OPINIONS.

In Tammany circles little concern was expressed at the tenor of the report of Mr. Moss. Those of the municipal officeholders who were directly interested expected such a report from the line of questioning pursued by Mr. Moss, and others affected indifference.

Corporation Counsel Whalen voiced the sentiments expressed by the majority of his fellow officeholders when he remarked, "Mr. Moss, in his report, has gathered together all the suggestions for charter amendments, no matter by whom they originated, and has presented them to the committee as the consequence of his investigations. Tammany Hall, as a political unit, will not oppose them, so far as I know, even if all of them are submitted as possible amendments to the charter."

The officeholders who read the report were chiefly interested in the chapter in which it is charged that Richard Croker, by reason of his connection with Tammany Hall, is in a position to enrich himself through contracts with subservient members of his party, and that his influence is felt in the business of corporations and firms which have dealings with the city or with private citizens. Friends of Mr. Croker who were seen by a reporter for THE TIMES declined to discuss this phase of the report further than to say that Mr. Croker had been reasonably frank in his answers to the committee.

Corporation Counsel Whalen, when asked for his opinion on the report, said:

"It is a conglomeration of every suggestion for charter amendment that has been made in the last two years. Mr. Moss has collated the suspicions of others, in addition to what he has adduced at the hearings of the committee, and as a result his report lacks the coherency and rationality that should make it a valuable guide to the committee for which he is counsel and the Legislature. I doubt if either body will take it half as seriously as it is made. Aside from his suggestions which relate to the Law Department I do not care to discuss the report, because I have not given it much attention.

"Mr. Moss asks, among other things, that the Corporation Counsel should be deprived of the power to consent to the entry of judgments against the city. This has for fifty years been one of the attributes of the Corporation Counsel, and I do not agree with him that my actions have shown that it is a dangerous power. I am aware that this suggestion did not originate with Mr. Moss. He has 'borrowed' it from the Controller. Default judgments have only been entered against the city in cases where the city has not had the adequate defense, and no matter in whom the power to make them is vested the method can hardly be changed.

MR. WHALEN OBJECTS.

"As to Mr. Moss's desire to have the Corporation Counsel and the President of the Tax Department removed from the Board of Estimate, I can only say that that is a suggestion which will overthrow the traditions of twenty-five years, in all of which time the Corporation Counsel has been a member of that body without arousing any demand for his removal. As the law officer of the city he should, I believe, be a component part of all the important boards. If his advice is worth anything at all, it should be especially valuable in matters with which the Board of Estimate has to deal. I do not believe the committee will regard Mr. Moss's suggestions with seriousness, so I do not propose to make anything like a formal reply to him."

Controller Coler was unwilling to discuss the report, except in so far as it related to his department. He said that many of the suggestions made by Mr. Moss were proposed by him long before the Mazet committee began its work. He continued:

"I have long felt and have frequently said that a limit should be placed by law on the amount of city bonds that may be sold at one time. At present, when a bond sale becomes necessary, we sell all the bonds we can. Sometimes this amount aggregates $10,000,000. This has a tendency to depreciate the price of city bonds, and I feel sure that with a limit of, say, $5,000,000, at one sale, better bids can be secured. The ultimate fixing of the date of tax collection as Jan. 1 of each year is another suggestion of mine, which will doubtless be of great benefit to the city, and will obviate the borrowing of money early in the year upon the prospective tax collections.

"As to depriving the Corporation Counsel of the right to confess judgment, I feel very strongly, and if the committee does not offer an amendment to this effect I shall do so. I consider the power now vested in the Law Department as an exceedingly dangerous one, and I hope that something will be done which will take it away, or at any rate lessen it.

"The abolishment of the office of City Chamberlain I regard as a bad mistake. Gov. Roosevelt recommended it in his first message, but, though the Republicans had a large majority in the Legislature, none of them was willing to advocate such a radical measure. The Controller's office has all it can do now, and it would be unjust to add to its burden. There is urgent necessity for the continuance of the office of Chamberlain, and I trust that it will not be abolished."

The Commissioners of Taxes and Assessments were unwilling to discuss the reforms proposed by Mr. Moss in their department. These reforms, it was said, must come through a revision of the tax laws, and it was pointed out that a joint committee of the Legislature now has this subject under investigation.

MR. CLARKE'S ATTITUDE.

None of the members of the Mazet Committee would talk about Mr. Moss's report yesterday. The fact that John Proctor Clarke had not signed the document was pointed out by Republicans and Democrats alike as confirmation of the rumor that there is a lack of harmony between the committee and its counsel. It was also alleged that Mr. Clarke has disapproved of the tactics pursued by Mr. Moss, and that he had, as alleged, had the support of the majority of the committee. Mr. Clarke declined yesterday to receive the cards of reporters who called upon him. A friend of Mr. Clarke, however, said that his connection with the committee had closed, and that in all probability he would not take part in the discussion of Mr. Moss's report on Thursday next.

Mr. Moss, when asked last night what significance could be attached to the fact that the name of John Proctor Clarke had not been signed to the report, said that there was none. There was no disagreement between himself and Mr. Clarke, he said, but they had agreed that Mr. Moss should do the work of preparing the report. The matter was never submitted to Mr. Clarke while he was engaged upon it, and this was reason enough why he did not sign it.

ROLAND REED SERIOUSLY ILL.

The Actor in St. Luke's Hospital Suffering from Appendicitis—His Company Disbanded.

Roland Reed, the actor, was taken to St. Luke's Hospital yesterday afternoon from his residence, 361 West One Hundred and Twenty-second Street, suffering from appendicitis. His wife and several physicians were at his bedside until late last night and his condition was announced as critical. His company has been temporarily disbanded.

Mr. Reed arrived in New York about a week ago with his company, which was touring with "His Father's Boy." They came from the West and intended to remain here until after the holidays, when they were going to Rochester to continue the tour.

Mr. Reed attended the opera Saturday night and Sunday morning he was taken ill. His physician was called and yesterday it was decided to send the patient to the hospital, where an operation will be performed as soon as Mr. Reed's condition will permit, probably to-day.

BOSTON FREEMASONS' HOME.

New Temple One of the Finest Structures of Its Kind in the Country—To be Dedicated To-morrow.

Special to The New York Times.

BOSTON, Dec. 25.—The splendid new Masonic Temple erected on the site of the old building burned some time ago is to be dedicated with appropriate ceremonies next Wednesday. The day is the feast of St. John the Evangelist, the patron saint of Freemasons throughout the world.

The new building is in some respects the finest home of Freemasonry in existence. The exterior is plain, but of elegant and pure design. There is a wide vestibule to the entrance, on Boylston Street, at either side of which is a niche. In these niches stand marble columns, surmounted by globes. The walls of the vestibule are covered with mosaics.

The entrance hall is twenty feet square. The floor is of mosaic and the walls of polished marble. The seal of the Grand Lodge of Massachusetts is set in the centre of the floor. Leading from this hall is the grand stairway, built entirely of white marble. There are two landings between the entrance hall and the second floor. At the second landing is a statue of Gen. Joseph Warren, one of the most famous of the early members of the fraternity in New England.

On the second floor is the "fraternity parlor," measuring 91 feet by 60 feet. It is not intended primarily for lodge meetings, but as a place where Freemasons may chat and smoke. It is beautifully furnished, and contains an elaborate fireplace and mantel in mosaic.

"Corinthian Hall" is on the floor above. This is the room specially designed for meetings, and is in every way one of the finest of its kind in this country. It measures 85 by 46 feet, and is two stories high. The architecture is of the pure Corinthian order, the colors being ivory, gold, and silver. The carpet and furniture were specially manufactured to harmonize with the decorations of the hall. On the north side is a fine organ, the case of which is in ivory and gold. In the corners of the chamber are statues of Faith, Hope, Charity, and Wisdom, respectively, while in the panel above the statue of Faith is a portrait of George Washington, who was also prominent in the circles of the order. There are also portraits of Benjamin Franklin, Gen. Lafayette, and of about forty Past Grand Masters. In this hall are to be held the meetings of the Grand Lodge and thirteen subordinate lodges.

Another beautiful chamber is "Gothic Hall," on the seventh floor. While there will also be meetings of Masonic bodies in this hall, its main purpose is that of entertainment. At one end is a stage, with a proscenium opening of 28 feet, while the length of the hall, including a gallery at the other end, is 84 feet. The stage is fitted up with all the paraphernalia necessary for an elaborate dramatic performance, while the drop curtain can hardly be surpassed in beauty in any theatre in the United States. It represents a body of mounted Knights Templars on their way to a crusade, and was painted by O. L. Story of this city, every detail being archaeologically accurate. The predominant color of "Gothic Hall" is a cheerful reddish tone. The floor is of oak, and the walls are paneled, with Gothic designs for the tracery, while painted on the panels are heraldic insignia in bright colors, gold and silver. In the gallery is a choir loft and organ. The ceiling is groined, with ribs and bosses of oak.

ALGER AND THE GOLD PLANK.

Ex-Secretary Says Senator Foraker Wrote It, and That He Added an Amendment.

Special to The New York Times.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 25.—The contest between Senator Foraker and H. H. Kohlsaat for the honor of the authorship of the gold plank in 1896 is complicated by the appearance of ex-Secretary Alger as a candidate. Mr. Alger, however, divides the credit with Senator Foraker. In a letter to The Washington Post the ex-Secretary says:

"There seems to be much contention as to the authorship of the financial plank adopted at the St. Louis Convention. I think The Chicago Tribune takes the wise view of the situation when it says: 'It matters not who wrote the plank. It was adopted by the convention, and was the unanimous voice of the delegates when adopted.'

"I was not a member of the Committee on Finance, but was much in consultation with many of the leading delegates, including Senator Hanna, upon that question. People then were in doubt about indorsing the gold standard who to-day would not think for a moment of permitting the free coinage of silver, even were all the other nations of the world to adopt it.

"On the night before the resolutions were presented to the convention, near midnight, Senator Foraker brought the financial plank (written in his own handwriting) to my room for consultation, and remained perhaps a half hour. The paragraph relating to free coinage, as adopted, read in part as follows:

"'We are, therefore, opposed to the free coinage of silver, except by international agreement.'

"I suggested to the Senator that 'international agreement' might be used technically if any of the small countries of the world were to adopt it.

"After discussing the matter with the Senator the words 'with the leading commercial nations of the world' were inserted by me in my own handwriting. The plank was adopted verbatim as written by the Senator and interlined by myself, and the rough draft of it referred to was in the possession of Senator Foraker a year ago, and I presume he has it to-day, although I have not spoken to him since that time upon the subject, but I advised him then to keep it.

"I do not believe that any plank was prepared 'three or four days' before that time, because it was the one subject of discussion almost from the time the delegates arrived until the matter had been determined by the committee.

"It seems to me but just to all concerned that all facts in the matter be made known."

FATHER MALONE IN PERIL

Charges of Cruel Treatment Made Against Catholic Authorities.

HIS PEOPLE CANNOT SEE HIM

Widow of His Brother Declares Light and Water Are Denied Him—She Alleges a Cause.

Since the illness of the Rev. Sylvester Malone, the rector of the Church of Sts. Peter and Paul, in Wythe Avenue, Brooklyn, trouble as alleged has been brewing between the relatives of the dying priest and some of the authorities of the Roman Catholicolic Church in the Diocese of Brooklyn. A crisis is now reported to be at hand.

The alleged trouble first came into public notice in the church circles about three weeks ago, when Miss Marcella Malone, a niece of the venerable priest, alarmed the neighborhood by screaming from an upper window of the parish house, 69 South Third Street, "Police! Murder!" A number of policemen hastened to the house, and a crowd of several hundred persons quickly gathered. The police entered the house and were informed that the screams had been uttered by Miss Malone while suffering from nervousness owing to the serious illness of Father Malone.

Since Father Malone's illness Miss Malone, with her mother, the widow of Dr. Edward Malone, the priest's brother, and Sylvester Malone, a son of the doctor, have been staying at the Parish House, in order to be near the dying ecclesiastic.

At all the masses yesterday the Rev. Joseph O'Brien, Father Malone's first assistant, who has conducted the affairs of the church since his illness, asked for the prayers of the congregation for Father Malone. It is said that this was prompted by the fact that every day hundreds of parishioners call at the Parish House to see Father Malone and are refused admission.

At the parish house last night Mrs. Edward Malone was asked as to the condition of Father Malone, in view of Father O'Brien's request for prayers. She replied that many "hypocritical" utterances were made from the altar.

"I call them hypocritical," said Mrs. Malone, "because those who say them have no love for Father Malone. Father Malone is undergoing treatment that is shameful and abusive. Why the people in authority here are simply killing him with their actions. We are suffering from all kinds of annoyances that seem to grow worse daily.

"The light and water have been shut off from our apartments at times, and to-day and yesterday as well I was compelled to buy water for Father Malone to bathe in and to drink. To-night the servants absolutely refused to get a blanket for Father Malone when he asked for it, while complaining of the cold. They replied that there were no blankets in the house."

The reason why Father Malone is being treated in the manner alleged, Mrs. Malone asserted, was because he was old, a Republican, and liberal in his views.

Mrs. Malone declared that when the public became aware of all the facts in the case it would be shocked.

"The trouble," said Mrs. Malone, "started several weeks ago, when Father Malone began to grow weaker. When we found that he was not only being poorly nursed, but really maltreated, we insisted on a male nurse being called in place of a woman. Father Malone is suffering from a sore, which the parish authorities are treating with holy water only.

"They did not want any of us to stay in the house, and when my daughter screamed from the window it was because they refused to allow her to send out a message. She wanted to get a policeman so as to have a messenger called."

It was learned yesterday that Miss Malone went to the home of the Rev. Dr. Wells, pastor of the South Third Street Presbyterian Church, a lifelong friend of Father Malone, seeking advice. At Dr. Wells's house last night one of the family stated that Miss Malone had called there three weeks ago, but they refused to say what the nature of her errand was.

"She was greatly excited," said this person, "and I told her that her brother, who is a lawyer, was a proper person to seek advice from. She was greatly excited."

S. L. MALONE STILL MANAGER.

Did Not Tender Resignation as Manager of the McCaddin Memorial.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your paper has been used for the dissemination of false news for some time past in reference to myself. I feel certain that this is without your consent or approval. I desire at the present time to call your attention to the latest instance in your issue today, headed: "Mr. Malone's Resignation."

I did not tender my resignation as manager of the Henry McCaddin Memorial a fortnight ago, nor at any other time, and am still manager.

I have received no notice of any action of the Board of Trustees (the Bishop, Vicar General, Father Malone, and two laymen,) removing me.

As late as Saturday last, (Dec. 23,) Vicar General McNamara entered my uncle's (Father Malone's) sick room and threatened the calling of a meeting of the Trustees at his bedside if I did not resign. My uncle, a Trustee, said, "I want my nephew to remain." Father McNamara then asked me if I would resign, and I answered "No."

If any meeting of Trustees has been held it has been held without notification to Father Malone.

SYLVESTER L. MALONE.

FRENCH MINERS STRIKE TO-DAY

Demand 10 Per Cent. Wage Increase and Refuse to Take Less—12,500 Lace Workers Are Out.

PARIS, Dec. 25.—At a meeting of 2,500 miners held to-day in St. Etienne a resolution was adopted in favor of declaring a general strike in the coal basin of the Loire to-morrow morning. A sympathy movement involving 50,000 men is feared. The prosperity of the coal trade led the miners to demand an increase of wages, shorter hours, and a formal recognition of the Miners' Federation by the companies. The latter made an offer of 5 per cent. increase, but this was refused.

To-day's decision was reached amid cries of "Vive la Greve." Disorders are anticipated. Already there have been slight disturbances, particularly last evening, when the miners went in procession through the streets of St. Etienne singing the "Carmagnole."

Twelve thousand five hundred lace workers are on strike at St. Etienne for higher wages. Their idleness involves that of 85,000 other dependent workmen, making with the miners, if the coal strike spreads as is expected, nearly 100,000. Moreover, a number of factories and works will soon be compelled to close, owing to the coal shortage.

TO BOYCOTT NON-UNION BREAD.

Chicago Union Men and Their Families Will Fight a Trust.

CHICAGO, Dec. 25.—A unique boycott of non-union bread is to be inaugurated Jan. 1 by the union bakers of Chicago. The organizations have formed a plan to get their wives, daughters, sisters, and relatives to refuse to purchase all bread except such as bears the label of trades union bakeries. More than 7,000 of the organized journeymen bakers are in this scheme, and they are to have the active support of the 100,000 members of Chicago's other unions.

The boycott is to be a fight upon an alleged combination or trust of local bakeries, which is asserted to be aggressively opposed to organized labor.

SON KILLED HIS FATHER

Christmas Gift Caused a Tragedy in a Brooklyn Home.

A CLAIM OF SELF-DEFENSE

Charles Haffner, the Victim, Had Attacked His Boy—Enraged at His Family's Innocent Pleasure.

The one thing that nineteen-year-old Harry Haffner of 826 Atlantic Avenue, Brooklyn, desired particularly as a Christmas gift was a writing desk. His mother, conscious of his wish, planned to surprise him with the desk on Christmas morning. The result of that lovingly planned surprise was that the husband and father of the family lay dead last night and Harry, the son, was locked up in the Grand Avenue Police Station, charged with killing him.

The Haffner family comprised the father, Charles, forty years old; the mother, and two sons, Harry, nineteen years old, and John, seventeen years old. The father was employed as a butcher in a market in Fulton Street. Harry has been in the employ of an electrical concern at Flatbush Avenue and State Street. The household was a happy one except at times when, as is claimed, the head of the family drank too much. Then his disposition to be quarrelsome caused trouble. Occasions such as these, it is said, had been frequent of late. But, despite this unhappy failing of the father, the mother and the sons looked forward to a merry Christmas and carried out their pleasant little schemes to surprise each other with gifts.

Harry, as stated, had his mind set on a writing desk, and was not backward about dropping hints to that effect, which, however, his mother, forming her own plans, artfully pretended not to notice. A few days before Christmas she bought a desk, with other gifts for the members of the family, all of which were hidden away until yesterday morning. When Harry arose he was delighted to find the desk set out for him in the little parlor on the second floor. On the desk was an album for photographs, another thing that he had desired. This proof of his mother's love made the boy exceedingly happy.

Haffner neither looked at the presents nor made any comment as to the day when he got up. He was not in good humor, so the family say. After eating his breakfast he left the house. He did not make his appearance at home again until 3 o'clock in the afternoon. In the meantime, it is alleged, he had been drinking. When he saw the desk which had been presented to Harry by his mother, Haffner was displeased. He rebuked his wife, and the more he talked about it the angrier he became. Finally, it is alleged, in a burst of passion, Haffner grabbed the photograph album from the desk and tore it to pieces. The family, however, succeeded in pacifying him after a while and all sat down to dinner.

The meal had scarcely begun when Haffner again brought up the matter of the desk, together with other disagreeable things. The others were patient for a time, and then, it is alleged, a violent quarrel occurred between Harry and his father. The father precipitated the tragedy which followed by striking his son in the face with his fist. The boy seized a table knife, in self-defense, it is claimed, and stabbed his father in the neck, severing the jugular vein.

The father staggered back against the wall, while the son, apparently dazed by what had occurred, went out into the hall. Haffner attempted to follow the boy, but fell in the doorway.

John, the younger son, ran out of the house and called Roundsman Keenan of the Grand Avenue Station, who was on his way home to dinner. Keenan returned with the boy to the house. There he found Haffner dying in his wife's arms, while Harry stood near.

Keenan called an ambulance from the Homeopathic Hospital and then placed young Haffner under arrest.

When Ambulance Surgeon Pinkham reached the house he found that Haffner was dead.

The boy was taken to the Grand Avenue Police Station. He made no statement. He has something of a local reputation as an amateur boxer. He will be arraigned in the Myrtle Avenue Police Court this morning.

CIVIL RULE IN LUZON.

Gen. Young and Col. Hood Are Establishing Municipal Governments—Ports Will Be Open Jan. 1.

MANILA, Dec. 26.—Gen. Young has been appointed Military Governor of the provinces of Northwestern Luzon, with headquarters at Vigan. His command includes the Thirty-third Infantry, under Col. Luther R. Hare, and the Third Cavalry. He will establish permanent stations at San Fernando and Laoag, with outposts wherever needed.

The Sixteenth Infantry will proceed to Aparri, garrisoning such towns as may be deemed necessary in the Provinces of Cagayan, Isabela, and Nuevo Vizcaya, of which Col. Hood has been appointed Military Governor.

Gen. Young and Col. Hood are establishing civil Municipal Governments and the ports in Northern Luzon will be opened for trade about Jan. 1.

A QUIET DAY IN WASHINGTON.

The President and Mrs. McKinley Celebrated Christmas Alone.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 25.—Christmas Day, always quiet at the National capital, was unusually so this year. All of the executive departments were closed and practically all the members of both branches of Congress were out of the city.

Services were held in many churches, and as the dinner hour approached the streets were deserted.

At the White House a quiet day was spent. About 10 o'clock the President took a walk alone through the grounds at the south of the mansion and then joined Mrs. McKinley in the family living room. There were no callers and no guests. Neither attended church, and at the usual hour they dined alone.

BOSTON'S CRIPPLED BANKS.

Time for Reopening the Broadway National Extended.

BOSTON, Dec. 25.—Receiver Wing, who is in charge of both the Globe and the Broadway National Banks, to-day received word from Controller Dawes in Washington that the time limit for the re-opening of the Broadway Bank, which expires to-morrow night, would be extended for one week. This was good news to those who have been working assiduously toward getting the institution on its feet, and particularly Cashier Curtiss, whose endeavors have earned for him a high place in the business world.

Notwithstanding numerous published interviews with prominent bankers and brokers as to the cause of the recent troubles, the general public have been much in the dark until Receiver Wing's long statement, issued last night, which has in a great measure thrown light on many of the transactions in the Globe Bank. Further information is looked for when ex-President Cole arrives from California and tells his side of the story.

In the meantime dealings in copper stocks on the Exchange will be watched with interest, and their future course will probably have considerable to do with the closing of the affairs of the Globe Bank.

EARTHQUAKE IN CALIFORNIA.

Six Squaws Killed at Saboba Reservation—Considerable Damage at San Jacinto and Hemet.

SAN JACINTO, Cal., Dec. 25.—A disastrous earthquake occurred here at 4:25 o'clock this morning. Nearly every two-story building in the town was wrecked, and it is estimated that the damage will aggregate over $50,000. The main shock was preceded by a loud, roaring sound, and awakened many persons just in time for them to escape from the doomed buildings. The business street is such a wreck that tons of debris had to be removed before the buildings could be entered.

The only loss of life so far as is known was at the Saboba Indian reservation, where six squaws were killed by falling walls. A number of Italians were seriously hurt.

Considerable damage was reported in near-by villages.

SANTA ANA, Cal., Dec. 25.—The severest earthquake in years visited this section this morning at 4:25. Clocks were stopped all over the city, and the walls of several brick buildings were badly cracked. Hundreds of people were on the streets a few seconds after the shock, some remaining up until daylight.

ANHEIM, Cal., Dec. 25.—The most severe earthquake ever known here occurred at 4:25 o'clock this morning. It lasted fully ten seconds, and was violent from the beginning. Lodging houses were emptied, and the streets were filled with shivering people. A number of buildings were cracked, but no serious damage was done.

LOS ANGELES, Cal., Dec. 25.—At 4:25 o'clock this morning a severe earthquake shock was felt over a large portion of Southern California, the undulations lasting about twelve seconds.

The centre of the shock appeared to have been at San Jacinto and Hemet, Riverside County. The large tourist hotel at Hemet was damaged, and the rear walls of the Johnson Block fell.

In this city no damage was done, though the shock was violent. The houses here are well filled with Eastern tourists, and many of them were terrified at the disturbances, and rushed from their rooms in fright.

Reports concerning the earthquake soon spead, and the telegraph and telephone wires between this city and adjacent towns were kept busy handling messages of inquiry.

SAN DIEGO, Cal., Dec. 25.—The most severe shock of earthquake experienced in this city in fourteen years occurred at 4:25 A. M. to-day. It was accompanied by a loud rumbling noise. The higher buildings in the city were severely shaken, but no serious damage was done. A high wave struck the ocean front soon after the shock, but no damage was done to shipping. A lighter shock followed the first a few seconds later.

San Jacinto is the terminus of a branch of the California Southern Railway, and the chief town of the San Jacinto Valley. Hemet is a small town on the California Southern Road, lying about two miles southwest of San Jacinto. The latter town has a population of about 2,000, and contains brick blocks, brick school houses, and churches, and many other indications of substantial growth. The place is said to be the nearest self-supporting of any in Riverside County. It has its own limekilns, manufactures its own lumber and brick, and produces almost everything necessary for the physical needs of man.

The Hemet Valley Reservoir, twenty-five miles southeast of San Jacinto, at an elevation of 4,500 feet, is one of the finest structures of its kind in existence.

California has known frequent earthquakes in the past, a fringe of extinct volcanoes lining the Pacific Ocean determining the lines of activity of seismic movements. The last severe earthquake in the State was on March 26, 1872, the centre of the disturbance being in Inyo County. The town of Lone Pine was totally wrecked and twenty-seven of its inhabitants were killed. At Swansea, Independence, and Cerro Gordo a few persons were killed, many injured, and a great number of buildings destroyed.

HONORS FOR THE MAINE DEAD.

Victims of the Explosion in Havana Harbor to be Interred in Arlington Cemetery Thursday.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 25.—The remains of the dead of the Maine will arrive here to-morrow and be interred at Arlington Cemetery Thursday at 11 o'clock in the presence of President McKinley, most of the members of his Cabinet, and a large contingent of army and navy officers, and others. The funeral rites over the dead will be performed by Chaplain Chidwick, who was attached to the Maine when she was blown up in Havana Harbor. The Chaplain of the Naval Academy will assist him. A pretty grassy knoll near where the Santiago dead rest has been selected as the burial place for the remains of the dead seamen.

Relatives and friends have claimed twenty-two of the bodies and will give them private interment under an arrangement with the Navy Department, which has taken charge of the burial of all the bodies either unidentified or unclaimed.

Assistant Secretary Allen to-day, in explaining the course of the department, said: "It is the desire of Secretary Long that the wishes of all the relatives of those who died on the Maine to give them a private burial be complied with, and Chaplain Chidwick, who superintended the disinterment of the bodies, was instructed to prepare lists of the identified remains in order that this might be done. There are 166 caskets, and many of them contain bodies which have been identified and will be sent to those claiming them. The unidentified and unclaimed bodies will be buried at Arlington, and the graves of those identified will be marked by headstones."

BODIES REACH NEWPORT NEWS.

Battleship Texas Steams Into Port with the Dead.

NEWPORT NEWS, Va., Dec. 25.—The battleship Texas, in command of Capt. Sigsbee, arrived here shortly before noon to-day with the remains of the men who lost their lives by the destruction of the battleship Maine, in Havana Harbor. The bodies of the Maine heroes, which were brought up on the Texas, will be transferred to a Chesapeake and Ohio train to-morrow at 12 o'clock and will be taken to Washington.

The Rev. Father Chidwick, who was Chaplain on the Maine, is in charge of the remains of the dead seamen, and will accompany them to Washington. Not more than a score of the bodies on the Texas were identified. The names of these are inscribed on the coffins which inclose their remains. There were no ceremonies here to-day in honor of the arrival of the Maine's dead, but impressive exercises will take place to-morrow when the bodies are transferred from the ship to the train.

The funeral train will arrive in Washington to-morrow at midnight.

DIED FOR A FRIEND.

One Man, in Attempting to Rescue Another, Is Killed.

BINGHAMTON, N. Y., Dec. 25.—Manning Smith, forty-three years old, a wood chopper, of this city, but lately employed at Kirkwood, N. Y., spent Christmas in Binghamton with relatives. While waiting at the Erie Station for a train upon which to return to Kirkwood at about 3:30 o'clock this afternoon, a friend of his, who was intoxicated, wandered from the platform and started to cross the yards. Smith, fearing for his friend's safety, overtook him and tried to get him out of the maze of tracks and switches, but in the endeavor was himself run down by a switch engine and ground to pieces.

Smith was a widower and leaves three boys, who reside with their grandfather, at Towanda, Penn.

No Delay at Grand Central Station.
There is a through train every hour for the West by New York Central Lines, and two-cent mileage tickets are good on each of them.—Adv.

SALVATION ARMY'S BOUNTY

Thousands of the Unfortunate Fed at Madison Square Garden.

THE RICH SAW THEM FEAST

Joined in Singing "Praise God, from Whom All Blessings Flow"—Food Sent to 3,200 Homes.

"Welcome to God's poor" and "Whosoever will may come" were the mottoes under which the biggest Christmas feast ever given in New York took place yesterday at Madison Square Garden. During the day nearly 20,000 men, women, and children, gathered from the highways and byways of the city in one great, surging, hungry throng, and under the glare of electric lights, amid fruits and flowers and the strains of sweet music, ate their fill without money and without price.

In the boxes and gallery of the great building during the evening, when the feast was at its height, sat many thousands of well-fed and prosperous people, among them many women who had come in carriages and were gorgeously gowned and wore many diamonds, who looked on in happy sympathy. Mingling with and flitting through the throngs everywhere were the red jackets, the high crowned caps and peculiar bonnets of the soldiers in the Salvation Army, the organizers of the undertaking, which of its kind has never been equaled in magnitude by any city.

The Salvation Army had been preparing for the event for many weeks. On street corners all over the greater city had been stationed day after day members of the organization, each with a pot swinging from a tripod bearing a placard setting forth the plans for a Christmas feast, and closing with the adjuration, "Keep the pot boiling." It was principally with the nickels, dimes and quarters dropped into these pots that was built the splendid bridge that yesterday spanned for one brief day at least the chasm that yawns between the rich and the poor. And yet after all this multitude had been fed and the tremendous stores of provisions had been exhausted to the last morsel, there still remained thousands of hungry mouths unfed, and men, women, and children were perforce turned back into the streets, hungry, friendless, and cold.

An idea of the multitudes that were fed can be obtained from the following list of articles used in preparing the feast: Twenty-two hundred turkeys, 5,000 chickens, 250 geese, 250 ducks, 1,000 pounds of beef and pork, 125 barrels of potatoes, 100 pounds of suckling pig, 10,000 pounds of vegetables, 35 barrels of apples, 10,000 oranges, 10 bar relieving flood. No life stories were told. The pathos of it all was in the expressions contained in the smiles of thanks.

A feature of the crowd was the number of women. Nearly all the men were old and white haired, with bent shoulders. One old woman was totally blind, and was led by a little, thinly clad girl. She was helped tenderly along the line by an army lassie and after she had received her basket, a Salvation soldier was sent to escort her home. The very oldest, the lame, and the very little children, as they received their baskets, had money for car fare slipped into their hands. Many of the ticket holders brought baskets, not knowing that they would be provided, and, strangely enough, many of these receptacles would have been far too small to have held what the ready packed baskets contained.

So perfect was the system of distribution that the entire 3,200 baskets had been disposed of before 1 o'clock. Then the preparations were resumed in earnest for the great feast of the evening. This was for whomsoever was hungry and would come and eat. The long white lines of the tables were further decorated with glasses of celery, bunches of flowers, and here and there a giant turkey or a chubby brown roast pig.

A big orchestra further cheered the cheerful laborers in the afternoon with strains of popular music. The great field of tables was divided into four sections, each in charge of a general officer, with fifty assistants, as follows: No. 1, Col. (Mrs.) Bremer and her fifty officers, who work with her in the slums; No. 2, Col. Sowton and the Scandinavian Corps; No. 3, Staff Captain Howell and the Social Corps; No. 4, Brigadier Chandler and the field staff, which conducts the devotional work. These forces were drilled to act exclusively as waiters, and besides them were the cooks, carvers, servers, and scores of other happy workers, who filled the great building with a buzz of industry.

The hour set for the feast was 5:30 o'clock, and long before this time the crowds began to gather at the two entrances to the building. To the Madison Avenue entrance came the spectators of the extraordinary scene, in which they themselves were to add to its remarkable character. They were to furnish the lighter shade to the picture, with their air of contentment and prosperity, and perchance sympathy. The Salvation Army, always acting on strictly business principles, had fixed a price for admission to the building, and this was cheerfully paid.

THOSE WHO CAME TO EAT.

At the other entrance to the Garden gathered the pilgrims from the illimitable abodes of poverty and wretchedness. The police, under Capt. Price, had charge of this expectant, patient throng in Fourth Avenue. There was much good-natured chaffing and merriment, though the vagrant wind saluted its vagrant brothers and by its whispered breath kept the thinly clad line huddled closely together.

The Madison Avenue crowd, by thousands, entered first. At 4:30 o'clock Capt. Frost and his thirty cooks who for days had been at work on the mammoth feast, had put on the finishing touches and bade the police admit the hungry multitude in Fourth Avenue. In they came with an orderly rush, and were admitted to the upper galleries, until 2,200 had been seated there. Then the line was stopped for only 2,200 could be seated at the tables at once. All the lower seats had been taken by those who had come to see the spectacle of thousands being made happy.

At 5:40 o'clock the first 2,200 guests were conducted to the tables. Then there was a trumpet's note for silence. Commander Booth-Tucker stood on a platform and requested every one to arise and sing the Doxology. Then fully 10,000 people joined in one mighty chorus of "Praise God from Whom All Blessings Flow."

It was a moving incident. On the floor were the young and the old, honest and respectable, but poor; beside them the shiftless and criminal, black and white, healthy and diseased; the young man from the interior stranded in the city in a heart-breaking search for fame and fortune; the thief and ex-convict, the derelicts on the ever rushing stream of city life. In the boxes and lower seats was the great concourse of the prosperous and happy—men in high hats, women in costly wraps—position and fortune forgotten for one brief moment while all sang in unison "Praise God from Whom All Blessings Flow."

Then the feast began, and happiness reigned supreme. Some of those who looked on were the Rev. Dr. Parkhurst, the Rev. Dr. A. B. Simpson, the Rev. Dr. Wilson, the Rev. Dr. Ratcliffe, Gen. James R. O'Beirne, Dr. S. C. Klopsch, and the Countess Schimmelman.

A party of well-known bookmakers occupied a box, among them being "Sol" Mehrbach "Bob" Aikens, and "Doc" Aikens. They looked on in sympathy during the evening. Several pretty lassies were sent to interview them, and when they returned they passed over a number of crisp bank bills to Commander Booth-Tucker.

INCIDENTS OF THE FEAST.

The incidents of the great feast were so numerous and followed so quickly in succession that it was difficult to follow them. It does not take a hungry person long to eat even a Christmas dinner. Time and again army workers recognized old-timers, who had some time in bygone days turned temporarily aside from their evil ways, but had fallen again by the wayside. The welcome for these prodigal sons and daughters was warmer, if possible, than for the rest.

One young man with dark shifting eyes and rather short hair stood back, as if it was his first experience at a charity dinner. For a moment he was not noticed. He turned as if about to go out, when a Salvation soldier seized him by the hand. "God bless you, Tom," he exclaimed, as he took the young fellow's hand and led him to a seat and saw that his plate was filled. The soldier, when asked, would not say who or what the man was. Capt. Price said he had but recently left prison.

There were hundreds of women among the diners. Many were bright looking and neatly dressed, with honest faces, whose only crime was that of being poor. There were entire families seated together, and here and there a woman and her children. Some of the men wore tattered clothing, but had clean faces and hair nicely brushed. Others in rags still clung to a high standing collar and cravat. There were men and women who had seen better days, and others who had not. But all were hungry, and all were happy, for a brief space, at least.

There was no limit to the food. The bill of fare consisted of roast turkey, celery, potatoes, vegetables, cranberry sauce, plum pudding, fruit, and coffee. The table service was first-class, and included paper napkins.

While the first 2,200 were eating Commander Booth-Tucker read the following message from Gov. Roosevelt:

"Hearty thanks. Warm Christmas greeting and good wishes to all."

It was in reply to one wishing the Governor and his family a merry day. The telegram was much cheered.

FOOD SUPPLY GAVE OUT.

The one unfortunate feature of the dinner was the exhaustion of the food supply. Twice the table capacity of 2,200 was tested, and 4,400 were fed. Then some 300 more were provided for on reduced rations; but a throng estimated at nearly 3,000 was turned away without anything. The officers of the army did their utmost to prevent this. With baskets they skirmished about the houses and hotels of the neighborhood in a vain effort to obtain the necessary food.

After the dinner Commander Booth-Tucker addressed the recipients of the army's bounty as follows:

"In the name of the citizens of New York and the Salvation Army I wish you a Merry Christmas and a Happy New Year. Whatever your circumstances, your nationality, or your religion, we wish you good luck in the name of the Lord.

"It is to this end the Salvation Army exists; it is the Church of the People, the enemy of none. So far as our Christmas efforts are concerned, I wish to give thanks to a generous public and a loyal press, and I am glad to report a victory. We started to feed 20,000, and have fed over 24,000. [This included the baskets of food sent out.] It is the most mammoth affair of the kind ever attempted.

"Neither any Continental city nor even London has ever had to do anything approaching this in magnitude. It means the dawning of a new era, the bridging of the gulf between the rich and the poor."

The Commander was frequently applauded. At the close of his speech everybody sang "Nearer, My God, to Thee," and then there was a recital in unison of the Lord's Prayer. After some more singing of hymns the "Passion Play" was reproduced by the cinematograph. This was followed by a stereopticon exhibition of Salvation Army work.

DINNERS FOR CLEVELAND'S POOR.

Provided by Salvation Army—Address by Senator Hanna.

CLEVELAND, Dec. 25.—The Salvation Army fed many of the poor of the city today. In the morning clothing, together with baskets each containing the materials for a Christmas dinner for five persons, were distributed among needy families from the Y. M. C. A. Building. At 11:30 o'clock 2,500 other poor people, many of them street boys, were given a Christmas dinner in the Grays' armory. Before the dinner Col. Holz of the Salvation Army introduced Senator Hanna for a speech.

The Senator heartily extended the greetings of the season to those present, and paid a warm tribute of praise to the men and women of the Salvation Army. "As citizens," he declared, "we can never show the appreciation they are entitled to. God bless them." He then thanked the many people who contributed to the fund which enabled the army to provide a happy Christmas this year for many in Cleveland who otherwise would not have had it.

"Their giving was not charity," he said. "It was the overflowing of kindness in the hearts of the people. To such sentiment we look for the future of our city, our State, and our country, and the civilization of the world. I wish you all a happy feast."

"God bless the Senator!" shouted Col. Holz.

"Amen!" yelled the boys. Then the good things on the tables began to disappear.

In the evening the Salvation Army had a built-up Christmas tree thirty feet high in the armory. A toy and a box of candy were given to more than 200 poor children.

Eight Thousand Fed in Cincinnati.

CINCINNATI, Dec. 25.—The Salvation Army fed 3,500 poor at a dinner to-day, and also distributed 1,500 baskets of provisions, which together are equivalent to giving a dinner to 8,000 poor people.

THE HOLIDAY IN BROOKLYN.

An Unusual Outpouring of Bounty to the Poor and Unfortunate of the Borough.

Brooklyn outdid herself in benevolence yesterday. Not in many years had there been so general and generous an effort to make happy the day to the poor and the friendless of the great community of homes and churches.

The chief event of the day among the children was the annual Christmas entertainment, feast, and distribution of presents under the auspices of the Brooklyn Christmas Tree Society. Something like 2,000 children were entertained by the society. There were two entertainments, one at the Grand Opera House and the other at the Park Theatre.

Immediately after the entertainments the children were taken to the old Thirteenth Regiment Armory, where they were treated to turkey, pie, cake, oranges, and other good things. Toys and other gifts were distributed at the armory.

The Christmas Tree Society was assisted by the Salvation Army.

The inmates of the various county buildings were treated to the usual Christmas feasts and entertainments. The prisoners at the Kings County Penitentiary and at Raymond Street Jail enjoyed good dinners, while at the former institution there was also an entertainment.

The Band of Willing Workers, composed of little girls, distributed Christmas gifts among the children confined in the Shelter of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children, on Schermerhorn Street. There was also a distribution of gifts among the orphan children at St. John's Home, on Albany Avenue. At the Brooklyn Home for Aged Men and Women, the Brooklyn Orphan Asylum, St. Malachi's Home, the Newsboys' Home, the House of the Good Shepherd, and other institutions, the day was observed in various pleasant forms.

The tars and marines at the navy yard had their usual Christmas dinner of turkey, plum duff, and other good things. There were the customary games on board the warships at the yard and in the evening there was a fine concert on the receiving ship Vermont.

FATAL AFFRAYS IN DALLAS.

A Succession of Tragedies; Unparalleled in Many Years.

DALLAS, Texas, Dec. 25.—Dallas has not known so many bloody affrays in a single day in many years as have been recorded to-day.

Charles Miller shot Walter Meyers dead in the street, and fled. Later he surrendered and claimed he fired in self-defense.

Albert Hall quarreled with two brothers named Edward and Murray Cecil, and shot both of them. Edward Cecil is reported dying; Murray will recover. Hall is a fugitive.

A negro, name not known to the police, partially wrecked a Chinese restaurant in Gray Street with a dynamite cracker. He returned later and hit the proprietor, Dock Goun, on the head with a brick. As the Chinaman turned to get a pistol the negro ran away. The Chinaman fired at the first negro in sight, and killed J. Thomas, a passerby. The Chinaman is in jail.

John McMillan and Clay Patton are suffering from bullet wounds, and Z. Phillipps had a leg broken in three places by a bullet. They are white men, and were attacked in different parts of the city by men who escaped and whose identity is not known to the police.

SHOT DOWN AT HIS DOOR.

Jersey City Saloon Keeper Killed by Motorman at Dawn of Christmas —Self-Defense Alleged.

The peace of Christmastide was marred in Jersey City by a tragedy which occurred at 3 o'clock yesterday morning. The victim, Nicholas Schmidt, was shot in his saloon, 1,134 Summit Avenue, by Theodore Brunnert, a motorman on the Jersey City, Hoboken and Rutherford Electric Railroad, whose home is at Homestead, North Bergen Township. He is twenty-three years old and unmarried. Schmidt was fifty-three years old. He leaves a wife, five sons, and one daughter, Lizzie, fifteen years old. They live over the saloon. The daughter and her brother Martin, thirty years old, witnessed the tragedy. Miss Schmidt, who had just completed trimming a Christmas tree for her younger brothers, was about to retire when she heard a noise in the saloon. She ran down stairs and saw her father struggling with a man. She called Martin, who attempted to help his father. Just as they had ejected the man he drew a pistol, the girl alleges, and shot Schmidt, after which he fled.

Police Inspector Archibald, who was summoned, at once sent a policeman to the power house at Secaucus with a description of the man. There his identity was learned. Half an hour later he was found in bed at his home and placed under arrest. He did not know till then that Schmidt was dead.

When arraigned at the Webster Avenue Police Station Brunnert said he had acted in self-defense. He had fallen asleep in the saloon, and was aroused by Schmidt, at what hour he could not say. Schmidt told him to go home. Not being fully awake, he refused to go. Schmidt, as he alleged, called his son, and together they sought to eject him. He resisted. Then they knocked him down with a club and beat and kicked him. As he lay on the floor he drew his revolver and fired, he said.

Brunnert's appearance bore out his statement that he was beaten. When the police searched Schmidt's saloon they found a broken club behind the bar.

Dr. Stephen V. H. Stout, who was called to examine Schmidt's body, found that he had been shot through the heart. County Physician Converse was notified and will order an inquest.

CHARLES SHELLEY ARRESTED.

Aged Hotel Man Accused of Annoying Women on the Street.

Charles Shelley, eighty-two years old, who described himself as "a Southern gentleman," was arrested at Broadway and Twenty-eighth Street late last evening by Policeman Smith of the West Thirtieth Street Station for annoying passers-by, especially women. The prisoner was formerly proprietor of the Brunswick Hotel in this city, and also had a hotel in Washington. He is still in active business, being connected with the management of the Manhattan Beach Hotel.

He said he had been dining with friends at the Fifth Avenue Hotel. He was locked up, and when searched room-key 372 of the Metropolitan Hotel was found in one of his pockets.

OSCAR WILDE MAY FIGHT.

After a Quarrel Exchanges Cards with a French Explorer.

PARIS, Dec. 25.—Oscar Wilde, who has for some time been living in Paris, may have to fight a duel. According to the Echo de Paris, he became involved in an altercation in a restaurant last evening with M. Richet, the explorer, and as a result cards were exchanged.

Steamer's Deckhouse Carried Away.

The French steamer Chateau Lafite that arrived in this port yesterday anchored off Liberty Island. She reported having encountered a fierce gale that carried away her after deckhouse.

SHORT SESSION AT ALBANY

Republican Leaders Will Shut Off All Unnecessary Legislation.

THEIR PROGRAMME ARRANGED

Charter Revision, Tax Law Reform, and Action on Insurance Superintendency Among the Features.

All indications point to a short session of the Legislature, which will convene in Albany on Jan. 3. The Republican organization leaders, who are in control in both houses, have determined that all business shall be finished and final adjournment taken before April 1. They have outlined the programme to be carried out, and will frown upon all attempts of legislators to introduce a large number of measures which might interfere with the organization plans and delay adjournment.

The principal reason assigned by those who are in Senator Platt's confidence for his desire to have a short session is that 1900 is "convention year." National and State campaigns are to be fought, and the leaders will have many affairs to occupy their attention without prolonging the legislative session. It is said, also, that the Republicans do not want any bills introduced which might have a tendency to raise State issues, preferring to go before the people next Fall on National questions alone, trusting to them to carry the State for their ticket.

According to the present plans, the most important feature of the session promises to be the proposed amendment of the charter of this city. Gov. Roosevelt and Senator Platt have agreed that some urgent legislation is needed this Winter in reference to the charter, although the general scheme of revision will be left to the commission, which will be appointed by the Governor just as soon as the Legislature passes a bill giving him the right to take this step. The Governor said on Saturday that it was his intention to have a large commission, on which the various interests of the city would be well represented.

Another matter which will occupy much attention at Albany this Winter will be the revision of the laws relating to taxation of all kinds. Senator Stranahan, Chairman of the legislative joint committee appointed at the last session to look into the tax problem and suggest legislation with an object of making the tax laws more just and equitable, has announced that the committee would be ready to make its report to the Legislature, accompanied by a bill, not later than the middle of January. The committee has held many sessions, and Senator Stranahan says that it has received much valuable information which he believes will enable the committee to draw a bill which will be satisfactory.

The Legislature will also be called upon to deal with the educational problem. The bill prepared by the Unification Commission has met with opposition from the State Board of Regents and has not been well received by many Republicans who are affiliated with the organization. Gov. Roosevelt is understood to look with favor on the bill, and will try to have it passed. What opposition to the scheme exists within the organization is directed chiefly against the section in the bill creating a Chancellor of the State Board of Regents, to whom is to be given general supervision over the entire educational system throughout the State.

Much interest is felt in what action the Senate will take on the nomination of a successor to Louis F. Payn, as Superintendent of Insurance. Gov. Roosevelt's friends are positive in their assertions that he will not reappoint Payn. The latter has openly expressed his intention to fight for his place, and publicly stated that he was the only man who could be confirmed. It is understood that the organization will take no part in the trouble, but will leave the Governor to fight it out with Payn.

Lieut. Gov. Woodruff said last night that he would go to Albany on Saturday to be on hand for the opening of the Legislature.

Servant Found Dead in Bed.

Dr. Mary L. Edwards of 19 West Forty-sixth Street notified the Coroner's Office by telephone last night that her cook, Rose Fitzgerald, forty years old, a widow, had been found dead in her room.

The woman had retired at 10 o'clock, and half an hour later she was found dead by Annie Murphy, a servant. Dr. Edwards and Dr. Irving Townsend of 67 West Forty-sixth Street, who were called in, agreed that the cause of death had probably been heart disease.

Dr. Edwards knew, however, that the woman had been using chloroform and laudanum for a toothache, and feared she might have taken an overdose. An autopsy will be held. The police made a careful search for any indication of suicide, but found none.

FIRE HORSE IMPALED ON SHAFT.

Patrol Wagon, at Full Speed, and Garbage Cart Come in Collision.

Fire Patrol No. 3, which has headquarters in Thirtieth Street, between Seventh and Eighth Avenues, was going full tilt to a small fire in West Fifty-first Street last night, when a garbage wagon got in its way at Fortieth Street and Eighth Avenue. There was a collision, and one of the patrol horses was impaled on the tongue of the garbage wagon.

The garbage cart was being driven eastward by Matthew Finnelly of 419 Tenth Avenue. He was crossing Eighth Avenue as the fire patrol, driven by John J. Duffy, came toward him. For some reason Finnelly did not turn out.

In the collision one of the fire patrol horses struck the pole of the other wagon squarely end on. It ran into the animal's body. The other horses fell in a heap and the garbage wagon was overturned. In order to get the impaled horse free the pole had to be sawed off. The horse was taken away in an ambulance of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals.

Finnelly was arrested on the complaint of Driver Duffy.

Ohio Child Murderess Pardoned.

COLUMBUS, Ohio, Dec. 25.—Mrs. Mary Garrett, one of the most noted women prisoners in the Ohio Penitentiary, was pardoned to-day. She entered the prison Oct. 5, 1888, under sentence of death, carrying a babe in her arms, having been convicted of cremating her two imbecile step-children at Spencer, Medina County. Gov. Foraker commuted her sentence to life imprisonment.

CHAMPION CALF SKINNER DEAD.

Body of Paul Grace of Washington Market Found in a Saloon.

Paul Grace, forty-five years old, for years known as the champion calf skinner in and around Washington Market, died last night in Morris Kuhn's saloon at 46 Gansevoort Street.

Grace had been living in Mills Hotel No. 1. He had not been around Kuhn's place for months, but was well enough known there to get a room to sleep off his intoxication when yesterday afternoon he dropped into the place.

He was alone by himself until 7:35 o'clock, when one of the bartenders who had timed him concluded he must be about sober enough to get out and he went in to awaken him. He discovered that Grace was dead.

It is said Grace could skin a calf while some men were getting their knives ready. He was seldom ever known to cut a pelt and always considered himself disgraced if such an accident happened.

WOODEN INDIAN WAS THERE.

Runaway Cab Horse Brought Up Instanter by His Strong Arm.

The brave policemen who sometimes risk their lives to stop runaway horses have a new and dangerous rival, but this rivalry is only for a share in the perils. As the police force is now constituted, the rival stands no show of promotion. Indeed, he is not eligible to membership, so of course he can never be Chief. He is a wooden Indian.

His station has long been in front of a cigar shop in Twenty-fourth Street, east of Eighth Avenue. For years he has stood there, holding his bunch of cigars and with convincing though mute eloquence induced patrons to step within and buy. But there comes a time in everybody's life when opportunity offers one great chance to win fame. The Indian had his chance last night.

John Sheridan of 358 West Twenty-fifth Street had been standing in Fifth Avenue with his hansom cab when he received two fares, a man and his wife. In driving them to their destination he had to go through Twenty-fourth Street. Just after crossing Seventh Avenue his horse took fright and with the bit in his teeth bolted west. The horse ran at a mad gallop and Sheridan's efforts to stop him were futile. The man and his wife tried frantically to open the doors and jump, but fortunately for them Sheridan kept the doors closed and they finally escaped injury.

About 100 feet east of Eighth Avenue the horse took the sidewalk. As he did so the cab almost capsized and Sheridan left his seat as if fired from a catapult. He landed on his feet, however, and, aside from a footwarming escaped with slight bruises.

The horse continued on his wild plunge. In running the animal had swayed his head from side to side, and in some way loosened the bridle checkrein so it formed a loop. As the frightened animal ran straight for the window of the cigar shop it grazed the Indian, and the latter's outstretched arm caught the flying loop. No horse was ever stopped so quickly or as effectively by a policeman.

Knowing that some people have such an affection for wooden Indians as to sometimes carry them off in wagons, the proprietor of this cigar store has his chained securely to the iron grating in the walk. The horse was drawn up so suddenly and withal so well that it reared and fell on his haunches and was quickly seized by some citizens. The Indian escaped unscathed.

The man and woman boarded an Eighth Avenue electric car and went up town. They had had enough of cabs for one night.

MOODY MEMORIAL SERVICES.

Will Take Place in Calvary Baptist Church This Afternoon.

Memorial services for Dwight L. Moody will be held at 2:30 this afternoon in Calvary Baptist Church, in West Fifty-seventh Street. The services will be held at the same hour as the funeral services to be held at Northfield, Mass. It was at first intended to hold the services in Carnegie Hall, but the committee had no money at its disposal, and when Dr. MacArthur offered the church of which he is pastor it was accepted.

The Rev. Frank Rogers Morse, assistant pastor of Calvary Church, will preside. Addresses will be made by the Rev. Dr. MacArthur, the Rev. Dr. Merle Smith, the Rev. Dr. John Balcom Shaw, the Rev. H. M. Warren, C. E. Harrell, one of Mr. Moody's students, and some other clergymen not yet decided upon.

Overflow services will be held in the rooms of the West Side Young Men's Christian Association, in the Church of the Strangers, and in Dr. Smith's Church, the Central Presbyterian.

Two Ships in Collision.

The barkentine Kremlin came in yesterday from Fort Spain and just after dropping anchor off Clifton was run into by the coasting schooner Samuel B. Hubbard, bound outward. The Hubbard got her spanker damaged by the barkentine's foreyard. The tug James A. Lawrence towed the schooner clear and anchored her near by.

FRACTURED SKULL A MYSTERY.

Man Found in a Mount Vernon Hotel Says Somebody Struck Him.

MOUNT VERNON, N. Y., Dec. 25.—Joseph Tussel, seventy-one years of age, of 31 Stevens Avenue, Mount Vernon, was found in a dying condition at the foot of a stairway in John Aparando's Hotel at 4 o'clock to-day. He was taken to the Mount Vernon Hospital.

Aparando said that Tussel applied for a room in the hotel three days ago. He spent the night in the hotel and left in the morning. He was not seen again until to-day, when he obtained a key to a room, and after being told how to reach it left the barroom. He was not seen again until found as described. He was registered at the hotel as "William Smith." Dr. Fleming, the physician at the hospital, after examining Tussel, said that he had a fracture of the skull behind the left ear, which might have been inflicted by some blunt instrument.

Coroner Banning was summoned to take Tussel's ante-mortem statement. He said that while crossing the Third Avenue bridge, over the New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad, at 3:30 this afternoon, he was struck from behind on the back of the head. The next thing he knew was when he found himself in the hospital. Aparando, the proprietor of the hotel, is also in the banking business and is wealthy. He said he did not know Tussel. The latter in his statement said he did not know how he came to be found in the hotel and said he had no remembrance of going there. The police are puzzled over the case and are making efforts to ascertain the cause of the man's injuries.

STRANGE ASSAULT IN CHICAGO.

Detective Hurled from a Viaduct, and Is Likely to Die.

CHICAGO, Dec. 25.—John Gillies, an operative connected with a private detective agency, is at the County Hospital, probably fatally hurt. According to the story he tells he was hurled from the Twelfth Street Viaduct by two men yesterday and nearly ground to death under the wheels of an incoming train on the Grand Trunk Railway. His right leg was severed at the knee, his jaw was fractured, his cheek lacerated, and his body bruised.

The police believe Gillies refuses to tell all he knows about his adventure. When he was picked up he narrated a rambling story, in which he spoke of having been thrown in front of the engine by two men whom he knew, but whose names he could not recall. He also frequently used the word "enmity."

Later, just after the doctors had operated upon him, while under the influence of ether, Gillies said the men had been following him several days. With full consciousness restored, however, he refused to discuss the case, and the police are at a loss to know the purport of his statements.

Gillies denied that his assailants were robbers, as he says no attempt was made to take his valuables from him.

ASKS TENDER OF MEDIATION.

John V. L. Pruyn Sends Message to President McKinley.

John V. L. Pruyn of 16 East Tenth Street, Chairman of the committee to aid the Red Cross within the Boer lines, sent the following dispatch to President McKinley yesterday:

President McKinley, Washington, D. C.:
With cordial Christmas greetings, I venture to express the wish that the United States Government, as its Christmas gift to civilization, tender its good offices or their equivalent to the belligerents in South Africa, thereby preparing the way for a treaty of peace which, with full honor and friendly sentiments to Great Britain, shall forever guarantee absolute independence to our struggling sister republics.
JOHN V. L. PRUYN.

Mr. Pruyn said last evening that the committee had received about $8,000 to aid the work of the Red Cross within the Boer lines. The Netherlands Red Cross Society, which receives the funds collected in New York, is in need of more money to maintain the two ambulances sent to South Africa.

Contributions will be forwarded to Tunis G. Bergen, Treasurer of the committee, No. 55 Liberty Street.

MYSTERY AT NIAGARA FALLS.

Two Men Disappear and the Police Are Investigating.

BUFFALO, Dec. 25.—A special to The Express from Niagara Falls says that this evening two young men whose names are unknown were driven to the cliff above the promenade at the whirlpool rapids on the Canadian side of the river, and were lowered to the promenade.

Not returning in an hour a search was made for them. As no trace of the men could be found the police were notified. Footprints of the two men in the snow were followed to the extreme end of the promenade toward the whirlpool. Further along the bank there were signs of a body having fallen in the snow and the footprints of only one man could be discerned.

Owing to the darkness the search had to be discontinued, but men are stationed along the river on the watch for the appearance of either of the men. The police are inclined to look on the mysterious affair as a case of murder and suicide or double suicide.

Holland Boat Test To-morrow.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 25.—An official test of the Holland submarine torpedo boat, now at the navy yard, will take place Wednesday on the Potomac River. Naval officials and the Congressional Naval Committees will be invited to witness the trial.

Funeral of a City Hospital Nurse.

Christmas on Blackwell's Island was saddened yesterday by the funeral of Margaret Alice Burr, twenty-five years old, a nurse in the City Hospital. Miss Burr died there on Saturday, and her body was taken yesterday to her former home in Troy. The thirty nurses and six doctors in the hospital marched in their uniforms to the dock and stood uncovered until the boat conveying the body was in midstream.

Mills Must Not Run Overtime.

FALL RIVER, Mass., Dec. 25.—The State Factory Inspectors have received orders to inform mills now running overtime that the practice must stop, under penalty of legal proceedings. The order came from Chief Wade of the State force, and it is supposed it is the result of the opinion of Attorney General Knowlton on the question as to whether or not the fifty-eight-hour law was being violated.

Erastus F. Holden Dead.

SYRACUSE, Dec. 2.—Erastus Franklin Holden, one of the most prominent citizens of Syracuse, died this evening, aged 73 years. He suffered an attack of rheumatism in London, England, ten years ago, and never fully recovered. Mr. Holden was born at Charlotte, N. Y. He began life as a carpenter, and later entered the coal business. He was a Director of the Syracuse, Binghamton and New York Railroad. He was the donor of the Holden Observatory to Syracuse University and gave largely to hsspitals.

Joubert Never in Confederate Army.

From The Baltimore Sun.

Dr. J. William Jones, chaplain of the United Confederate Veterans, does not think Gen. Joubert was a Confederate or on the staff of Stonewall Jackson, as has been asserted. He said: "I have carefully examined the roster of Louisiana regiments of Taylor's (afterward Hays') Louisiana Brigade, of Ewell's Division, Jackson's Corps, Army of Northern Virginia, and no such name as Joubert appears on the list of Colonels. Indeed, I do not find his name in any Confederate report to which I have had access, and if he was in the Confederate Army at all, which I very much doubt, it must have been in some very subordinate place. And it is certainly true that whatever may be Gen. Joubert's merits as a soldier, he does not follow the tactics of Stonewall Jackson."

Family Records.

From The New York Weekly.

Mother, (in her daughter's boudoir)—I like that young man exceedingly. While he was in the parlor waiting for you I happened to go in and surprised him reading the Bible. The silly boy looked dreadfully confused, just as if true piety were something to be ashamed of. I soon set his mind at rest on that point, and he seemed quite relieved.

The Young Man (at the club)—That girl is thirty years old. I saw it in their family Bible.

Mark=Down Sale of Overcoats.

We put on sale this morning at all our stores a lot of fine Blue Kersey Overcoats. STUDENT STRIKES AN USHER.

Vogel's Sister, an Invalid, Prostrated at Wallack's in Consequence.

Martin B. Vogel, twenty-one years old, a law student, living at 100 East Eightieth Street, had an altercation with James Miller, an usher at Wallack's Theatre, last night, in the course of which he struck Miller with his fist, knocking him over one of the chairs. His sister, who is an invalid, was with him at the time, and was so prostrated by the affair that she had to be taken home in a carriage, while Vogel was arrested and taken to the West Thirtieth Street Police Station on Miller's charge of assault.

Vogel and his sister reached the theatre early, but the house soon became crowded and the usher found that they were occupying seats that belonged to others. He asked them to move, and Vogel refused to do so. Rather than have any trouble he and his sister were permitted to remain where they were, after a wordy quarrel in which Vogel said he would not be bullied.

The performance over, he caught sight of Miller standing in the aisle up which they passed and the altercation was resumed. Vogel apologized to Miller when they reached the station house, and explained that his anxiety over Miss Vogel's condition had caused him to act as he did. Several friends of Vogel came to the station, too, and insisted that Miller had deserved all he got. Miller finally consented to withdraw his charge, and

BULLER CHECKS THE BOERS

Destroys the Colenso Bridge to Stop Their Advance.

LADYSMITH STILL UNDER FIRE

Natives Assert that the Transvaal Forces Lost 200 in Killed at the Battle of Tugela River.

LONDON, Dec. 25.—A dispatch from Chieveley, dated Tuesday, Dec. 19, says:

"The British naval guns have destroyed the Colenso footbridge, thus preventing the Boers holding any position south of the Tugela River. The enemy are taking up fresh positions on the eastern side, nearer the British camp.

"The British position at Frere is being strengthened. The Tugela River is rising and there is a prospect of heavy rains.

"A two-hour bombardment of Ladysmith has been heard from here. According to reliable native reports, the Boers had 200 killed in the fight at Colenso."

The news that the Colenso footbridge has been destroyed seems to show that Gen. Buller is more anxious to keep the enemy at bay than to attempt a further advance.

Despite the severity of the censorship, hints are being continually received of the serious spread of Dutch disaffection in both the Queenstown District of Cape Colony and Natal. A correspondent of the Daily Mail at Pietermaritzburg says:

"The extent of Dutch disaffection should make the imperial authorities realize the magnitude of the task before them."

There are unconfirmed reports from Cape Town that Gen. Sir Charles Warren, commanding the Fifth Division, has returned there.

Commandant Demeillon, who was taken prisoner at Elandslaagte and brought to Simonstown, where he was confined on the British cruiser Penelope, has succeeded in making his escape.

The War Office is issuing lists of further deaths and wounds, as well as accounts of sickness. The most serious report of the last class is that horse sickness has broken out in both British and Boer camps in Natal.

Four hundred British cavalry horses, it is said, have already been shot owing to the prevalence of glanders. The disease is likely to spread with much greater rapidity among the British horses than among the hardy Boer ponies, and this may mean a considerable prolongation of the campaign.

Horse sickness in South Africa generally appears during the latter part of January and lasts three months. The present outbreak is unusually early.

The Times this morning makes the following announcement:

"We are informed that the Government has decided that it is not desirable to make further demands upon the European garrison in India unless unforeseen difficulties arise."

An undated heliograph message from Ladysmith, by way of Pietermaritzburg, represents the garrison as in no way daunted by Gen. Buller's reverse at Colenso, and as confident of being able to hold out indefinitely.

The mails are just arriving from Ladysmith. All the correspondents comment bitterly upon the superiority of the Boer artillery.

The Times correspondent says:

"It is impossible to evade the opinion that, if British gunners were in the Boer positions, the loss of life and damage to property in Ladysmith would be ten times greater."

The holidays have brought no surcease of recruiting activity. Lord Alwyne Frederick Compton, Unionist member of Parliament for Biggleswade Division of Bedfordshire, will raise a corps of mounted men. Lord Salisbury's private secretary, Mr. Schomberg McDonnell, who is a volunteer officer, has volunteered for service.

The action of the United States Government causes considerable discussion regarding the contraband question as affecting Delagoa Bay and Portugal. Widely divergent opinions are expressed. The Daily Graphic, in an editorial on the subject, says:

"We believe that every provision has been made in British treaties with the United States for dealing with this matter. In the special circumstances of the present war the Government is bound to regard food as contraband. No doubt the question can be satisfactorily settled by paying compensation for the seizures of American flour.

"The question of neutrality, however, is more serious, and Great Britain's duty is to have the Lorenzo Marques-Transvaal Railway watched by capable agents, and to warn Portugal that she will be held liable in damages for assistance to the Boers by means of the railway."

The Morning Post, on the contrary, argues that the Government would be mad to treat food as contraband, as "such action would play into the hands of all possible future enemies of Great Britain."

It admits however, that steps should be taken and money expended to search vessels and to prevent munitions of war entering the Transvaal by way of Portuguese territory.

The Standard says:

"We do not doubt that this matter is receiving the Government's serious attention. As the campaign develops it may become necessary to seize the railway at Komati Poort."

The first batch of Boer prisoners has arrived in England. It is announced that the Government has accepted another offer of a squadron of Canadian Rough Riders.

BOERS TELL OF BULLER'S LOSS

PRETORIA, Dec. 17.—Over 500 British prisoners, captured at the battle of Stormberg, have arrived here. They have been taken to Waterfall, to join the other prisoners. An official account of the Boer casualties at the battle of Tugela River says thirty men were killed or wounded.

Gen. Schalk-Burger's report of the battle, dispatched from the head laager, Dec. 16, says:

"Friday, at dawn, the day long expected arrived. The Pretoria detachment of artillery gave the alarm. Gen. Buller's Ladysmith relief column was in battle array, advancing on the Boer positions, close to the Tugela and Colenso. The centre consisted of an immense crowd of infantry, flanked on each side by two batteries, with strong bodies of cavalry supporting. The Boer artillery preserved absolute silence, not disclosing its position. Two batteries came within rifle range of our foremost position, and the Boers then opened fire with deadly effect. Our artillery also commenced, and apparently absolutely confused the enemy, who were allowed to think the bridge was open for them to cross.

"Their right flank, in the meantime, attacked the Boers' southernmost position, but the Mauser rifle fire was so tremendous that they were rolled back like a spent wave, leaving ridges and ridges of dead and dying humanity behind. Again the British advanced to the attack, but again fell back, swelling the heaps of dead. Their cavalry charged to the river, where the Ermolo Commando delivered such a murderous fire that two batteries of cannon had to be abandoned, which the Boers are going to bring here. Twice the British essayed to bring horses to remove them. The first time they succeeded in hitching on to one cannon, and on the second trial the horses and men fell in a heap.

"Then the British were in full retreat to their camp, whence they sent a heavy shrapnel fire on Bulwer Bridge, across the Tugela, to prevent the burghers from recovering the cannon.

"The French Attaché, Villebois, and the German Attaché, Braun, say the fight could not have been improved upon by the armies of Europe.

"Gens. Botha and Trichart were always at the most dangerous points of the fighting.

"Eleven ambulances removed the English dead and wounded.

"Such a tremendous cannonade has seldom been heard. The veldt, for miles, was covered with dead and wounded. It was a most crushing British defeat. Nine of the cannon have since been brought across the river.

"The British asked for and were granted a twenty-four hours' armistice."

BISHOPS ON THE TRANSVAAL WAR.

Special to The New York Times.

ALBANY, Dec. 25.—In their Christmas sermons to-day Bishop Doane, Episcopal, and Bishop Burke, Roman Catholic, touched upon the war in South Africa. Bishop Doane said that righteousness would bring about peace, and added:

"The attitude that America has taken in her recent struggle is a righteous one, inasmuch as she came to the aid of the oppressed and downtrodden and assumed their burdens. Great Britain's cause is one of righteousness because she went to war as the result of an endeavor to right the wrongs of her people in South Africa."

Bishop Burke spoke of the feast of the Nativity and deplored the fact that the last of the century, the jubilee year, would see several of the greatest nations on earth engaged in war. "Pope Leo," he said, "was the disciple of the Prince of Peace and had used his influence to avert the war between this country and Spain. He, the Vicar of Christ on earth, was even excluded from the International Peace Congress. Through the objections of Italy and the assistance of her ally, England, papal representation in the Congress was refused. Italy objected, declaring that by the admission of a representative of the Papacy the temporal power and the temporal sovereignty of the Pope would be recognized.

"The Peace Congress met, and Italy, with the aid of England, excluded the representative of the Holy Father.

"What has the Peace Congress established?" he asked. "England, one of the great powers represented, is now engaged in a war in South Africa. Now, on this Christmas morning, many homes in England are in mourning, and Christmas joy is replaced by sorrow for beloved ones cut down on the field of battle."

MULE DEALERS REAP A HARVEST.

Take Advantage of a British Officer's Indiscreet Statements.

Special to The New York Times.

NEW ORLEANS, Dec. 25.—The publication of facts given out by one of the British officers sent to this country to assist in purchasing mules for South Africa is said to have cost Great Britain $200,000 within the past week or ten days. Some days prior to the receipt of additional orders to buy after 7,000 mules had already been purchased a man associated with the army officer in question gave out a story to the effect that Great Britain would need nine or ten thousand more mules to equip the three additional divisions of troops. This story was printed and circulated broadcast throughout the West, with the result that the mule dealers, anticipating renewed demands for large lots, ran up the prices.

The last order placed by Capt. Marsham, the officer now in charge here, was for 2,400 mules. These have not yet been delivered here. It was on these that the mule dealers secured the rise in price.

Capt. Marsham, who has just returned from St. Louis, was found at his hotel this morning. When questioned on the matter he said that he had decided, in the light of his American newspaper experience up to date not to submit again to the American interviewer. The interviews came too high.

He added, however, that there would be enough American mules on hand to fill up the next transport due at this port in about a week. He thought that the coming transport would be able to carry about 900 animals.

Capt. Marsham did not care to say when or where he would purchase any more in the United States. Nor would he intimate that he would go elsewhere for them. There are now four transports assigned to this port to carry mules to South Africa.

Major Fowle of the Sixteenth Lancers has arrived and will accompany the next transport to Cape Town.

CHURCHILL'S ESCAPE A PUZZLE.

Borrows "Mill on Liberty," and Slips Out of Pretoria.

PRETORIA, Dec. 17.—The Government is much concerned about the escape of Winston Churchill, and the officials are doing their utmost to discover how he got away. The officials have instituted a house to house search for incriminating papers. The Volkstem asserts that he escaped disguised as a woman.

The last book Churchill borrowed from the library was "Mill on Liberty."

Canada to Send Mounted Men.

OTTAWA, Ontario, Dec. 25.—It is probable that the composition of the second Canadian contingent for South Africa will be somewhat different from what was first proposed. The imperial authorities have expressed a preference for mounted men, and the contingent will therefore consist of but two batteries of artillery and in the neighborhood of 750 mounted men.

DUTCH IN BRITISH GUIANA.

Statements in H. C. Hillegas's "Oom Paul's People"—Denied—Liberal Naturalization Laws in the Colony.

Foreign Correspondence NEW YORK TIMES.

KINGSTON, Jamaica, Dec. 14.—The citizens of British Guiana, in the enjoyment of a franchise of practically republican character, which was originally secured to the colony by treaty of capitulation; and has since then been liberally modified or extended to meet changing conditions, are indignant at a recent misrepresentation about their Constitution to which currency has been given in the United States.

Not only are the statements complained of said to be insulting to the colony itself and to Great Britain, but they are misleading as a contribution to the stock of general knowledge concerning the condition of neighboring countries.

The statement complained of by the Guiana colonists is contained in "Oom Paul's People," by Howard C. Hillegas, issued by Appleton & Co. By way of proving a charge of inconsistency against the British in their attitude to the Boers, Mr. Hillegas cites the following alleged fact, which he says "is not generally known":

"The 3,000 native Dutch voters in British Guiana have no voice in the legislative or administrative branches of the colonial Government, owing to the peculiar laws, which give to the 3,000 British citizens the complete control of the franchise. The population of the colony is 300,000, yet the 3,000 British subjects make and administer the laws for the other 297,000 inhabitants, who compose the mining and agricultural communities and are treated with the same British contempt as the Boers. The Dutch residents have made many appeals for a fuller representation in the Government, but no reforms have been inaugurated or promised."

In point of fact, it is declared, there are no "Dutch residents" in British Guiana. Some of the old family names survive, but their owners are thoroughly English, or rather creole, and the remaining strain of Dutch blood is attenuated to the vanishing point. There are not half a dozen genuine Dutchmen in the colony.

As against the other statement of Mr. Hillegas, it is only necessary to quote the following excerpt from the Colonial Constitution regarding the franchise:

* * * Every male person shall be entitled to be registered as a voter * * * who is qualified as follows:

1. Has attained the age of twenty-one years; and
2. Is under no legal incapacity; and
3. Is a British subject by birth or naturalization; and
4. Possesses within the district or division some one of the following qualifications:
   a. Ownership of three acres of land under cultivation.
   b. Ownership of house—$96 rental.
   c. Occupation of not less than six acres of land under cultivation secured by lease.
   d. Occupation of a house or house and land of the annual rental or value of not less than $192 secured by lease.
   e. Income or salary of $480 a year.
   f. Payment of direct taxes to the revenue of $20 or upward * * * provided that no license duty of any kind shall be deemed to be within the meaning of the term "direct taxes."

To become naturalized a foreigner must have resided three years in the colony, and has to pay a naturalization fee of $10.

It thus appears that in no other part of the British Empire can the foreign resident so readily become a citizen, and, it may be added, in no other part of the world can one find a more liberal franchise short of universal suffrage.

A Bank Receiver's Good Results.

From The Kansas City (Mo.) Star.

The record which Mr. John Perry has made in settling up the affairs of the insolvent Kansas City National Bank is one of which he has a right to be proud. He has paid the depositors in full and is now about ready to make the final distribution of the bank's funds in the form of interest payments of 6.55 per cent. on all the deposits in the bank at the time of the failure. The aggregate cost of the receivership was only 5 per cent. of the total sum collected, as compared with 18 per cent. average expenses for all the National bank receiverships since the system was established. The average payments of insolvent banks to creditors during the existence of the National banking system has been 62 per cent., so that Mr. Perry's achievement with the assets of the Kansas City National is indeed praiseworthy. It is an interesting fact, however, that eighty-three of the 368 National banks that have become insolvent have paid depositors in full, and fifty-nine of them have paid full interest on the money of depositors during the time it was tied up.

SKANEATELES WATER CASE

Decision Seems to Bear Some Relation to Ramapo Contest.

VIEWS OF OPPOSING COUNSEL

Mr. Sterne Finds Connection Remote—Mr. Lauterbach Says Ramapo Company Is Sustained.

A recent decision by the Court of Appeals in the case of the Skaneateles Water Works Company against the village of Skaneateles seems to have some bearing on the Ramapo water contest in this city. According to counsel opposed to the Ramapo contract the relation is remote, but according to counsel for the Ramapo people the Court of Appeals decision sustains the position they have taken.

The Skaneateles Water Works Company was organized in 1887, pursuant to Chapter 737 of the general law enacted by the Legislature in 1873 authorizing the formation of water companies by consent of the local authorities of the village interested. In 1875 the Legislature passed another law, Chapter 181, authorizing the villages of the State to furnish their inhabitants with pure and wholesome water. This statute provides in detail how a village may organize and conduct a corporation and water system of its own. It provides further that, if deemed necessary, the Board of Water Commissioners may institute condemnation proceedings to acquire the rights, privileges, grants, and properties of an existing corporation. This is optional with the village authorities only, and the existing company has no power to compel the Water Commissioners to purchase or condemn its rights and property.

The conditions under which the franchise was granted to the Skaneateles Water Works Company were that it should have its works in general operation by Dec. 1, 1889; that it should not charge or collect at any time a greater sum than $40 per annum for each hydrant; that at such rate it should furnish all the hydrants required by the village, and should not sell or transfer to non-residents of Skaneateles the rights acquired by the granting of the franchise. The works were not completed within the time provided for, but before the expiration of such period the village Trustees extended the time for the completion of the works until Dec. 1, 1890, declaring that the franchise theretofore granted to the plaintiff was renewed

CONTRACT NOT RENEWED.

Before Dec. 1, 1890, the works were completed, and for five years the company supplied the village and its inhabitants with water. The contract then expired and was not renewed, because, as alleged, the company, finding that it had lost money, asked for $10 more per hydrant than it was entitled to charge under the terms of its grant. In pursuance of Chapter 181 of the laws of 1875 a Board of Water Commissioners was appointed. At a special election a large majority of the villagers voted in favor of an independent system of water works. The water works company had laid pipes in substantially every street of the village, and the water it furnished was pure, wholesome, and adequate for fire protection and all other purposes. The only source of supply was Skaneateles Lake. The village offered the company $24,000 for its property, which was mortgaged for $50,000, but the company declined to take that sum, requesting that the property be taken by condemnation proceedings as the statute authorized

The company thereupon ought to obtain a permanent injunction against the village, its President, Trustees, and Water Commissioners, restraining them from conducting or operating an independent system of water works. The matter was referred to a referee, who dismissed the complaint. The case was taken to the Appellate Division in the Fourth Department, which affirmed the judgment entered upon the referee's report. The matter was then carried to the Court of Appeals. Chief Justice Parker rendered the decision, affirming the judgment. All concurred with him except Justice Bartlett who read a dissenting opinion, and Justice Haight, who did not vote. Chief Justice Parker's opinion in part is as follows:

"It is the experience of all attempts to introduce water into villages and small cities that the number of individual patrons at the outset is very small because their houses are not piped, and they are without bathtubs and other appliances which go with the use of water supplied under pressure. The houses erected after the construction of water works are, of course, made ready for connection with the pipes of the company, but the old houses are brought in very slowly; many never come in, while a small percentage of the others are brought in each year as the owners find themselves able to enjoy the luxury afforded by the water system, or as they may be persuaded that the necessary expense ought to be incurred for reasons of health or comfort. This means in almost all cases losses for the first few years until a sufficient number of people have become patrons to put a plant on a paying basis. The theory of the defendant seems to be that the proper way to treat such a corporation as the plaintiff promoted in this instance, as it appears by defendant citizens, is to let it go on and built water works, losing money each year, while it educates the people up to the point of using the water until years have passed away and the plant has at last come to a paying basis, and then duplicate its plant and take over a paying business for the simple cost of the construction of new works, and it claims the permission of the Legislature to take that very course. * * *

PLAINTIFF'S CLAIM NOT SUPPORTED.

"It is probable that the Legislature mistakenly assumed that such authorities would not act unjustly or oppressively, but would recognize the property rights of others. Be that as it may, the right to determine whether the property of an existing water works corporation should be taken or not is clearly submitted to the determination of the local authorities. The refusal of the defendant therefore to acquire the plaintiff's property by proceedings in invitum does not tend to support the plaintiff's claim for an injunction. * * *

"If the provisions of the statute authorizing the taxation of the plaintiff for the payment of the obligations incurred in the construction of the defendant's water works and the provision authorizing a discriminating tax against its patrons are so connected with the purpose of the act and the object in view that it cannot be said that they do not constitute an essential part of the scheme of the act, then it should be held to be in contravention of Section 10 of the Federal Constitution and void. * * *

"Abundant resources are provided for the working out of the plan for paying for the property and the cost of its operation without assessing the property of the plaintiff for such purposes, and we are of the opinion that in view of the public interests involved (for many municipalities have constructed independent water works under this statute) the rule should be invoked which authorizes the elimination of the provisions of a statute which, if allowed to remain, would condemn it, where it can be done without interference with the general plan and scope of the act."

SIMON STERNE'S OPINION.

"I have read the opinion of the Court of Appeals in the case of the Skaneateles Water Works Company against the village of the same name," said Simon Sterne last evening, "and I find that its relation to the Ramapo case is very remote. It emphasizes the great danger that is involved to a municipality of entering into contracts with private corporations for its water supply and the many legal complications that arise therefrom.

"In the Skaneateles Water Works case the Court of Appeals decided by a majority of the court that there was nothing in the Constitution to prevent a village corporation from creating its own water works, although the supply of water had previously been furnished by a private corporation, but in coming to that decision the court struck down several provisions of the law which made competition in the water supply oppressive upon and destructive of the interests of the private corporation.

"The minority of the court was of the opinion that the municipal supply under these circumstances should not be permitted to come into existence without first taking over at its proper valuation the private water company's works.

"The bearing of all this upon the Ramapo conspiracy is very remote, but, as I said at the outset, it shows how endless can be the complications if the city is ever so unfortunate as to be compelled to submit to making contracts with a private corporation. That may involve at some future period the taking over of the Ramapo Water Company's plant as a consequence of having contracted with it on a valuation based upon the contract, which it unfairly made with the city, before the city can increase its own water supply from an entirely different watershed and quite independently of the source of supply that is controlled by the Ramapo Water Company.

"What is now the opinion of the minority of the court may become the opinion of the majority. Remote as was the question at issue of the Skaneateles case with anything that arises in the Ramapo case, it shows a danger. At the same time, however, it throws how great is the power of the municipalities of this State, even to village authorities, to furnish their own water supply."

WHAT MR. LAUTERBACH SAYS.

"This would seem to go to the extent of deciding," said Edward Lauterbach, "first what I contended for, namely, that the contract presented to the Board of Municipal Improvements by the Corporation Counsel and over which all the wrangle has taken place was a mere option which enabled the New York authorities to take as much or as little water as they desired, or none at all. It was urged that this option would have to be reasonably exercised, and therefore the Ramapo Company could have insisted, in spite of the option, upon the taking of a reasonable amount of water. This decision disposes of that effectually and states that a contract made by a municipality with a water company in no sense carries with it any obligation to take water to any greater extent or in any other way than the contract provides.

"It goes much further, however, and decides what I also contended for, that by the making of the contract the city itself is not prevented from obtaining the Ramapo Water Company by condemnation proceedings, even if the contract is made with it. It decides that under the act of 1875 municipalities may themselves enter into competition with companies they previously contracted with for supply of water without condemning the property of the original company and under methods of competition that may prove fatal to the original contracting party.

"In other words, the court's decision renders perfectly plain what I have always maintained, that the proposed contract with the Ramapo Company was entirely jughandled in favor of the city, and that those who prevented its execution have done the city a grievous injury."

SAY HE SWINDLED BANK.

Clarence W. Noble Accused of Criminally Obtaining $400 from Mechanics and Traders' Institution.

Considerable mystery surrounds the arrest of Clarence W. Noble, whose residence is said to be at Nutley, N. J., and who, after being twice taken to the Centre Street Police Court, was yesterday remanded to the custody of the Detective Bureau. He is charged with having swindled the Mechanics and Traders' Bank of 486 Broadway out of a sum aggregating about $400, and was arrested by Central Office Detectives Tinker and Dolan on Friday.

At Police Headquarters it was said that the case against the prisoner had as yet assumed no specific form, and that he was held on a formal charge of grand larceny. Police officials would not even say who the complainant against him was, and said that when the matter came up in court either Leo Schlesinger, President of the bank, the institution itself through other officers, or some of its depositors might appear to press the charge.

One report was that the money had been obtained through forging a check, and another was that the bank had loaned it upon worthless securities. Mr. Schlesinger is spending the Christmas holidays with his family at the Lakewood, Lakewood, N. J. When seen at that hotel late last evening he positively declined to give any information whatever about Noble's incarceration or to discuss the matter in any way.

Mr. Schlesinger has made arrangements to leave Lakewood this morning, and it is thought will come directly to this city. His brother, B. Schlesinger, of 134 East Seventy-second Street, said earlier in the day that he knew nothing about the case.

The police records give Noble's occupation as a broker. He was taken to court Saturday, but when he reached there with the detectives it was so late that court had adjourned for the day, and he was led away again.

LONG ISLAND FARMER MISSING.

Jesse Muncy Believed to Have Been Murdered and Robbed.

BABYLON, L. I., Dec. 25.—Jesse Muncy has been missing since Friday night, and every effort to find him has proved to be of no avail. It is generally believed now that he was murdered and robbed and his body disposed of. No other solution of his total disappearance from the range of country which has been scoured during the past two days can be arrived at.

Mr. Muncy was eighty years of age. He was well known in this village, although he lived some little distance back in the island upon a farm. He was in the village on Friday night, and when a little before dark he started for home he had a considerable amount of money with him. He was last seen by those who knew him about a half mile out from the village and a mile from his own home. He was met by his nephew, Samuel Muncy. The old man was then proceeding toward his home. He exchanged greetings with his nephew and went on. The nephew came on into the village. Since that meeting no one who knew the old man has seen him.

When he did not reach home on Friday night search was not at once instituted, as it was thought he had gone to the home of some friend for the night. When he did not appear on Saturday the search was begun. Yesterday several searching parties were organized, but no trace of Mr. Muncy has yet been found. The belief is that the old man was sandbagged in the road, killed, and burned

Mr. Muncy was a bachelor, and a veteran of the civil war.

New Railway for Turkey in Asia.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Dec. 25.—The preliminary convention for the construction of the railroad between Koniah, capital of the vilayet of the same name in Asia Minor, and Bassorah, on the Shat-el-Arab, in the Pashalic of Bagdad, has been signed and Dr. von Siemens, Director of the Deutsche Bank, who obtained the concession for the Anatolian Railways Company, left Constantinople to-day for Berlin. An agreement has been concluded between the Porte and the Anatolian Railways Company for an advance of £1,200,000.

Janitor's Neck Broken in Fall.

Felix Jackel, janitor of two flat houses at 146 and 148 West Sixty-eighth Street, fell headforemost down the basement stairs at No. 148 last evening and broke his neck. He was forty-four years old. His wife and children were away spending Christmas with friends, and did not learn of his death till they returned late at night.

PROVISIONING A TROOPSHIP.

Quantities and Varieties of Supplies Required—How They Are Furnished in English Practice.

From The London Times.

The Sumatra, which leaves the Royal Albert Docks to-morrow for the Cape, may be taken by way of illustration; though, as she is conveying not more than about 1,200 men, her supplies represent what those concerned regard as rather a "small" order. To persons unacquainted with these things, however, the quantities will appear formidable enough, especially as the supplies in question refer exclusively to what will be required at sea. Thus, under the head of "troop stores," the men sailing in the Sumatra are to have 6,000 pounds of preserved meat, 14 tierces of salt beef, and 21 barrels of pork, with the accompaniment of 2,500 pounds of preserved potatoes and 400 pounds of compressed mixed vegetables. Should they take mustard with their meat there will be 100 pounds of it at their disposal; of salt there will be 672 pounds, of pepper 60 pounds, of vinegar 150 gallons, and of pickles 100 pounds. The stock of rice is put down at 1,250 pounds, and that of split peas at 1,800 pounds. There is a suggestion of Christmas puddings in 3 hundredweight of suet, 900 pounds of raisins, and 140 barrels of flour, while with 6,000 pounds of Demerara sugar on board there should be no danger of the 113 pounds of chocolate and the 1,800 pounds of coffee having to be taken unsweetened. Of oatmeal there is a total of 4,500 pounds, of syrup 1,800 pounds, and of biscuits no less a quantity than 10,800 pounds. These are the ordinary supplies provided by the Government. Should the soldier want more there will be the canteen to fall back on at his own cost, and the canteen stores—from which purchases are generally made a pennyworth at a time—will be provided on no less generous and varied a scale, the articles being disposed of at a very low charge indeed. These particular stores comprise, among other things, 200 pound tins of corned beef, 1,500 pounds of lunch biscuits, 896 pounds of sweetened biscuits, 1,008 pounds of ginger nuts, (a luxury of which soldiers are especially fond,) 700 tins of bloater paste, 300 pound tins of brawn, 1,000 half-pound tins of butter, 1,500 pounds of American cheese, 60 pound tins of haddock, 400 pound tins of fresh herring, 200 pound tins of kippered herring, 150 pound tins of lobster, 60 pound tins of mackerel, 2,000 pound tins of assorted jams, 800 pound tins of marmalade, 250 half-pint bottles and 1,000 quarter-pint bottles of pickles, 1,000 pound tins of salmon, 60 quarter-pound tins of sardines, 1,000 penny bottles of sauces, 120 pound tins of sausages, and 600 tins of potted meats. If "Tommy" wishes to still further improve on the official dietary in the way of puddings, &c., the canteen will offer him raw materials in the shape of 30 half sacks of flour, 36 pounds of candied peel, 200 pounds of currants, 200 pounds Valencia raisins, 784 pounds of moist sugar, and 30 pounds of lard; while the varied eatables he can wash down with the help of 120 pound tins of sherbet. Should so miscellaneous a diet disagree with him, it may be hoped he will be put right again with the help of 96 bottles of Eno's fruit salt and 800 seidlitz-powders. The canteen will also have in stock 350 clay pipes, 1,500 tins of Anglo-Swiss milk, and such miscellaneous articles as blacking, boot and shoe laces, lead pencils, soap, (180 tablets,) tobacco, (150 pounds,) and supplementary vinegar (350 bottles.) The other articles on the list include 10 pounds of cream of tartar, 10 pounds of carbonate of soda, and even—14 pounds of sweets!

The "medical comforts" for the use of the sick comprise 99 pounds of preserved meat, 153 pints of prepared soup, 305 quarter-pint tins of essence of beef, 27 pounds of arrowroot, 214 pounds of rice, 481 tins of preserved milk, 293 bottles of lime juice, 1,056 pounds of Demerara sugar, 550 pounds of refined sugar, 68 pints of vinegar, 144 pounds of preserved potatoes, and 99 pounds compressed mixed vegetables. In addition to all this there is a large supply of "general stores," which need not be specified.

The Sumatra will be the twenty-first troopship that has been supplied with stores by the contractors, Messrs. Barnes & Co. (Limited,) since the war began, so that, if the above figures be multiplied twenty-one times, some rough idea will be gained of the sum total of the food, &c., already needed for the troops in their long journey across the seas, without regard to what they require on land. So complete, however, are the arrangements which have been made that the whole of the supplies for the Sumatra, as stated above, were put on board within twelve hours of the order for them being received.

THEIR JOY TURNED TO SORROW.

Nicalas Died Without Warning Preparing for a Family Celebration.

Christmas joy was turned to mourning almost in the twinkling of an eye when Herman Nicalas fell dying at his home, on the top floor of 340 De Kalb Avenue, Brooklyn, yesterday morning.

Nicalas, who was about thirty-five years old, and who worked in a produce store between Park and De Kalb Avenues, had, with his wife, made great preparations for a Christmas celebration for their two young sons. They had a Christmas tree, on which they had expended much happy labor loading its branches with gifts and ornaments, and had invited several friends to take part in the celebration, which they had arranged to hold last night.

The kitchen fire burned low, and Mr. Nicalas started down stairs to get some coal. He reached the first landing, just outside the door of the family apartment, when he threw up his hands, tottered, and sank down, rolling to the foot of the stairs. A policeman from the De Kalb Avenue Station summoned an ambulance from the Homeopathic Hospital, but the surgeon who came with it said that the man was dead. He said that death was due to the bursting of a blood vessel. The body was carried back into the little parlor and laid out almost under the branches of the Christmas tree.

DEATH TOOK HER AT DINNER.

Mary Fox Was Eating Her Best Meal in a Long Time.

Mary Fox, fifty-five years old, and without a home of her own, died last evening while eating her Christmas dinner with her friend, Margaret Seary, in the rear of the ramshackle building at 158 West Thirty-first Street.

The meal was an humble one, but as good as their means would afford, and the woman, who was very feeble through long privation and exposure, had just remarked to her friend: "It is the best dinner I have eaten in a long time, but I haven't had much to eat for some time," when she sank to the floor, dead from heart disease.

The Wanamaker Store.

CHRISTMAS lasts here until Thursday night, at least.

The store seemed bountiful up to the last minute—didn't it? Well, we shall take half price for very many of the show things. They earned half their worth by looking pretty.

If the Christmas gift was money it can be laid out to fine advantage.

If anybody was overlooked, you can discreetly make amends. Calendars are a pleasant "thank you" for some kindness shown.

The store news will grow in interest each day—it shall be good-natured, straight-forward and well worth your reading.

A Hundred Thousand Yards

French Organdie brought to America for printing---Saved Duty.

Printing vies with the French, but while French would demand 37½c, these

Dainty Organdies, 12½c

The fabric is made in Alsace-Lorraine, which is the home of French Organdie despite German territorial control. Last year Organdies were hurt, in your estimation, by reason of the soft finish that made them soon grow stringy. Now the splendid old wiry finish is back again—and the best American cotton printer (who ranks well with the best of France), is wooing Fashion's favor for his product. He takes a loss on this initial lot conditioned on our being content with almost no profit. Organdies are back again to be loved.

Sixty-eight printings, chosen as the opening temptation of the spring of 1900, are included—floral; some with rings and ribbons besides.

Then there are solid colors as well—black, pink, light blue, heliotrope and primrose.

How shall we state their value? The 37 1-2c French Printed Organdie will be of just such fineness of texture. Do you think they can possibly be prettier? Yet these are 12 1-2c a yard.

Main floor.

White Goods Half price. Not remnants, but odd pieces from which you may buy any number of yards you require, while the lots hold out. No, you can't, either—for when a piece is sold down to a reasonably short length, we won't cut off what would be a bothersome remnant to us.

Organdies
Striped and Checked Lawns
Long Cloth.

Half price, which means 12½c a yard for 25c fabrics and 15c a yard for 30c fabrics. And so on.

Broadway.

Men's Suits The fabrics are cheviot, worsteds and cassimere; the tailoring is of the regular Wanamaker standard—fact is, these suits are all we have left of some of our popular $18 and $22.50 lots. So we mark them—

Fifteen Dollars

Men's Frieze Overcoats—black and Oxford-gray—wool lined, $8.50. The best expert we could see on Saturday says these garments are worth $12.

Boys' Long-Trouser Suits—made of fancy cheviot; the popular way — single-breasted coat and double-breasted vest. For young fellows of 16 to 19 years—$8.50—values up to $12.

Second floor, Fourth avenue.

Men's Domet Night Shirts Domet Night Shirts are warmish, comfortable, sensible. These are made up in liberal sizes and from the best-looking patterns of the domet (cotton) flannel. Pearl buttons—all the touches of carefulness.

Men's Goods—Ninth street side.

Knit Petticoats Some pretty colored ones all of cotton, and others all of wool with borders of contrasting colors, and both far from expensive. 75c for one sort. Then prices advance in 25c steps to $1.75—for some with silk borders.

Second floor, Fourth avenue.

The new hand-printed Silks from London and Paris and the newest American Silks—all advance lots from next spring's styles—are shown in the Green Salon, second floor. 60c to $1.50 a yard. And a mere handful of any one style.

Women's Wraps---Reduced

Some from our own good stocks, some from the tailors who furnish much of our stock and who preferred to have cash rather than coats in their Christmas stocking.

The least saving is a full fourth from Saturday's prices and values.

Many Are a Third Cheaper

Five hundred Capes—black ones at $7.50, $10 (some of these were counted $20 values), $12, $15, $25, $35 and $50.

Capes in navy blue, brown, tan and steel gray, at $10, $20, $25 and $35—values up to $48 and even $50.

And these lots of Jackets—

$5—Of black beaver cloth; lined with satin serge.
$6.50—Of black boucle; satin lined.
$9—Cheviot, beaver and kersey—black and colors. Finest are $16 values.
$12—Jackets valued up to $20.
$15—Jackets valued up to $25.
$25—Three-quarter length wraps — Automobile—that have been $38. Black, tan, castor, navy blue.

Second floor.

Tissot's Life of Christ Membership in the Wanamaker-Tissot Club means the immediate possession of Tissot's Life of Christ—ten years' masterly work in the Holy Land by the disciple-author-artist—upon payment of the entrance fee, $1, and obligation to pay three dollars monthly after that for a not very long period. Of course usual business references are required. Inspiring reading and 500 matchless pictures.

The Book Store, Ninth street.

French Flannel Sacques Imported. New colorings of red, blue, pink, violet and in solid white and black. All lined—some with silk, others with albatross. Trimming of embroidery of silk, of chenile or of lace. Newest cut. $3.50 to $30.

Sacques of albatross, made and trimmed similar to those above, at $8.50 to $25.

Second floor, Fourth avenue.

Flannelette Gowns They're worn nowadays largely for sleeping gowns,—they were not made wholly for that purpose, however. Suitable also for room gowns. Warm and pretty. In a variety of styles; 75c to $2.75. Moderate enough, for so much comfort.

Second floor, Fourth avenue.

White Aprons Lawn; neatly made and liberal in size. Somebody made several thousand too many—manufacturers do foolish things. We bought them very cheap, and sold many at 15c and 25c. To-day—the last nine hundred at ten cents

Some may be mussed, but what of that!

Broadway.

Cardigan Jackets For women—for warmth. Cardinal, navy blue, black, maroon and brown—long; some short. Prices run 75c, 85c and $1.

Second floor, Fourth avenue.

A Carpet Bargain

This carpet store is authoritative as to styles, and a factor in the markets that entitles it to the every consideration given the leading exclusive stores. Yoke that to such advantages as are given through the Wanamaker system of selling, and one sees why the business keeps growing.

As an outlet for excessive stocks we unquestionably rank first, and the real carpet bargains come here as naturally as water runs down hill.

To-day—

Twenty-five patterns of $1 Axminster Carpet at 80c—and a dollar was the very lowest price it could be bought for up to Saturday night.

Third floor.

Men's Madras and Percale Shirts

HALF PRICE

Which is to say Fifty Cents, though many of the shirts are $1.50 quality and not one is worth less than a Dollar. Why cheap? Because we have only these neck sizes—15½ to 17—and the stripes run crosswise instead of up-and-down. It may be four months before the style changes back again.

Men's Goods, Ninth street side.

Mussed Handkerchiefs---Half Price

The handkerchiefs we delivered were smooth and fresh as could be—the ones used as samples, the ones you looked at on the counters and fixtures are mussed and soiled. A washing will cure all hurts. To-day we shall commence selling them off at half prices, which means—

50c for $1 handkerchiefs
35c for 75c handkerchiefs
25c for 50c handkerchiefs
18c for 35c handkerchiefs
12½c for 25c handkerchiefs

Many sorts for men and women, but maybe not at every price for both men's and women's.

Broadway.

Eight Fine Water-Color Pictures---Reduced

This picture store is getting better and better. It isn't filled with costly pieces, but it is thoroughly emptied of trash. The simplest print here is meritorious in its way.

We've eight Water Colors that, being rather counted as Christmas stock, we'd rather sell at a loss to-day than to carry in stock—

Two by Carl Weber, $65 each from $100.
Two by Van Wedge, $55 each from $75.
Three by S. A. Mulholland, $42.50 each from $62.50.
One by F. F. English, $40 from $67.50.

All well framed in gold leaf frames, and in every way perfect.

Picture Store, Fifth floor.

Seventy-five Tons of Writing Paper

AT THE OLD, LITTLE PRICE

The law of supply and demand is being enforced, with the Trusts as enforcers. Paper is scarce, the production well controlled, and prices are sky-high. Yet, with half a year's planning, we have a hundred and fifty thousand pounds of the popular—

Club Vellum at Ten Cents a Pound; Envelopes, to match, 15c a hundred

The paper has a pleasant writing surface—is good enough to have been adopted by some of the most exacting hotel men for their women-guests' correspondence.

Choice of two color tones. Three sizes—

"Helen," for oblong envelope, 102 sheets to the pound.
"Octavo," for square envelope, 96 sheets to the pound.
"Frances," for large oblong envelope, 84 sheets to the pound.

Sold in the long aisle—Tenth street side.

It will pay you to get a year's supply, for nobody knows when we can get any more at the price.

HUNGER IN PUERTO RICO

Two Thousand Tons of Food Still Needed There.

RELIEF TASK IS DIFFICULT

Pestilence Has Appeared in the Stricken Districts and Help Is Needed —Work Already Done.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 25.—The War Department made public to-day a statement showing the progress made in relief work in the Island of Puerto Rico between Sept. 25 and Nov. 30, 1899. The population of the island is estimated at 918,926. The average daily indigent was 221,087 persons; average weekly sick, 17,372, and the average weekly deaths, 632 persons. The annual death rate was 35 per 1,000 inhabitants, while the normal rate of deaths was 26 per 1,000 inhabitants. The increased mortality was confined to the mountain districts, where, in some localities, the death rate increased 300 per cent. The amount of cash received for the relief of the suffering people of the island up to Nov. 30 was $15,224. The amount of money disbursed up to the date mentioned was $7,417.

Up to Nov. 30 the total amount of food received to relieve the sufferers was 17,162,788 pounds. Of this 16,548,316 pounds has been issued up to Nov. 30. The amount of unissued food on hand at San Juan Nov. 30 was 614,272 pounds.

It was some weeks after the hurricane before the mental and physical energies of the stricken people began to rally from the shock of the disaster. They were without ready money, and were brought face to face with starvation.

While the damage inflicted upon the people along the coast of the island was very great, it was in part off-set by the improvement in the sugar cane crop, which improvement was produced by the overflow of water on the cane lands. The prospect of a good crop enabled the planters to borrow money with which to employ the necessary labor to care for and harvest the crop.

The cities along the coast were also to come to the rescue by the employment of labor to repair the damage inflicted by the storm. In consequence of these facts supplies have gradually been suspended in the lowlands except in limited quantities to the chronic poor.

The coffee plantations are located in the uplands. Here the high winds swept everything in their course, leaving little or nothing for the thousands of hungry, homeless, clotheless human beings but their lives, and what could be given them to prevent starvation. The prompt action of the American people and of the people of the rest of the island was all that prevented a terrible catastrophe. The poor were fed and their lives were preserved. Although a large part of the island is no longer receiving relief, the number of indigents requiring assistance remains the same. It is believed that until February next the demand for assistance is likely to increase in the mountain districts, as the plantains and bananas will not be ripe for two months to come. The greatest distress prevails in a locality where the greatest difficulty is found in getting food to the starving.

The worst area contains a population of about 250,000, and not a wagon road is to be found in any direction over which food can be transported. All food is carried on the backs of horses. Of this population 200,000 people must be fed or they will starve. If not fed at home they will migrate to the cities, leaving the weak to die. Their work will be left undone and their future will be hopeless.

Pestilence, which frequently follows flood and famine, has appeared among the unfortunate inhabitants in the mountain districts and a number of people have perished. It is feared that the epidemic will spread to the coast should there be a general movement of the mountain people in that direction. A movement of this kind has already been anticipated and is being successfully controlled. But the relief must be continued freely in the mountain districts for all of December and during the greater part of January.

It is estimated that not less than 2,000 additional tons of food will be required. Four-sevenths of this amount should be of rice; two-sevenths should be of beans, and the remainder of the amount required should be either codfish or bacon. With the food already issued and now on hand and with the 2,000 tons required in addition to that already issued the total issue will be 20,162,788 pounds.

In dealing with the indigents able-bodied men have been required to work for the food they received, and a great deal of public work has been done in the way of cleaning towns, repairing roads, &c. A plan has been devised between the Board of Charities and the needy planters and their servants by which the board furnishes food to the planters for the number of servants in their families. In return for this aid the planters sign an agreement to furnish a small parcel of land and a hut to each family, which land they are to see prepared and seeded with food plants. The planters are also to see that the laborers and their families are supplied with the food issued, and that the laborer performs a full day's work in return. The planters further agree to furnish transportation for the food.

TROOPER FIRED AT COMRADES.

Captured with Difficulty and Committed to Government Hospital for Insane.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 25.—The case of Nicholas Davis of Troop B, Third Cavalry, having been reported to Gen. Merritt, commanding the Department of the East at New York, he has authorized the committal of the man to the Government Hospital for the Insane near this city.

Davis is an enlisted man from Kentucky who became insane over fancied wrongs inflicted by members of his troop at Fort Myer, Va., and who, inspired by drink, duplicated at Fort Myer some of the incidents in Kipling's story, "In the Matter of a Private." Obtaining a Krag-Jorgensen rifle and a supply of ammunition, he barricaded himself in the troop's quarters and began firing through the open windows at every person who came within range. Fortunately he failed to hit anybody.

The commandant at the fort, after exhausting all possible efforts to capture the trooper without sacrificing the lives of any of his men, finally ordered him to be shot, and a Sergeant and squad were detailed for that purpose. Instead of ordering a volley fired, however, the Sergeant, who is a crack marksman, took a single shot at Davis. Only the latter's head and the breech-block and barrel of his rifle could be seen above the window-sill. The Sergeant's bullet broke the ammunition chamber of the Krag-Jorgensen, driving the pieces of metal into Davis's face and head, stunning but not killing him.

MONEY FOR LAWTON'S FAMILY.

New Yorkers Respond to Appeals of Secretary Root and Gen. Corbin— Fund Is Growing.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 25.—The total subscription to the Lawton fund up to noon of Christmas Day was $14,329.55. The committee has determined to continue the work at least until Jan. 2, when it is hoped that a sufficient fund will have been subscribed to place the widow and children of Gen. Lawton beyond the possibility of want and enable the mother to carry out the father's fondest wishes, that his children should receive a proper education.

It is proposed to continue active work in raising funds during the present week, and it is probable that the subscription list will be kept open until the return of Mrs. Lawton to this country. It is not at all improbable that the fund will eventually reach the sum of $50,000. The original intention was to raise only a fund sufficient to pay off the mortgage of about $15,000 on the Lawton homestead at Redlands, but the generous response to the appeal encourages the committee to believe that enough money will be subscribed beyond that sum to place Mrs. Lawton and her children above want for the rest of their lives.

Secretary Root and Adjt. Gen. Corbin sent personal appeals to about 150 bankers and business men in New York, which resulted in a large increase of the fund Among those who have promised subscriptions are:

William K. Vanderbilt, $1,000; J. Pierpont Morgan, $1,000; C. P. Huntington, $1,000; Thomas F. Ryan, $1,000, and Miss Helen Gould, $500. The committee expects to receive at least ten subscriptions of $1,000 each.

J. I. Buchanan of Pittsburg telegraphed Gen. Corbin to-day that a public meeting will be held in that city to-morrow for the purpose of helping the fund.

Alexander H. Revell of Chicago reports that $2,102 has been subscribed in that city.

Gen. Shafter reports that $830 has already been raised by the citizens of San Francisco.

Gen. Corbin was also informed that the citizens of St. Louis had subscribed $1,200.

GEN. WOOD BEGINS REFORMS.

Highways to be Improved and the School System Reorganized.

HAVANA, Dec. 25.—Gov. Gen. Wood says he intends to order work at once upon the highways, which are greatly in need of repair. This will also serve to give employment to a large number of men.

The school system will also be immediately reorganized. Alexis Frye, Superintendent of Cuban Schools, will be reinforced with two or three other Commissioners.

The Judiciary will form the subject of early attention, particularly the jails and the existing system of keeping prisoners for months without trial. An order will be issued directing that a complete list of prisoners held for trial be furnished monthly.

FIRE INTERRUPTS A DINNER.

Boarding House Inmates Alarmed and a Musician Suffers Loss.

Fire in a boarding house managed by Mrs. S. V. Stowell, at 218 West Fifty-third Street, broke up the family Christmas dinner at 1 o'clock yesterday afternoon and caused damage to the amount of $500.

The inmates of the house were at the dinner table when a young woman who occupies a room on the top floor heard what appeared to be the crackling of flames. She ran down stairs and notified Mrs. Stowell. They then went up stairs, and on the second floor, in the front room, discovered the fire. The room is occupied by Edward Capell, who had left the house only a few minutes before. Mrs. Stowell and Miss Hattie Atwood, a boarder, attempted to extinguish the blaze themselves. They were unable to do so, and an alarm was rung. When the firemen arrived the fire was speedily extinguished. Mrs. Stowell and Miss Atwood suffered slight burns from their attempt to put out the fire.

Miss Gibert, one of the occupants of the house, and a musician, lost music worth $200. The loss is not covered by insurance.

FIRE IN THE HOTEL ALBERT.

Employes Have Two Streams at Work When the Firemen Arrive.

A fire in the Hotel Albert, University Place and Eleventh Street, at 2 o'clock yesterday afternoon, caused considerable excitement. Women became hysterical, and one fainted. The fire started on the fifth floor of the eight-story building in one of a suite of three rooms occupied by A. H. Sterling, a civil engineer, with his wife and daughter. Mr. Sterling was out at the time of the fire, but his wife and daughter were in the apartments. The cause of the fire is unknown, but Chief Croker attributed it to a curtain coming in contact with a gas jet.

As soon as the two women shouted "Fire!" the other guests, a majority of whom were women, rushed for the elevators. There were about 175 persons in the rooms on the several floors. Those on the floors above the fire were particularly anxious to escape. The clerk of the hotel, F. V. Baraned, hearing the shouts of fire, rang the auxiliary fire alarm which connects with a regular box, and the firemen were soon on the scene.

In the meantime, however, the hotel employes, who had been drilled to act in case of fire, were working to extinguish the flames. Under the leadership of Frank Taylor, the colored head bellboy, they attached hose on the sixth and fifth floors to the stand pipes in the building, and were soon playing two streams on the fire. When the firemen arrived and strung their hose they had very little work to do, and the fire was soon under control. The loss is estimated at about $500.

There was a slight fire about eight months ago on the fourth floor of the hotel which was quickly put out by the employes in the same manner as the one yesterday.

Poor Business Causes Suicide.

UTICA, Dec. 25.—Charles H. Schiller, a prominent jeweler of Utica, committed suicide by shooting himself this evening at his residence. Financial embarrassment is believed to have been the cause. Mr. Schiller had been many years in business in this city, but his trade had of late been declining. A widow and several children survive. The suicide of Mr. Schiller occasions especial remark, as it is the fourth case of the kind that has occurred here during the past few days.

The Yacht Lizzie Reported Safe.

ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., Dec. 25.—The yacht Lizzie, of Somers Point, which had not been heard from or seen since she left that place on Friday last, and which was thought to have been lost, turned up safe and sound at Bivalve to-day.

It was supposed that the gale of Saturday night had foundered her.

CHESS TOURNAMENT OPENS

The Players at the Eighth Annual Intercollegiate Event.

HARVARD MAN THE FAVORITE

Yale Loses the Honor of Leading the Play on the First Day—The Scores.

The eight chess representatives from Columbia, Harvard, Yale, and Princeton began their eighth annual tournament yesterday afternoon at the Columbia Grammar School, at 2 o'clock, at which time Edward A. Caswell, the manager of this intercollegiate event, formally opened the proceedings with a speech of welcome. But little time was lost in the preliminaries, and the players went promptly to work as time was called. The players are: Columbia—Kaufman G. Falk, 1901 S; Frank H. Sewall, 1902 C. Harvard—Claude T. Rice, 1901; Everett R. Perry, 1903. Yale—Louis A. Cook, 1900; Joseph M. Morgan, 1902 S. Princeton—John C. Henley, Jr., 1902; James B. Hunt, 1902.

The pairing for the first round contested yesterday is appended:

1. Falk (Columbia) vs. Perry (Harvard.)
2. Cook (Yale) vs. Henley (Princeton.)
3. Sewall (Columbia) vs. Hunt (Princeton.)
4. Morgan (Yale) vs. Rice (Harvard.)

PERRY THE FAVORITE.

Perry of Harvard attracts much attention because of the reputation that preceded him. He is a typical New England youth, with square, firm chin, and generally strong features. He plays chess with a businesslike air. He is twenty-three years of age. His partner, Rice, is from Oregon, is twenty years old, of tall stature, and not quite so prepossessing as his comrade in arms, yet of intelligent countenance and of a genial disposition. He makes hard work of his game and worries much.

Next to Perry of Harvard, Falk of Columbia is considered the most dangerous opponent, for he plays with a stone-wall defense and is most difficult to conquer. His best performance was the draw he obtained from Tathersall of Cambridge in the international cable chess match last Spring, when the Columbia man headed the American team.

Sewall, No. 2 on the Columbia team, is the junior player in the tournament; he is seventeen years old. He is a native of Watertown, N. Y., but obtained his experience in Manhattan and Brooklyn chess circles. Wideawake and ingenious, this youthful expert is ever on the lookout for pretty combinations and artistic finishes.

Cook of Yale is a veteran in more ways than one. This is his third year as a New Haven representative. While the war with Spain was on he enlisted and saw service for six months. Though sedate in appearance, he is inclined to be nervous, and does not dio himself justice.

Morgan of Washington, D. C., owns to nineteen years. He appeared to be a "sure winner" yesterday, but took matters too easily and fate decided in favor of the more astute Rice.

Princeton's men are both of the same age, nineteen, Hunt coming from Greenwich, N. J., and Henley from Birmingham, Ala.

SUCCESS OF HARVARD.

By dint of good luck Harvard managed to score both games and start off easily in the lead, one point ahead of Columbia. Perry was the first to tally, but his resources were not called upon to any serious extent, as Falk made matters pretty easy for him by sacrificing a bishop in an unsound combination. Rice, on the other hand, was clearly beaten when Morgan of Yale, in an unguarded moment, permitted him to escape and turn the tables on him. But for this unlooked-for dénouement Yale would have had the honor of leading the colleges on the first day's play.

Sewall of Columbia made up for Falk's blunder by energetic tactics against Hunt of Princeton. Henley, the other Princetonian, had Cook of Yale by the throat, but did not appear to fully realize his opportunities. In order to make sure of a draw he needlessly sacrificed the exchange, instead of still further strengthening his position. The result was that Princeton, instead of tying Columbia in second place, had to share the honors of last place with Yale.

Appended are the full scores of all the four games:

NEW YORK A. C. NOMINATIONS.

Satisfaction Expressed with the Ticket to be Elected Jan. 10.

The annual election of the New York Athletic Club will be held on Jan. 10. The regular ticket was posted at the clubhouse yesterday, and, from comments made, every one appeared pleased with the selections of the Nominating Committee. J. R. Van Wormer, a veteran member of the club, heads the ticket. Mr. Van Wormer has already served as Vice President. A. E. Colfax, who has been a Governor of the club for the past three years, is nominated for Vice President. Charles E. Goodhue and Charles L. Burnham have been renominated for Secretary and Treasurer, respectively. Evart J. Wendell, who at one time was a crack middle distance runner, was asked to accept the nomination for Captain, but declined. Charles H. Sherrill, Chairman of the Yale Athletic Advisory Committee, accepted the nomination. The following have been nominated to comprise the Board of Governors:

Frank K. Hunter, J. Walter Spalding, Charles E. Knolouch, J. H. Haslin, Fred M Housting, Fred Vilmar, Paul A. Curtis, C. P. Geddes, and H. K. Williams.

Bartow S. Weeks declined a nomination as Governor because of pressure of business.

GEN. H. MACDONALD.

"Fighting Mac" Hopes to Complete in South Africa a Career Brilliantly Begun in the North.

From The London News.

Gen. Hector Macdonald, who is to go out to take the place in the staff vacated by Col. Wauchope's lamented death, must be known by name to every reader of the newspapers. His name in the army is "Fighting Mac." Where all are fighters, what a meaning that fact has! He was, after Lord Kitchener himself, the hero of Omdurman. Some indeed would have for him no second place, and say he saved the army from a great chance of disaster. He certainly held a critical position with his black regiment. Mr. Steevens thus describes it in his book, "With Kitchener to Khartum." He says:

But the cockpit of the fight was Macdonald's. The British might avenge his brigade; it was his to keep it and to kill off the attack. To meet it he turned his front through a complete half-circle, facing successively south, west, and north. Every tactician in the army was delirious in his praise; the ignorant correspondent was content to watch the man and his blacks. "Cool as on parade," is an old phrase. Macdonald Bey was very much cooler. Beneath the strong square-hewn face you could tell that the brain was working as if packed in ice. He sat solid on his horse, and bent his black brows toward the green flag and the Remingtons. Then he turned to a galloper with an order, and cantered easily up to a battalion commander. Magically the rifles hushed, the stinging powder-smoke wisped away, and the companies were rapidly threading back and forward round and round, in and out, as if it were a figure of a dance. In two minutes the brigade was together again in a new place. The field in front was hastening toward us in a whity-brown cloud of dervishes. An order. Macdonald's jaws gripped and hardened as the flame spurted out again, and the whity-brown cloud quivered and stood still. He saw everything, knew what to do, knew how to do it, did it. At the fire, he was ever brooding watchfully behind the firing line; at the cease fire he was instantly in front of it; all saw him and knew that they were being nursed to triumph.

Gen. Macdonald has seen South African service before. In fact, he was at the battle of Majuba Hill, and the wonder is that he survived that battle. This fact was referred to in a highly interesting manner at a dinner given in his honor. The Duke of Atholl, who was in the chair, said:

"It was a remarkable career, that of Col. Macdonald, beginning at the lowest rank of the army and on the point of reaching one of the highest—that of Brigadier General—without having skipped a single grade. In his conduct during the only unlucky fight in which the guest had been engaged, that of Majuba Hill, the Duke found subject for praise and fun. 'Fighting Mac's' company was almost annihilated, and the Boers approached to capture the remnant. The first Boer thought the sporran of Lieut. Macdonald, as he then was, would be a pretty piece of loot, but he received a kick in the stomach, which convinced him that his oppopent came from a land where football was not unknown. Another Boer was about to shoot the gallant Highlander; but the first, generously forgiving the kick, struck up his comrade's rifle, saying: "No, he is a brave man—too good to kill.'"

As the Duke of Atholl said. Gen. Macdonald rose from the ranks. His father was a small crofter in Rosshire, and the future soldier tended the few cattle on the croft in his early boyhood. At thirteen he was a draper's apprentice. He enlisted in the Gordon Highlanders at nineteen, and joining that regiment in India, distinguished himself by his judgment, coolness, and gallantry in the Afghan campaign. He took his South African work, including that notable experience at Majuba, on his way home; and afterward served in the Nile expedition for the relief of Gordon. He made soldiers of the Egyptian army, and led them in the way we have seen at Omdurman. He is still only forty-seven, and as much a "Fighting Mac" as ever.

MISPRONUNCIATIONS.

Prof. Skeat Expounds the Science of Some Common Errors.

From The London Globe.

In an article in The Globe, various mispronunciations are dwelt upon; but it seems to be assumed that they cannot be explained.

The misuse of the initial aspirate is nothing new. As shown in my "Principles of English Etymology," Series 1, Page 359, it is found in the Lincolnshire romance of Havelok, in the thirteenth century. I have since shown that the manuscript was written by a Norman scribe. The phenomenon is, of course, due to the collision of two habits, that of the Norman, who pronounced the h in a very few words, but usually dropped it, and that of the Saxon, whose habit was to pronounce it strongly. While the Norman was striving to learn English, in which he ultimately succeeded, and the Saxon was adopting a large number of words into the English tongue, many attempts to imitate the pronunciation of unfamiliar words were made on both sides with more zeal than success, and the confusion has lasted to the present day. The Shropshire man alone succeeded in establishing a false uniformity by the simple process of never pronouncing an h at all; so that, at any rate, he never inserts one in the wrong place. The misuse of h is by no means confined to London; it is common (to say no more) in many parts of East Anglia.

The loss of a final r after a vowel has nothing to do with want of education. It is the habit of all classes in the South of England; being, in fact, dialectal. In the speech of many (not all) educated Southerners, the words morn and dawn form a perfect rhyme, though some differentiate them by declaring that they pronounce the r in morn, meaning thereby that they introduce in the place of the r a faint indeterminate vowel, like the a in China. But this is only a vocalic sound, and not a true trilled r. The introduction of r in the phrase Mariar Ann is simply because Maria ends with a vowel, and Ann begins with one; hence there is confusion with such phrases as there he is, the habit being that the r in there is only trilled before a word beginning with a vowel, whereas in the phrase he is there, the final ere is either vocalic or diphthongal, if the speaker is a Southerner. A Northerner would perhaps give it the true trill.

In the case of clerk, there is no real use of a for e; rather, the combination er becomes ar, as is common in old French; so that it is of Norman origin. This rule is carried out in common speech much further than in polite talk; hence we hear of varmin, sarpent, or sarpint, 'varsity for university, and so on.

The appearance of a for e in the word Thames is of different origin altogether, being the result of the pedantry of the Renaissance period. The Old English spelling was Temese, now reduced to Tem'se, which is quite right. But the pedants discovered that the Latin spelling had once been Thamesis, so they wrote Tham instead of the English Tem.

In short, all the phenomena have been frequently explained in books that treat of English phonetics, but are still caviare to the general. I have little doubt that this statement will eagerly be assailed, but it is not worth while defending what is sufficiently known to the initiated. There is no subject regarding which those who have never studied it are so irrepressibly eager to prove that they have not gone so as the study of English pronunciation. As a fact, the study of phonetics abounds with difficulties, many of which an unpracticed ear cannot discern at all. W. W. SKEAT.

How to Get a Drink from a Soldier.

From The London Chronicle.

In connection with Gen. Wauchope's devotion to his profession—he had been wounded four times, thrice severely, before going to South Africa—the following story is told: Shortly before he started for the Soudan last year, he met on a country road near Niddrie an old tinker, a character in his way, whom he had known nearly all his life. Said the itinerant, "Eh, laird, I hear ye're gaun aff tae the wars ance mair. Whan will ye e'er get yer fill o' fechtin'?" The officer smiled, but made no reply. The tinker went on, "I'm thinkin' that'll be never, laird! I'm jist the same mysel'. Sir; A can ne'er get ma fill—but it's no fechtin', it's whusky!" The laird took the hint.

CARTERET GUN CLUB SHOOT.

Christmas Day Contest at Garden City Brings Together Representatives of Several Clubs.

Honors were pretty evenly divided in the Christmas Day shoot of the Carteret Gun Club, which was held on its well-appointed grounds at Garden City. Two cup events were scheduled, the first, the December Cup, was won by H. G. Browne, with a score of nine kills out of his selection, and R. Stuart captured the Christmas Day Cup with eight kills, which, with the allowance accorded with his handicap rise, made a clean score.

The birds were a magnificent lot all day, and, assisted by the heavy northwesterly gale, compelled the gunners to fire as soon as the bird arose from the trap in order to kill within the thirty-yard boundary. Invitations had been extended to the Westminster Kennel Club, the Larchmont Yacht Club, the Westchester Country Club, the Tuxedo Club, the Heron Hill Gun Club, the Philadelphia Gun Club, and the Garden City Gun Club, and representatives of nearly all of these organizations were present.

In addition to the two cup events there were a double bird race and a number of miss-and-out sweepstake races, the latter continuing until darkness made it almost impossible to distinguish the fast flying pigeons against the sombre background.

The summary:

DECEMBER CUP.—Conditions: Even distance, 30 yards rise and 30 yards boundary; 10 birds; entrance, $10, birds extra; all ties at 3 birds to divide.

Miss and Out, Even Distance, All at 32 Yards.—Magoun, 3; Watrous, 3; Browne, 2; Hoyt, 1; Welch, 0. Magoun and Watrous divided.

The day's sport closed with five even-distance sweeps, miss and out, all shooters at thirty-four yards' rise. The distance was such that the majority of guns were handicapped and could not carry the distance effectively, especially when the bird released was a straightaway driver. The winners were Magoun and Watrous, Browne and Watrous, Magoun and Watrous, Gilbert and Hoyt, and Gilbert alone.

EAST SIDE GUN CLUB SHOOT.

Expert Wing Shots from Town Make Scores at Newark.

Several well-known expert wing shots from this city journeyed out to the invitation holiday shoot of the East Side Gun Club at Newark yesterday. The birds were fast, owing to the assistance of the stiff breeze and crisp atmosphere. Many of the birds although hard hit managed to carry entire charges outside the fifty-yard boundary before they dropped.

A feature of the contests was the eighth, ninth, and tenth sweepstake events, for which the club hung up turkeys as prizes. Those who captured turkeys in addition to shares of the entrance fees were Schortemeier, Feigenspan, Hassinger, and Geoffrey.

Joseph Erhardt, twenty years of age, of Hamburg Place, Newark, who was one of the "pikers" outside the grounds, accidentally shot himself in the right leg as he attempted to raise his gun to stop a pigeon that had escaped the club gunners. The load of shot tore a big hole in Erhardt's calf, and he was taken to St. Michael's Hospital.

The day's scores follow:

First Event.—Miss and out; $2 entrance; 30 yards rise. O. T. Roof, 9; William Hassinger, 8; Georges Matzen, 8; Feigenspan, 2; Otten, 6.

Second Event.—Same conditions. Roof, 2; Hassinger, 3; Matzen, 2; Feigenspan, 0; Otten, 0.

Third Event.—Same conditions. Roof, 4; Hassinger, 4; Matzen, 3; Feigenspan, 3; Otten, 3.

Fourth Event.—Same conditions. Roof, 4; Hassinger, 2. Matzen, 2; Feigenspan, 3.

Fifth Event.—Same conditions. Roof, 9; Hassinger, 9; Matzen, 4; Feigenspan, 8.

Sixth Event.—Seven birds; $3 entrance, birds extra; 29 yards rise. Roof, 5; Hassinger, 6; Fisher, 5; Matzen, 6; Otten, 5; Larkey, 5; Gardner, 2; Feigenspan, 6; Purssell, 4; Craft, 6; Geoffrey, 5; Shible, 6; Hauser, 4.

Seventh Event.—Fifteen birds; $7 entrance, birds extra; even distance, 29 yards rise. Roof, 14; Hassinger, 11; Matzen, 10; Otten, 10; Keogle, 11; Feigenspan, 13; Purssell, 9;; Geoffrey, 13; Shible, 10; Hauser, 6.

Eighth Event.—Miss and out; 29 yards rise. Schortemeier, 7; Feigenspan, 7; Ferguson, 7; Geoffrey, 6.

Ninth Event.—Miss and out; $2 entrance; 29 yards rise. Geoffrey, 6; Feigenspan, 6; Hassinger, 5; Hauser, 4; Roof, 2; Larkey, 1.

Tenth Event.—Miss and out; $2 entrance; 29 yards rise. Geoffrey, 8; Feigenspan, 2; Hauser, 1.

TARGET SCORES AT BAY RIDGE.

Crescent Athletic Club and Its Guests Compete for Prizes.

One of the greatest day's shooting ever indulged in by the members and guests of the Crescent Athletic Club took place yesterday on the grounds of the organization at Owl's Head, Bay Ridge, where the two days' tournament of the club was concluded. Over 4,000 targets were thrown during the day's sport, and some fine scores were made. Two special prizes offered by John H. Hallock, the well-known local amateur, and Henry Kryn, another Crescent expert, were the features of the sport. In the race for the Hallock trophy George W. Hagedorn won out with 24, taking the cup, and the club prize offered for second—a fine panel of game birds—went to Lowndes Rhett, with a total of 22.

Garrett W. Cropsey and George W. Hagedorn tied for the Kryn trophy, each smashing twenty, and will shoot off for the tie next week. F. B. Stephenson, E. H. Lott, A. B. Rhett won sweepstakes races, and the Twilight Handicap, shot just as darkness enveloped the scene, fell to Henry Kryn after a tie with Erskine H. Lott, by one bird. F. B. Stephenson, Dr. O'Brien, and Hagedorn took the remaining events.

LORD DOUGLAS'S BOAT SAILS.

Famous Schooner Lasca Starts on the Long Voyage to Southampton.

The American schooner yacht Lasca, which was purchased a short time ago by a yachting chum of the Emperor of Germany, left Tebo's Basin yesterday shortly after 11 o'clock and started on the 3,000-mile voyage across the Atlantic for her new owner, Lord Sholto Douglas. She left the basin in tow, and cleared for Southampton, where she will be delivered and her American crew paid off.

The Lasca was one of the most noted of American cruising yachts. She was designed by A. Cary Smith, whose other noted craft, the Yampa, was purchased a year ago by Emperor William. She was launched from the Piepgras Yard, at City Island, in 1892. The Lasca is the third American schooner sold to a foreign yachtsman within two years.

MR. MOSS'S REPORT.

The general impression made by the voluminous report of the counsel of the Mazet committee will be that it tells nothing very new, and that it presents what is already pretty well known in a desultory fashion and with a marked tendency toward partisanship. This impression is only too much justified by that careful perusal of the report which very few will give it. Yet this report has a distinct value, and it will be far better for those who have to deal with it, especially in the Legislature, to study it for what it really is worth than to dismiss it because it is not worth as much as it might have been. And it will be particularly well for the leaders of Tammany, whose ignoble motives and outrageous methods are fully shown in the testimony accompanying the report, to ask themselves how long the people will stand the facts as they are, even though this presentation of them is inadequate and injudicious.

The professed purpose of the committee to which the report is addressed is the exposition of facts showing the working of the present charter and the suggestion of changes required by the facts brought out. These suggestions as made by Mr. Moss are logical and are sustained by the facts. The principal one is that the Mayor shall have the power of removing at any time the heads of departments whom he appoints and whom under the charter he can now remove only within six months after the beginning of his term of office. The object of conferring the power of removal either during a short period at the outset of a term of the Mayor or at all times is obviously to secure responsibility, and this is most imperfectly done by the present arrangement. The Mayor cannot enforce responsibility on men whom he cannot remove save during a few months, and the people cannot enforce responsibility either on the heads of departments whom they do not choose or on the Mayor who has no real control over the departments. The loose, confused, and demoralized condition into which the City Government has fallen under the actual system was amply shown by the Mayor's own testimony and by the testimony of the various Commissioners. It is simply impossible to tell from their own admissions who is accountable for the extravagance, imbecility, and jobbery that are shown to prevail. Clearly this would not be the case if the Mayor had full power of removal. It would then be his interest as well as his duty to know what his appointees were doing, for their neglect and their misconduct would be brought straight home to him. The suggestion of a term of two years, with eligibility for a second, has both advantages and disadvantages. It is much less important than the one relating to the power of removal.

The worst vice of the present system is that it permits the control of the whole administration by the leader of Tammany, who cannot be reached by the voters, while those who are in nominal control are equally beyond reach. The Mayor, despite his air of self-confidence and his innocent affectation of dictatorial manners, was shown before the committee to have very little scope for the exercise of his iron will and no great amount of independence within that narrow field. Mr. CROKER made it plain that the original appointments were meant to suit him, and could not have been made if they had not suited him, and the appointees made it clear that it was Mr. CROKER and not the Mayor whose known or inferred wishes they consulted. Such a situation cannot be pleasing to a man of so much native pride as the present Mayor, and if he has not fulfilled the prediction of some of his friends before the election and thrown off the yoke that must be galling, an explanation can be found in the fact that his hands are tied by the law. The situation, however, is far more humiliating for the people of this great city, whose hands are also tied, while the only person that can regard it with any satisfaction is the man who really for the time being rules the city as absolutely and irresponsibly and more profitably for himself and his retainers than any modern monarch rules his domain.

The rule is very bad, but as yet it is less remarkable for its inefficiency than for its gross extravagance and its corrupt and corrupting character. The former is shown most plainly in the account of the manner in which our taxes are determined through the assessment of taxable values; the latter in the exposure of the conduct of the Police Department, and both in the amazing revelations concerning the Ramapo job. But bad as the condition of things is, the radical blunder—to call it by no harsher term—of this report lies in the entire and willful omission of any recognition of the fact that it is not the Democratic organization alone or the leader of Tammany alone that must be held responsible. The Ramapo job, with its enormous possibilities of plunder and its impudent surrender of public rights into private hands, was the creation of a Republican Legislature under the guidance of a lobby made up of men high in the councils of the Republican boss. The iniquities of the Police Board are the product of the bi-partisan scheme of which the Republican machine has long been the stubborn advocate and the fat beneficiary. And Tammany works its evil will on this imperial city because Mr. PLATT would not consent to the success of a movement that would have made boss rule in the city impossible for years to come. The Tammany of to-day, with its hideous misrule and its shameless prostitution of public power, with its alliance with vice and its grip on all business that public power can reach, is the deliberate creation of Mr. PLATT and his machine. It is stupid in Mr. Moss willfully to ignore these facts. Nevertheless his report, properly interpreted, is a highly informing document.

DELAGOA BAY.

No doubt the Portuguese possession of Delagoa Bay is a cause of some injury and of still more annoyance to Great Britain in her prosecution of the war. As we suggested at the time her proclamation, or notification, of the existence of war was made, the purpose of it must have been to enable her to exercise the right of search. That right seemed so important to her that, in order to exercise it, she was willing to compromise her international position by admitting that her trouble was a "war" and not a domestic dispute with her vassal, as she had previously maintained.

The object of all this was to prevent importations of contraband of war for the use of the Transvaal by way of Delagoa Bay. That bay offers the only route to the Transvaal which is not under British control. Lorenzo Marques is a neutral port through which supplies and recruits can be safely shipped to a belligerent. If the South African Republic owned the port and bay, they would be tightly blockaded. Because Portugal owns the route, it is a free highway. And that is what Great Britain cannot be expected to like.

It would be immensely convenient to her to have the port and bay to herself, for they open by far the most direct and the shortest route to the Transvaal from the sea. It is only 57 miles to the frontier, and 290 to Pretoria, as against 307 miles from Durban to the frontier and 511 to Pretoria and twice these latter distances from Cape Town. But Portugal will neither lease nor sell, and Great Britain could not take possession of the harbor without a gross breach of international law. Portugal would be perfectly powerless to resist the seizure, but it would give rise to international complications which it would be extremely disagreeable to a belligerent to face, to say nothing of the absolutely piratical character of the seizure itself.

Meanwhile the traders in the Portuguese port are naturally making the most of the opportunities, and they find their account in importing, under more or less false pretenses, what they can sell to the Boers to the most advantage. At present such material is for the most part contraband of war. It is no wonder that the British exasperation should lead them to seize and hold all suspected shipments, including a cargo of American flour. In due time they will doubtless apologize and release the seized goods and even pay any damages that the "innocent" shipper may have sustained. But in the meantime the goods will not have reached their real destination, nor have given aid and comfort to the enemy.

It is, for the British, a singularly exasperating situation. If Delagoa Bay were British it would be of immense use to them. If it were openly Boer, it would, with the British sea power, be of no use to their enemies. Because it is neutral, it gives the Boers all the advantages of a seaport of their own without obliging them to defend it. The proceedings the British find themselves compelled to take in order really to "neutralize" the nominally Portguese port ought to be very leniently viewed at the capitals of neutral powers. Doubtless they will be so viewed at Washington.

SIZE AND SYMPATHY.

EMILE ZOLA's account of the forces that shape public opinion on the Continent is not flattering to the intelligence of the French, German, and Russians. M. ZOLA himself, while he is no imperialist, is friendly to Great Britain, as he has good reason to be; but French opinion is on the side of the Boers. He gives the reasons:

> The great mass of the French people are unacquainted with the details of the more or less complicated dispute which culminated in war. In the eyes of the unreasoning mob a powerful nation is assailing a small, weak people. The impulses of the mob, although unreasoning, are frequently generous. Herein is the explanation of public opinion in France, Germany, and Russia.

What this means is that French public opinion is composed of a thick and dense layer of ignorance superposed upon a sub-stratum of solid prejudice. Dislike of England and all her interests is the foundation. The French hate her for her greatness and power, and because she has far surpassed them in the spread of her commerce and the influence she wields. Her friendly regard for us, particularly the manifestation of that regard during our war with Spain, has added to the bitterness of French feeling, for while the Government remained strictly neutral, popular sentiment in France was altogether favorable to Spain. Complete ignorance about the Boers, their country, and their habits is a fitting structure to be reared upon a foundation so ignoble.

The German people are better informed than the French, but public opinion there is largely shaped by the venomous press, which, whether its utterances are inspired or not, serves to keep alive the belief that England stands in Germany's way and is her enemy. In Russia there is no public opinion about foreign politics except in Court and military circles, and there the policy and plans of the Czar determine it.

Enlightenment would not change public opinion on the Continent. The people of France, Germany, and Russia would not sympathize with England in any war, not even if she were fighting for the holiest purposes. But are the American sympathizers with the Boers impervious to the light of fact and reason? Sympathy and size stand in a well-known relation. It is natural to sympathize with the under, who is usually the smaller, dog. The Boer's inferiority in might has won him the good wishes of thousands of amiable Americans. But what most has enlisted the sympathy of Americans is the delusive belief that the Boers are fighting to maintain a republican form of government against a monarchical foe who would deprive them of their liberties. "Republics should stand by each other" is the cry.

There is no excuse for this delusion. Facts are not wanting to show that the Transvaal is not a republic of liberty and law. Compared to PAUL KRUEGER'S Government Tammany Hall is a magnificent illustration of freedom and majority rule. The substitution of British rule for KRUEGER'S rule would give the people of the Transvaal their first experience of a Government under which the rights of the individual are protected by law, where liberty is guaranteed. The character of "Oom" PAUL is as little understood as that of his Government. In the visions of partisans of the Boers he is a Washington, a John of Barneveld, a Bolivar, and even an Aguinaldo. In the cold light of truth he is revealed as an uncommonly adroit and sordid old reprobate, cunning, corrupt, sanctimonious, money-loving, tyrannical, a betrayer of the liberties of his own people, faithless to the stranger within his gates, and an habitual conniver at malversation of the public funds. He prays well, preaches well, and feathers KRUEGER'S nest all the time. His personal character is no more worthy of admiration than his public career.

When the under dog is a particularly mean dog and the other animal has, in addition to many good points, the merit of being your friend, the old rule of sympathy is more honored in the breach than in the observance.

The professional Irish-American sympathy for England's foe is perfectly intelligible. We are used to that. We may dislike the motive, but at least we understand it. But the real American who desires the triumph of the Boers seems to be grievously lacking in intelligible justification for the direction of his sympathies. At least he is profoundly mistaken if he supposes that either the progress of the world, the security of liberal institutions, or the interests of this Nation would be promoted by the defeat and humiliation of England.

THE NEW GERMAN NAVY.

One of the curious things about the recent proposition to increase the German Navy is the absence of spirited or enlightening discussion upon it in Germany itself. We cannot perhaps look to the Reichstag for so accurate a reflection of the public sentiment of the moment as even to the French Chamber of Deputies, while there is no comparison between it and the House of Commons or even the House of Representatives as an organ of national opinion. Methods of obtaining legislation which have been obsolete among English-speaking peoples since the seventeenth century are in full vigor in Germany. "Court politics" are still in vogue there. We should not expect to see a public question so thoroughly "thrashed out" in debate in Berlin as in Westminster or in Washington. But still it is a disappointment that the debate in the Reichstag has thus far been of so little importance on a proposition which is admitted to be revolutionary in the sense of being a radically new departure.

The Emperor is known to have been greatly impressed with Capt. MAHAN'S views of the importance of "sea-power." But that is now an old story. The legislation under which the German Navy is now conducted was framed in accordance with the Emperor's will, and by it he is understood to have obtained all that at the time he wanted. The present demands upon the Legislature seem to amount almost to a parliamentary breach of faith. The existing legislation was asked for in order to provide for the maintenance of the navy for a term of years, and as a settlement is analogous to the famous Septennate arranged for the army. As everybody knows, the Septennate did not turn out to be satisfactory to the Government which proposed it, and Prince BISMARCK went down to the Reichstag to use not only all the arguments he could muster but also the great weight of his personal authority to induce the Legislature to increase the burden of taxation in order to provide more adequately for the national defense.

What is most curious about the measure for the increase of the navy is that it is not pretended to be a measure of national defense. Neither Prince HOHENLOHE, the Imperial Chancellor, nor Count VON BUELOW, who supported it in a very clever and even witty speech, put it upon that ground at all. The Chancellor explained that the appropriation he asked for was only an "entering wedge," and Count VON BUELOW explained in detail that it was introduced in order that Germany might not have to "back down" in any part of the world, by reason of having an inadequate naval force to support her claims and pretensions, whatever these might happen to be. He spoke of the old days before the unification of Germany as the days when, among the militant and aggressive nations, Germany, in spite of or even because of the higher education which her children enjoyed, was regarded "as haughty cavaliers look upon family tutors." And he elicited the applause of his hearers by saying that those days had passed away, never to return.

The increase of the German Navy, which it is officially explained means the doubling of it as soon as that object can be accomplished, has thus nothing whatever in common with the increases of the British Navy. These latter are well understood to be mere acts of self-defense, even of self-preservation. A powerful navy is an absolute necessity to the being of an island kingdom, vulnerable all around its coasts, which normally imports two-thirds of its food, supply, and has only on hand some three weeks' consumption. But of course Germany is in no such situation. The little strip of coast on the North Sea is defensible by her forts and armies against any force that can come to attack it even better than by a great navy. And that there might be no question about the object of the increase, it is officially given out that, while the navy is to be doubled, the coast-defense squadron is not only not to be increased but is actually to be discontinued altogether.

This is a startling and formidable programme. To foreigners it will seem to have been taken in pursuance of a fantastic policy. The expansion of the British Navy has followed the expansion of British commerce, whereas the expansion of German trade is expected to follow the expansion of the German Navy. Such increase as there has been or as has been authorized of our own navy has been actually forced upon us by our assumption of new responsibilities which we could not escape. It remains to be seen what view the heavy laden German taxpayers will take of the scheme for doubling the navy avowedly by way of entering upon the career of a conquering "world power." In any case it is to be hoped that the increase will be accompanied by an increased inculcation of those "sea manners" the lack of which was deplored by an English Captain to an American Commodore and has done more than any other one thing to imperil the good international relations of Germany.

TOPICS OF THE TIMES.

—Our Aldermen, by adopting a resolution filled with love for the Boers and hatred for the British, have raised themselves to the proud height occupied by their brother statesmen in New Rochelle, and their holiday leisure from the accustomed toil of presenting excuses for continued official existence will doubtless be made sweetly pleasant by the thought that in settling thus promptly and conclusively a problem of much complexity they have earned enormous amounts of public gratitude. The resolution was of such world-wide moment and its construction exemplified such remarkable skill in the manipulation of venerable phrases that we were moved to investigate and record the circumstances of its presentation and passage. Unfortunately, the episode seems to be shrouded in deep mystery. Alderman LEDWITH introduced the document, but whether he wrote it or not is as yet unrevealed, and earnest inquiries as to who voted for it, though made in circles usually well informed on all such matters, produced only reluctant confessions that this committal of the metropolis on a large and delicate question of international politics had the audible support of but two or three members of the illustrious board. Who the two or three were was not set down in the minutes, and the Chairman, Alderman MUH, forgot to ask, before pronouncing the resolution carried, whether anybody wanted to vote against it. This oversight is especially to be regretted, because the resolution contains a reference to "those noble, stalwart farmers now repeating at the close of the nineteenth century the struggle which our forefathers underwent at its dawn against the same common enemy." Prolonged study of the roster of the board has not enabled us to identify the war to which allusion is here made—a fact that greatly disquiets us and is likely to worry a good many other New Yorkers.

—Every liquor dealer in Boston was visited on Friday evening by a messenger from the Police Captain of his district and informed that in the opinion of the members of the Board of Police the practice of giving bottled intoxicants to their patrons as Christmas presents is a harmful one and ought to be stopped. What effect this somewhat remarkable appeal will have remains to be seen. The making of such gifts, common enough among saloon keepers everywhere, has been a well-established custom in Boston for many years, and only recently have there been any organized efforts to put an end to it, though not a little holiday drunkenness has no other origin. One of the Boston papers, commenting on the board's action says: "The request, coming from the source it does, will undoubtedly be carried out to the letter, and probably many of the dealers will be glad to save the expense and have a good reason for it in the suggestion from the Police Commissioners. The recipients of these Christmas offerings, however, may not feel as much pleased about it, and with them at least the Police Board may not be popular."

—Every citizen of a free country has an undoubted right to criticise the acts and policies of its Government and of other Governments, but this right, like others, has its limitations, and that citizen whose criticism tends to make the preservation of his country's honor a harder instead of an easier task may well consider himself fortunate when his wisdom or the accuracy of his information, and not his patriotism, is questioned. Mr. ROBERT B. ROOSEVELT is a controversialist of such experience and strength that direct attacks upon him can be made without compunction—though not without peril, as many rash antagonists have discovered—and therefore we do not hesitate to denounce as at once unwarranted and unfair a passage in the notable letter from him which we published on Sunday. In likening England to the United States Mr. ROOSEVELT said: "England is a predatory nation. So are we. She takes all she can get, and keeps all she takes. Her word is not always quite as good as her bond. She is pledged to leave Egypt. Well, we are pledged to leave Cuba. We will both withdraw at about the same time." By which, unless we are much mistaken, Mr. ROOSEVELT means that the two nations described by him as "the leading forces for civilization, liberty, human rights, universal manhood, and for man's upward and onward development," intend to break, or, at least, will not keep, solemn promises made with the whole civilized world as witnesses. With the effect, as regards England, of this assumption, and its implied reprehension, we are not particularly concerned, but as regards the United States, not only is the assumption gratuitous and the reprehension undeserved, but they are both obviously calculated to delay and render unnecessarily difficult the vindication of our National honor, toward which the Administration is apparently working in good faith and with all reasonable speed. No act of the President in Washington or of his representatives in Cuba has evidenced even a secret wish to force annexation upon the island. On the contrary, both have given and are giving such manifest proofs of good faith that the confidence of the Cubans themselves has at last been earned and won, much to their profit and ours. And now Mr. ROOSEVELT makes a statement which, if repeated in Cuba, cannot fail to hamper the work of reconstruction and impair the harmony between the native and foreign officials upon which so much depends.

—Philadelphians, it seems, have been ingenious enough to devise, and courageous enough to execute, a scheme for outwitting one band of Christmas brigands, and that not the least fierce in the levying of the seasonal blackmail. The proud achievement is set forth at some length by The Philadelphia Record, and it would be interesting to know whether the same stratagem ever has been or ever is employed in this city. The details are derived from an interview with a barber, himself one of the foiled exploiters of reluctant but usually helpless generosity. Pointing to ten men waiting for his ministrations, Saturday afternoon, he said resentfully that only two of them were regular patrons of his shop. Did this mean a sudden influx of strangers? Not at all. "It simply means that the double quartet is made up of men who are regular customers at other barbers' shops, but who have come here to get out of giving Christmas presents in those shops. You'd be amazed to know the number of people who every year perform the change-of-barber-shop act. We don't do any more business here, as for every strange customer who comes to us a regular customer goes to a strange shop at this season of presents-giving. When they again get back to their regular shops after Christmas is over they carelessly remark that they have been out of town. 'Sh, don't talk so loud, for I don't want my once-a-year customers to hear you; they might go somewhere else next year." This tale, it must be admitted, lacks the true flavor of the merry Yuletide; indeed, its spirit is distinctly grubby, but for all that it's a pretty good tale and lamentably human-natural.

—Terrible as were the effects of the landslide at Amalfi, it is probable that most of us were less impressed by the loss of life about which the dispatches told than by the almost convincing proof they gave that Amalfi is a real town, in which real people presumably live and certainly die. In a way, of course, that was known before, but knowledge is one thing and appreciation another, and hitherto the general tendency has been for the untraveled to regard Amalfi merely as a pleasing but impracticable combination of impossible rocks and uninhabitable houses, arranged by some unknown philanthropist for the exclusive benefit of one or two magazine illustrators and the painters of drop curtains. This, evidently, is not the truth; at any rate, it is not the whole truth, and an immediate revision of assumptions and deductions is in order. The details of actual, every-day life in Amalfi are still almost unimaginable, but death there seems to be much what it is in places not at all picturesque or theatrical. That fact, of itself, settles the question of Amalfi's reality.

GENERAL NOTES.

By invitation, Louis Honoré Fechette and Dr. William Henry Drummond, two Canadian poets, have recently visited Chicago and given readings from their poetical works.

The Georgia Legislature finally passed the law requiring the payment of licenses for dogs on pain of death, and it was signed by the Governor. It is expected to reduce the number of "worthless curs" in the State greatly, and the farmers fondly hope that the raising of sheep will henceforth be profitable.

MAN'S CAPACITY FOR IMPROVEMENT.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Your editorial in THE TIMES of Friday, the 22d instant, on "The Golden Rule at Washington," suggests a few thoughts on the law of human progress.

Evidently, from your standpoint, human progress is a partial and one-sided condition, from which a considerable portion of humanity must necessarily be excluded because of "the ineradicable inequality among men." "Because a constant proportion of its citizens have a congenital and defiant inaptitude for learning." "Because a considerable percentage of that class [the laboring class] is incurably lazy and improvident." And because any one who, like Senator Hoar, would "banish illiteracy and ignorance from the land, and secure for every workman and every workingwoman wages enough to support a life of comfort, and an old age of leisure and quiet," is "trying to amend the immutable laws of nature and divine Providence."

Are you not limiting the power and goodness of divine Providence to a very restricted field when you decry the efforts of the philanthropist to lift up the lower classes to a condition in which they may have and enjoy reasonable leisure and the common comforts of life?

If such a condition is contrary to the immutable laws of nature and divine Providence, then it naturally follows that a Being of infinite goodness, wisdom, and power has created a world, peopled it with myriads of sentient creatures who have no voice whatever as to their introduction to this mundane sphere, and established laws which prevent a very considerable proportion of those creatures from rising above a life of penury and hopeless drudgery.

Perhaps you will say that the Creator has endowed these sentient creatures with free will, the power to choose between right and wrong, and to adapt their conduct to those conditions which tend to promote their comfort and happiness, and that it is because they fail to rightly avail themselves of this power of choice that they are doomed to a life of penury and hardship.

I repudiate this free will doctrine. Has the Creator given free will to the congenital idiot? No, the idiot is the victim of the immutable law of heredity. And the same law is operative with every child of humanity that is born into the world. A man's power to choose between right and wrong resides in his mental faculties, and these in their constitution and relative strength are a legacy from his ancestors.

To be sure, even an idiot's mental powers may by judicious training be improved, and the same is true of every human being, no matter how low he may be in the scale of humanity. And it is on this capacity for improvement that the hope of the philanthropist is built.

He recognizes the almost insuperable obstacles to human progress which heredity and environment present. He clearly sees that in order to give an unfavorable mental heritage the best chance the environment of the individual is of the very first importance. Hence he would remove temptations as far as possible from these moral weaklings. He would provide them with habitable homes and fill those homes with sunlight and fresh air. He would enable them to secure a sufficient wage to provide themselves with wholesome food, the common comforts of home, and the leisure for the cultivation of their intellects and moral faculties, and thus he would gradually lift them up to hopeful, healthy, happy, moral citizenship.

And he would have abundant reason for believing that he was not attempting an impossible task when he looked back over the centuries and considered the pit from which the best citizenship of our own time was digged.

Surely, when we read the history of our dirty, ignorant, savage forbears and trace their progress from savagery to the cultured enlightenment of our own time, when we consider the marvelous progress which has been made in the arts and sciences, and how they have been made tributary to the subduing of the earth and making it a more fitting habitation for man; how discovery has followed discovery, and invention has followed invention, all in the line of improving the condition of man, relieving him from burdensome toil, enabling him to satisfy every want and provide himself with increasing comforts and luxuries, and the leisure for the cultivation of his higher mental faculties; when we consider all these things, the question naturally arises, Did a beneficent Creator intend the fruits of all this progress for all his people or only for the few who may be shrewd enough, sharp enough, and selfish enough to gather them to themselves?

And when it is considered that the same beneficent Creator has implanted in man a spirit of kindness, a disposition to lift up the fallen, succor the distressed, relieve want and misery, and diffuse the rule of charity and good-will throughout the world, the hope is not unreasonable that in this ever-progressing world the spirit of kindness will some day triumph over the spirit of selfishness and give to every unfortunate child of humanity the means and the opportunity to make the most of the powers and faculties with which a beneficent Creator has endowed him.

THE PHILIPPINE WARFARE.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

You have given your readers and correspondents fair notice that you are not responsible for any opinions expressed by the letters in your columns. On our part we take THE TIMES because, aside of its advocacy of wholesale murder inaugurated by a weak Executive, it is a clean paper, which our wives and children may not blush to read. That alone, besides its many other excellencies of a commercial and literary character, is a great offset against its political heresies. I am aware of the excuses you offer for supporting the two wars in which this country has lately been engaged, the chief of which is that, although you did not favor them at first, it is the duty of every patriotic citizen to stand by the Administration until those we have made our enemies shall lay down their arms.

There we take issue with you. That has been the dictum of President McKinley and of Gen. Otis from the day on which a trivial skirmish between the Americans and the Filipinos, who up to that time had been treated as our allies, was greedily seized upon by that officer, who presumably had his orders from Washington, to make them at once and a full time to come our enemies. Aguinaldo's desire for an interview in order that this unfortunate incident might be explained and the blame placed where it belonged, and his assurance that it should not be repeated if it attached to his countrymen, was brutally repulsed. Gen. Otis knew that it was not intended on the part of the Filipinos, for he had evidence that their principal officers had availed themselves of the liberty to attend the theatre at Manila on that evening. It stands out as clear as day that he did not desire to lose an opportunity for inaugurating war. He gave Aguinaldo to understand that the preliminary for an interview was the laying down of arms and an unconditional surrender. Did he take Aguinaldo to be a downright fool?

Suppose that under such conditions the interview had been unsatisfactory to him, as it assuredly would have been, could he recall his surrender and take up his arms again? Repeatedly since that time he has asked for an armistice or for an interview that might lead to it, but in every instance they have been sternly denied. What sort of civilized warfare on our part has this been? On two well-known occasions during our civil war the rebel Government—and it was a "rebel" Government—made overtures for consultation on the terms of peace, which were cheerfully accepted by a greater and better man than McKinley. He did not ask the rebels to lay down their arms or to unconditionally surrender; but he offered them almost any terms on the sole condition that they would return to the Union.

It was not the fault of Abraham Lincoln that the war was prolonged until the rebels found themselves in the last ditch, the ditch into which we are endeavoring to drive the patriot Aguinaldo, after murdering thousands of his people and devastating their homes. Then, standing over his prostrate form, sword in hand, Gen. Otis may perhaps condescend to ask him what remarks he has to offer. That time may be near, although we cannot rely on censored telegraphic reports. But we have reason to believe that he is in full retreat to the mountains, for he has left behind him the tracks of blood and of death. His young child, deprived of maternal care, died but a few days ago, and now his wife, roused from her bed of confinement to be transported in a litter over the rough bridle paths of the mountains, has succumbed to her fate, while Christian American soldiers, on this day sacred to the Christ of the whole world, are like sleuth hounds on the track of the husband and the father, whose only crime is that he loves the country we desire to steal. This is a picture that may well cause a troubled slumber at Washington.

JOHN CODMAN.
New York, Dec. 24, 1899.

FRIEND OF THE BOERS.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Why THE TIMES should champion the cause of the British against the Boers surpasseth my understanding. An independent and an influential journal of Democratic tendencies espousing the cause of a monarchy against a republic is, indeed, to me incomprehensible. Are you in possession of facts as to the real cause of the war in South Africa? If England went to war for the benefit of the Outlanders, why is it that over 50 per cent. of them are to be found in the ranks of the Boers fighting against England?

If the Boers are wrong in defending their homes against British aggression and national confiscation, then our forefathers are not worthy the name of patriots. Washington and the men of seventy-six were only lawless rebels for having the audacity to fight against the mother country. For which crime we now hasten to apologize to our Anglo-Saxon brethren through THE NEW YORK TIMES.

With Sir Roderick Cameron let us agree
That in future we shall see
This fair land of liberty
Annexed to the Dominion of Canada.

And, by way of penance for the indiscretions of our forefathers, let the mother country reimpose the tea and stamp tax. We shall then be one vast colonial empire, with Joe Chamberlain to take care of us.

The Anglo-Saxon to be ruled according to the Magna Charta, the Irish, Dutch, and other inferior races to be ruled according to the great penal laws which adorned the Anglo-Saxon statute books between the years A. D. 1695 and 1829. Then, should the inferior races aspire to equal rights with the gallant Anglo-Saxon, a little blood letting will be in order, according to Sir Roderick's idea. That day we shall sing:

"My lords and gentlemen, 'tis good we're here.
In your absence things did seem queer."

BRITON AND BOER.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

Will you allow a workingman to congratulate you on your publication of so many varied and interesting opinions on the South African war in last Sunday's TIMES? It was evident that the majority of them was written by intelligent and unbiased men, and I can assure you that I enjoyed a treat in reading them.

Being of Welsh birth, I have naturally taken more than ordinary interest in this South African trouble, and I must say that your attitude in the early stages of the war, and your denouncement of Mr. Chamberlain was not at all pleasing to me, but your recent editorials have convinced me that THE TIMES can still be relied on to advocate whatever is right. There have been indications enough in the columns of our respectable journals that the sympathies of the best class of Americans are with Great Britain.

The pro and con of the question have been very ably discussed by your correspondents, and I have come to the conclusion that, leaving aside the matter of Boer virtue and shortcomings, the Briton's greed for gold, &c., the main question that had to be settled sooner or later was, Who is to be supreme in South Africa? and it seems clear to me that it could never be decided without war; this being the case, the question is, Which will further the future interests of South Africa and the world at large, British or Boer supremacy? I don't think that there are many unbiased men that will say Boer rule.

I am not at all alarmed at the predictions that the British Empire will fall. She will probably meet many more reverses in this war, but I have every confidence that she will eventually triumph, and that instead of being weaker as the result of the war, she will be greater and mightier than ever, and I further believe that when the true history of this trouble shall be written, the actions of Joseph Chamberlain will be fully justified and that he will some day be classed with the greatest of the world's statesmen.

Being only an uneducated workingman, I do not expect that this letter will merit publication, (your judgment is to decide that,) but I think that an expression of opinions from even your humble readers are of some value to you. If I have contributed my share, the main object of my writing has been attained. A WORKINGMAN.

Sixth Avenue Train Service.

To the Editor of The New York Times:

In your issue of to-day I notice an article under "Sixth Avenue Train Service," complaining of South Ferry trains not stopping at the Thirty-third Street station. I would like to say that this is entirely correct. I have had the same experience repeatedly, and, to say the least, it is very annoying and aggravating. J. R.

BARON ROBERTS OF KANDAHAR.

By RUDYARD KIPLING.

There's a little red-faced man,
Which is Bobs,
Rides the tallest 'orse 'e can—
Our Bobs.
If it bucks or kicks or rears,
'E can sit for twenty years,
With a smile round both 'is ears—
Can't yer, Bobs?

Then 'ere's to Bobs Bahadur—little Bobs,
Bobs, Bobs!
'E's our pukka Kandahader—Fightin' Bobs,
Bobs, Bobs!
'E's the Dook of Aggy Chel;
'E's the man that done us well,
An' we'll follow 'im to 'ell—
Won't we, Bobs?

If a limber's slipped a trace,
'Ook on Bobs,
If a marker's lost 'is place,
Dress by Bobs.
For 'e's eyes all up 'is coat,
An' a bugle in 'is throat,
An' you will not play the goat
Under Bobs.

'E's a little down on drink,
Chaplain Bobs;
But it keeps us outer Clink—
Don't it, Bobs?
So we will not complain
Tho' 'e's water on the brain,
If 'e leads us straight again—
Blue-light Bobs.

If you stood 'im on 'is 'ead,
Father Bobs,
You could spill a quart o' lead
Outer Bobs.
'E's been at it thirty years,

In the way o' slugs an' spears—
Ain't yer, Bobs?

What 'e does not know o' war,
Gen'ral Bobs,
You can arst the shop next door—
Can't they, Bobs?
Oh, 'e's little, but 'e's wise;
'E's a terror for 'is size,
An'—'e—does—not—advertise—
Do yer, Bobs?

Now they've made a bloomin' Lord
Outer Bobs,
Which was but 'is fair reward—
Weren't it, Bobs?
An' 'e'll wear a coronet
Where 'is 'elmet used to set,
But we know you won't forget—
Will yer, Bobs?

Then 'ere's to Bobs Bahadur—little Bobs,
Bobs, Bobs!
Pocket-Wellin'ton an' arder—Fightin' Bobs,
Bobs, Bobs!
This ain't no bloomin' ode,
But you've 'elped the soldier's load,
An' for benefits bestowed,
Bless yer, Bobs!

DRAMATIC AND MUSICAL

New Plays at Many Theatres for Christmas Night.

GOODWIN AND SCHWEIGHOFER

A Typical American and a Typical German Comedian—A New Fanciful Comedy and a New Musical Farce.

Christmas is always a period of rewakening in theatricals. Last night all the play houses were crowded by folks in holiday mood. The new bills were uncommonly interesting. Nat Goodwin returned to the Knickerbocker Theatre for a long engagement, and, with the beautiful Maxine Elliott, appeared in a comedy drama by Clyde Fitch called "The Cowboy and the Lady," which, whether or not it is destined to have a long career, nevertheless served agreeably for the reappearance of the popular comedian.

At the Irving Place Theatre, Herr Conried introduced Herr Schweighofer, a comedian as typically German as Goodwin is typically American, who was received with demonstrative joy. At the Empire Theatre a fanciful romantic piece by that exceedingly clever young English histrion and playwright, H. V. Esmond, was politely received, while the actors regularly attached to that stage were cordially welcomed home after their long absence. There was no lack of laughter and applause at the Fifth Avenue Theatre, where Mr. Knowles put forward "The Three Little Lambs," a new burletta, written by the prolific Barnet of Boston.

At the Garden Theatre Mr. Mansfield did the sentimental in "The First Violin" to the evident satisfaction of a large assemblage. All the other playhouses, whether or not their bills were brand-new, prospered and felt the seasonable influence. Tears of sympathy for "Barbara Frietchie," wonder and admiration for the spectacular glories of "Ben-Hur," with its pictorial symbolism of the first Christmas were not diminished by the rivalry of newer plays.

There were fewer Christmas matinées than usual. People generally stay at home in the day time of this holiday. Most of the afternoon performances that were given had rather small audiences.

"MY LADY'S LORD."

Mr. Esmond's Curious New Piece at the Empire Theatre.

Not many serious words need be employed to describe the quality and the substance of the new four-act piece by Henry V. Esmond, called "My Lady's Lord," which was, on the whole, admirably acted at the Empire Theatre last evening, Miss Millward securing an easy triumph in a rôle compounded, as it seems, of suggestions in Shakespeare's Katharine the Shrew and Beatrice and W. S. Gilbert's Princess Ida. "My Lady's Lord" suggests Mr. Gilbert frequently, and also reminds one of Anthony Hope, who, in his turn, owes something to the author of "The Bab Ballads."

The fault of this new piece, the fault that counts for most, is not that it is ironical, whimsical, and fantastical, but that the method of its author's madness is so hopelessly obscure. Dozens of whimsical, fantastical plays, like Gilbert's poetic comedies and his "Tom Cobb" and "Engaged," have had distinguished careers on the stage if they have not rivalled as moneymakers plays more suited to the comprehension of the simple multitude.

But, while Mr. Esmond's idea of showing us the love making of a modest young English barrister and a proud Princess of romance is intelligible and good, he has managed the machinery which accounts for his Princess of Romance ill. The existence of a kingdom in which mediaeval customs still prevail would not be hard to imagine. But Mr. Esmond confuses the idea by making his Vasungia a place which has outgrown civilization and enlightenment by making its inhabitants drop into modern slang without any intelligible reason and by overloading the fabric with little touches of satire, such as making the people of the Duchy "undress" for dinner, which only serve to increase the difficulty of securing for his play that great essential of all plays, comic or tragic, whimsical or conventional, illusion.

Not only that, but when the actors do almost secure a perfect illusion it is likely to be immediately destroyed by some petty whimsicality—such as Jack Martin's order to his wife (the Princess) to "pack up," for the tenth time or thereabouts, in the rather thrilling penultimate climax. These things are simply banalities.

The piece, however, contains some clever enough scenes, both comic and romantic. By hook or crook, Mr. Esmond sometimes gets to a passage of genuine humor. As, for example, Martin, who has followed his Princess from London to the capital of her own kingdom, and by an odd chance married her, though to her he is a mere clod of earth, has made friends with one of her ladies. She tells him Doura will never love him.

Jack—I'll bet you a kiss she will!

Katrine—Done! When she approaches you with the lovelight in her eyes I'll pay the bet.

Jack—Oh, that would be a most tactless moment to do such a thing!

The acting possibilities of "My Lady's Lord," if not great are good beyond the ordinary. Miss Millward has a showy and grateful rôle as the self-willed Princess who orders whole armies whipped, and swears by the bones of her banished aunt; who is as shrewish as Kate the Curst, as clever as Beatrice (presumably), as cruel as Marguerite in "The Romance of a Poor Young Man," yet as capable of loving as Hope's Flavia, and so easily governed by Love, when once the passion possesses her, that she renounces rank and wealth to dwell with her barrister husband in a little London flat.

She realizes the character to the eye, thus revealing her fine skill in the purely pictorial branch of her art. The breadth, force, fervor, and eloquence of her acting make the impersonation truly delightful. She expresses every mood in the clearest manner, and lends to Mr. Esmond's dubiously placed heroine the rare charm of her uncommon talent.

Mr. Faversham as the ordinary every-day Englishman naturally has a smaller opportunity. But he is never at fault where his author does not play him false. Mr. Wheelock, again a mild-mannered youth in much bewilderment, is well suited, and Mr. Sidney Herbert carries his rôle as the preposterous Cardinal with his accustomed tact and skill.

Mr. Standing is acceptable as the masculine villain, while Miss Perry is only a trifle overweighted as his female accomplice. Miss Burton acts her little part very well. Nothing is amiss with the setting. Vasungia clings to mediaeval dresses, and these are handsome.

"THE COWBOY AND THE LADY."

Mr. Goodwin and Miss Elliott in Mr. Fitch's Mining Camp Drama.

"The Cowboy and the Lady," which Mr. Nat Goodwin used to begin his engagement at the Knickerbocker Theatre last night, is one of the best advertised plays of recent years. If notoriety was everything in the life of a play this would have a very profitable run. But, although it was cheerfully received by the large audience that welcomed Mr. Goodwin and his associates, it is doubtful if the piece wins a much larger share of favor here, comparatively speaking, than it had in other cities.

The story is not particularly ingenious, nor is the development of the plot either facile or original. Yet there is some capital humor in "The Cowboy and the Lady," much of the characterisation is clever, and some of the dialogue is smart.

Mr. Goodwin has a sufficiently congenial rôle as Teddy North, the Eastern man, who has gone to the far West and begun to grow up with the country. That is to say, the character fits his temperament, his physical peculiarities, his manner of expressing suppressed emotional excitement, while it affords him plenty of opportunities to display his personal humor. If his histrionic powers are not brought out at their best in this piece, he is still not held too greatly in check to produce effects likely to satisfy his public.

Maxine Elliott has a chance to represent beauty in distress, and her part serves as a good foil to Goodwin's. She acts it charmingly. Minnie Dupree, as one of those impossible but irresistible daughters of the mining camps, full of audacity and glee, able with a rifle, and piquantly crossed in love, is well suited, while Estelle Mortimer has a fine chance for comic acting, of which she smartly avails herself, as the pianist in a rude concert hall.

In the first act Teddy North and Mrs. Weston are revealed as the central personages in a commonplace little romance. The woman has a disreputable husband. She is inclined to despise Teddy, whom she quite misunderstands, but Teddy loves her at first sight. Weston, the villain, is a creature of cheap melodrama. His capacity for evil-doing is tremendous. It is Teddy's mission to save folk from him. In so doing he gets accused of murdering him and does not attempt to defend himself because he mistakenly believes that the lady did the deed of dreadful note. When this complication is straightened out, the happy ending of the play is in sight. The first act is much better than the others.

As has been said already, last night's audience was in a most demonstrative mood. There were many recalls for Mr. and Mrs. Goodwin after the melodramatic penultimate climax and flowers were passed across the footlights. A speech was called for, but the comedian declined to make one. The author did not appear.

FELIX SCHWEIGHOFER.

The Famous German Comedian at the Irving Place Theatre.

A comedian who, since the retirement of Friedrich Haase, may be fairly entitled to the leadership wherever the German language is spoken from the boards, could not ask for a happier conjunction than Christmas night and a first appearance in New York.

The jolly, inspiriting, catchy music of Millöecker and the riot of fun in "Ein Blitzmaedel" might readily carry a holiday house with them when fun-makers of the second rank interpret scene and song, but the first sight of Schweighofer enforces the certainty that we have in him a character player of the upper rank. There is a finish in his method at small points, there is a breadth of handling in his general action which leaves no doubt in the mind that any play he has given his labor to is "worth the candle," for his infinite variety makes the play. He has complete command of a very rich and varied technique. Features, pose of head, shoulders, hands, and body respond to his conception of the parts he plays, and this conception is evidently the result of industrious study of character and the outward indications of character. To see him in his different characters is like reading Dickens.

Costa's "Ein Blitzmaedel" is well chosen for the opening of his half dozen plays, because it is one of his stock pieces and gives him an opportunity to appear in several very different guises. In it he reduces to a minimum the common defect of star performances, for the weakness of many of his supporters is naturally less forced on the attention when he occupies the stage so constantly as he must in this sketchy little operetta. Nor is this failing so noticeable in comedy as in romantic drama, not to speak of tragedy, for the man who sets us laughing at the start has the advantage of making us overlook such things. Schweighofer's kaleidoscopic fun in "Ein Blitzmaedel" puts the faultfinder to the rout. The "Lightning Girl," or telegraph girl, if you will, is a good play for a lightning-change artist in whose several characterizations we perceive with no less pleasure than surprise that each has been thought out by the actor, carefully put together piece by piece, and charged with a humor and naturalness that make each a little masterpiece in its turn. As the chorus singer, the French abbé, and the student, he is absolutely individual, yet true to nature each time.

Compared with Herr Thomas, the favorite of Berlin audiences, this comedian has a distinctly richer personality and strikes higher notes of humor. There is less of farce. In evenness of work the elder Coquelin undoubtedly surpasses him; Coquelin also possesses a certain distinction, or style, or call it what you will, that Schweighofer does not show. "Ein Blitzmaedel" does not give so much scope to Schweighofer; it has little depth and offers no chance for the touch of pathos that the finer sort of comedy permits. What support the Austrian comedian had was given by Herzmann in the character of a small official, who insults the public whenever he can, and by Miss Anna Leonardi, who played the part of the leading telegraph girl. But there the fairly good actors ended.

Felix Schweighofer has behind him one-third of a century of work in the difficult field of the stage. As an Austrian he was naturally a linguist and imbibed early the dialects of Southern Germany and Saxony, the singular abbreviations of the common dialect of the Tyrol, and the queer vowel sounds one hears in the German of the Viennese. As a boy he stormed barns in Austria, Hungary, and the Balkans like Nicholas Nickleby and moreover with a real Vincent Crummles of his own, but a Saxon Vincent Crummles who spoke a German modified by Bohemian uncertainties. From time to time, sometimes for a series of years, he has been a fixed favorite in Vienna; but never for very long. Fate seems to have decreed that he should remain true to his early vagabondage after age and success and applause in all the chief cities of Germany and Austria have given him the right to a fixed position. He began as a "guinea pig" (as they call barnstormers in Austria) as early as 1864, and now that he is first among German character artists he is still a rolling star. It speaks for his uncommon popularity on the other side that he has not been to the United States before. If one may judge by the reception he had last night this visit will not be his last. In three years he will be sixty, but there is no apparent lack of fire in his work, nor could a youth of twenty skip more merrily on the stage than he did last night when he entered in his first part as the chorus singer Brüller. New Yorkers should not miss the opportunity of hearing and, what is just as good—seeing him!

"THREE LITTLE LAMBS."

A New Musical Piece at the Fifth Avenue Theatre.

"Three Little Lambs" was produced at the Fifth Avenue Theatre last evening. The lambs are a trio of thieves, the leader of which, having served his time in prison, returns to New York to engage in the banking business on the 520 per cent. syndicate plan. To aid his scheme he has taken up the "new woman" idea and combined it with his get-rich-quickly scheme, by installing attractive young women as officers and Directors of his bank.

The chief purpose of the whole scheme of this principal villain, David Tooke, is to get possession of the fortune of several millions which is to be paid to Tooke's partner, Jack Harwicke, at midnight of the day on which the first act opens.

Beatrice Jerome, a former street singer and dancer, who had been made the residuary legatee of old Harwicke's fortune, in case his heir, Jack, should drink wine or acquire the chorus girl habit before coming of age, is Secretary of the bank.

She discovers the scheme to rob Jack, with whom she is in love—tempts him to drink and dance in order to prevent the fortune from going to him and thence into the hands of Tooke. The curtain falls with Jack bereft of his fortune and forced to return to his vocation as a naval officer, Tooke's schemes thwarted and Beatrice, of course, deserted by her lover.

The second act brings the fortune to Beatrice, who has followed Jack to Puerto Rico, and has in turn been followed there by the three lambs, who found she was the heir to the Harwicke millions. The schemers are thwarted, and the course of true love is made to run smoothly ever afterward.

All this is a "musical comedy," with a great deal of singing, some dancing, and a lot of comic "business" by some clever comedians, including Raymond Hitchcock, Edmund Lawrence, Mary Cahill, and Nellie Braggins. R. A. Barnet was responsible for the book, E. W. Corliss for the music, and J. E. Nicol, the conductor, wrote "The Bugaboo Man," a clever little bit, sung by Miss Braggins, assisted by a couple of pickaninnies, the lot taking the place of the usual ragtime song and cakewalk.

It was one of the hits of a performance which was bright and pleasing throughout, and one that, judging from so much of the applause as was not due to the over-zealous demonstrations of friends of the singers, made rather more of a success than have recent musical performances of the same class at their initial performance.

The first scene was a banking house which the exigencies of the music required should be converted into a music hall where snappy choruses, love songs, dances, duos, trios, and solos told the story of the plot and the love scheme that was back of it. Miss Ritchie made a success with her song of the Dresden china girl, but there was no real success until the Bugaboo song was sung, though Miss Cahill and Messrs. Hitchcock and Lawrence had made the audience warm to the company by some of their really funny capers and cleverly spoken lines.

William T. Carleton, a popular singer of English opera companies, was in the cast with a small part, but with songs that gave him a chance to show a trained voice markedly in contrast with the unusual efforts of most of the company.

Miss Braggins scored a second hit in the second act in a song called "The Pussy Cat," and Miss Cahill and Messrs. Hitchcock and Lawrence had a side-splitting scene in which they burlesqued the famous scene in "Becky Sharp" between that adventuress, her husband, and Lord Steyne.

This act was enlivened too by a skit at golfers and golfing, which seemed to touch the risibilities of the crowd, while the comedians had a further chance to thoroughly amuse in two trios, "Down on the Farm," and "Little Lola Little." Miss Ritchie's success was achieved in this scene in a song, "The Man Behind the Gun."

After the American flag and Admiral Dewey's flag had been sung of and waved there was a daring display of the British flag and a verse applauding an Anglo-American alliance both offensive and defensive that caught the house completely, elicited about the heartiest applause of the evening, and served to show the temper of the crowd. There were no hisses, so that the pro-Boer people could not have been in attendance at this performance at least.

"IL BARBIERE" AT THE OPERA.

Mme. Sembrich Makes Her Reappearance as Rosina in Rossini's Work.

The audience at the Metropolitan Opera House last night was not the largest that was ever seen in the place. Furthermore the opera was Rossini's "Il Barbiere di Seviglia," and it must be confessed that each new performance of this delightful work only serves to deepen the conviction that most of those who hear it do not know what it is all about. This will suffice to account for its lack of general favor with the public. The operagoer of to-day is not content to hear one person do all the remarkable singing in an opera, even when that one person is the perennially delightful Marcella Sembrich. The operatic public worships at the shrine of pure lyric singing, and it prefers works in which there is a plenty of sentimental love duets and solos for singers with great voices.

The charming comedy of "Il Barbiere di Seviglia" is quite lost on the general public, and the recitativo secco, with its fun, is meaningless to most of the hearers. This is a pity, because nothing of a humorous nature is done with more spirit and a greater variety of significant details than this opera. In only one respect did last night's performance fall below the familiar standard, and that was caused by an unavoidable substitution. Signor Pini-Corsi was to have made his début as Dr. Bartolo, but as he was ill and unable to sing the part was assumed by M. Dufriche. Whether Signor Pini-Corsi would have been more satisfactory cannot, of course, be said, but M. Dufriche did not succeed in effacing all memories of his predecessor. His performance was conventionally good and certainly did not spoil the general effect of the comic scenes.

Mme. Sembrich is always a joy to hear. Last night she was in splendid voice and as full of spirit as a November morning. She charmed the audience from beginning to end. In the lesson scene she sang the bolero from "Sicilian Vespers," Strauss's waltz, "Voce di Primavera," and the Chopin song which she used to sing last season. Mme. Sembrich's art is a constant source of delight to connoisseurs of singing. As a musician she ranks so high that her phrasing is in itself an education. Last night she sang the ornamental passages of the music with immense freedom and with dazzling brilliancy. She was applauded with the greatest enthusiasm.

M. Saligné's Almaviva did not differ from that of last season in any respect. It is, as it was then, a commendable, though not brilliant, performance. M. Edouard de Reszke was again the same admirable Basilio as of old. His talent as a comedian is finely displayed in this part, and it will have another opportunity to-morrow night when he sings Leporello. It is hardly necessary to say that the orchestra was equal to all the demands made upon it by the score heard last night, and Signor Mancinelli conducted with the skill and enthusiasm of one to the manner born.

"THE BEGGAR STUDENT."

The Castle Square Opera Company Resumes Singing Operettas.

At the American Theatre yesterday afternoon the Castle Square Opera Company produced Millöcker's "Beggar Student," an operetta which had not previously been heard in English in this city since the same company gave it before. The performance must have called up to some of the auditors memories of the early days of the McCaull Opera Company, when De Wolf Hopper and some of his associates had not become too important to remain together as the members of a stock company. Beyond the matter of arousing reminiscences the performance served to show how much better the Castle Square Company is equipped at present for the presentation of operettas than for that of operas.

There was a great deal of life and go in the performance, and not a little merit. To be sure the audience appeared to be most moved by the vociferous singing of the women of the chorus in their first number, but approval of this kind is one of the things which the initiated expect in these days. To sing more loudly than any one else is to achieve a triumph like that of playing the piano faster than any other pianist, and there are many persons capable of appreciating this sort of excellence. There are not so many who appreciate that in which art is more conspicuous than noise or speed.

The production of yesterday was signalized by the return to the local forces of the Castle Square Company of W. G. Stewart, the baritone, who has for some time past been in the West. As Symon Symonsvitch he was graceful and picturesque, but he did not sing the music with enthusiasm. Bessie Tanehill, as Palmatica, and Eloise Morgan, as Laura, were acceptable, while as Bronislava, Gertrude Quinlan displayed an unexpected amount of vivacity and comic skill. In fact, she was much funnier than the comedian-in-chief, Louis Cassavant, who was rather solemn as Ollendorf. Reginald Roberts was tolerable as the conspiring noble, Janitsky. Mae Huntington took Miss d'Arcy's place as Poppenberg at short notice. It is hardly necessary to say that the orchestra was bad; that should go hereafter without saying when the American Theatre performances are under discussion. The audience was not large, but it was in earnest.

HERALD SQUARE THEATRE.

Dockstader and Primrose in a Good Minstrel Show.

Two performances were given at the Herald Square Theatre yesterday by Primrose and Dockstader's big minstrel company. This organization restores, as nearly as possible, the old time "first part." To be sure, the scene is a gorgeous submarine grotto of coral and precious stones, brilliantly lighted by electricity such as the minstrels of the palmy days never dreamed of. But the performers all have blackened faces, and if the costumes are a little less conventional than they used to be, both the melody and the humor of the old-fashioned shows are in evidence.

The ballad singers, especially Harry Leighton and Spencer Kelly, would have been quite at home in the company of Monroe Dempster or David Wambold of revered memory. The end-men, including fluent and sagacious Dockstader, nimble Primrose, eloquent Dooley, (a relative, perhaps, of the famous friend of Hinnessey,) and confidential Scully, are all capital. Some of the jokes are new. All of the songs are good.

As a finale to Part I. there is a copy of the pious act of The Girl with the Auburn Hair, now at Keith's, in which Mr. Manuel Romain sings "The Palms." The ollio is sufficiently varied, and the show concludes with a noteworthy acrobatic "turn" by the Four Juggling Johnsons.

Mr. Dockstader, in the course of the proceedings, told the following pathetic anecdote. He was softly ascending the stairs in his house very late one night, having been detained down town on pressing business, when he was startled by a female voice from above demanding the time. He replied mildly that it was just 12. At that instant a cuckoo clock in the parlor struck three times, and Mr. Dockstader was compelled to stand on the stairs and "cuckoo" nine times "in order to make good."

"THE VILLAGE POSTMASTER."

Rustic Drama Well Received at the Fourteenth Street Theatre.

Big crowds took delight in the portrayal of rustic virtue and humor at the performances of "The Village Postmaster," in the Fourteenth Street Theatre yesterday afternoon and evening. The scenic pictures of the village green, Seth Huggins's store, with its realistic cracker barrels, and the meeting house decorated for a wedding were as effective as ever. The donation party and the threshing day scene were heartily applauded. This rustic drama by Jerome Eddy and Alice Ives wears well. The present performance is quite up to the mark.

Mansfield in "The First Violin."

Mr. Mansfield appeared in the Garden Theatre last night as Eugen Courvoisier in "The First Violin," and his authority of presence and sense of artistic effect, as usual, lent some sort of appreciable value to the performance. The dramatization of Jessie Fothergill's widely read romance needs not be made, at this late day, a subject of fresh critical comment.

Katherine Grey as the British but sentimental heroine, Olive Oliver as Anna Sartorius, A. C. Andrews as the stolid little German, and some of the other players were as efficient as possible. The audience was numerous, well disposed toward the play and the chief actor, and occasionally demonstrative.

Paderewski's Orchestral Concert.

Lovers of all that is most beautiful in musical performances should not forget that at Carnegie Hall next Sunday evening a concert of uncommon attractiveness will be given. This will be the only orchestral concert of Mr. Paderewski, the great pianist. No other opportunity will be offered the music lovers of this city to hear him in any of the larger works of the pianist's repertory. He will play with the assistance of Walter Damrosch and his orchestra Beethoven's concerto in E flat and his own Polish Fantasy. He will also play several solo numbers from the Chopin treasure house.

Presentations at Harlem Music Hall.

After the preformance at the Harlem Music Hall last night the employes of the house presented to Jules Hurtig, Benjamin Hurtig, and Henry Seamon handsome thirty-second degree Masonic rings, set with diamonds. Following the presentation, which was from the stage, there was a little Christmas cheer in the managers' offices on the second floor.

Theatres and Music Halls.

THEATRE COMIQUE.—The Bohemian Burlesquers is the attraction for this week, including a number of vaudeville artists.

HARLEM OPERA HOUSE.—David Belasco's production of "Zaza," with Mrs. Leslie Carter in the title rôle, drew a large audience at last evening's performance. Mrs. Carter won prolonged applause and frequent curtain calls.

PROCTOR'S PALACE.—An interesting musical feature was the Hungarian Boys' Band of forty instrumentalists; along with this number in the long programme were Press Eldridge, Conway and Leland, Alden and Hill, the kalatechnoscope, Mlle. Flora, Zavo and Mlle. Hilda, and several others.

PROCTOR'S THEATRE.—Marshall P. Wilder made his reappearance in vaudeville yesterday, and his monologue work, with which he kept his audience amused, was all of a new kind. Others in the bill were Jennie Yeamans, Bertha Welby, Joe O'Hare, new moving pictures; Herbert and Willing, Dick and Alice, and Anna Teresa Berger.

KEITH'S UNION SQUARE THEATRE.—Crowded houses and an excellent bill marked the performances given yesterday. The bill presented "The Girl with the Auburn Hair," and Joseph Hart and Carrie De Mar, Mme. Adelaide Herrmann, Canfield and Carleton, Hilda Thomas, Charles T. Aldrich, the Cownie troupe of dancers, and Cyrus Dare.

KOSTER & BIAL'S MUSIC HALL.—A strong programme is presented this week. Three acts occupy conspicuous positions in it, the Halloway Trio, La Fafalla, and Miss Henrietta Paer, all of whom made their American débuts. The others who shared the honors were the Beaumont sisters, Miss Marie Dressler, John W. Ransone, and Miss Gertrude Haynes.

HUBER'S MUSEUM.—An excellent bill is given this week by Manager Huber. Among the chief attractions are Victorine, the sword swallower; Francisco Lentine, the three-legged freak; Setunka, Wilson, who breaks steel chains with his chest; Amelia Hill; Hans Delan, and Allen's Punch and Judy show. An excellent double vaudeville company was seen in the theatre.

HURTIG & SEAMON'S MUSIC HALL.—Pauline Hall figured as the leading feature in the entertaining programme offered yesterday by the management. Lizzie Evans and her company, the three Murray brothers, "Billy" Link, the three Goldens, the Fansons, Bennett and Kessner, the Carl Demem troupe, and Wormwood's dog and monkey circus made up the remaining part of the bill.

DEWEY THEATRE.—The Christmas week attraction offered by the management was Weber's Parisian Widows' company, made up of vaudeville artists, and it met with the approval of the patrons of this house. The organization comprises Russell and Tillyne, Anna Suits, assisted by Lillie Stewart and Annie Peyser; Ruby Marlon, Howard and Bland, the Manhattan Comedy Four, and Hayes and Bandy.

"Naughty Anthony" in Washington.

WASHINGTON, Dec. 25.—David Belasco seems to have triumphed to-night as an author of comic drama, a new field for him. "Naughty Anthony," his new play, was acted for the first time at the Columbia Theatre. The audience, which filled the house, cheered the playwright, and at the end of the second act insisted on a speech from Mr. Belasco. The cast included Blanche Bates, W. J. Le Moyne, Frank Worthing, and others.

British Steamer Picked Up at Sea.

LONDON, Dec. 25.—Advices from St. Michael, Azore Islands, report the arrival of the British steamer St. Oswald, Capt. Curtis, from Savannah, Dec. 7, via Norfolk, 9, for Havre and Antwerp, having in tow the British steamer Tremont, Capt. Browne, which sailed from Baltimore Dec. 4 for London, and which had been picked up disabled with the loss of her propeller. The Tremont will discharge her cargo of cattle.

Plague Appears in New Caledonia.

SYDNEY, N. S. W., Dec. 25.—It is reported that the bubonic plague has made its appearance at Noumea, capital of the French penal colony of New Caledonia. Ten Kanakas have succumbed to the disorder and four whites have been attacked. The disease is said to be spreading.

WHAT IS DOING IN SOCIETY.

From the social standpoint New York had yesterday one of the quietest and least eventful Christmases for many years past. The first touch of Winter was rather appropriate, but came too suddenly after the recent warm weather to be entirely agreeable, and the gray skies of the afternoon made the day's close rather dreary. The influence of last week's disastrous fall of values in the stock market was very plainly evident in the celebration of the festival in the clubs and elsewhere, and were it possible to compute even approximately the falling off in Christmas gifts to employes and even in the church collections yesterday, the result would probably be surprising. That portion of the community most directly affected by the Wall Street depression tried to console itself with and by the reflection that the day, after all, was not as gloomy as in England, and so grew philosophical, and made the most of what merrymaking there was.

The men and women who influence society doings in New York were for the most part out of town yesterday. The Vanderbilts were out of town, with the exception of Mr. and Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, who had a christening party at their residence for their young daughter, and Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, Sr., and her children, and Mr. and Mrs. Harry Payne Whitney, who spent the day quietly in their respective houses fronting each other, on West Fifty-seventh Street. Mr. William K. Vanderbilt, Sr., and Mr. and Mrs. H. McK. Twombly were at Biltmore with Mr. and Mrs. George Vanderbilt, and Dr. Seward Webb and Mrs. Webb had a few friends at Shelburne Farms, Vt., and gave their annual Christmas party for the children of the farmers on their estate. Mr. and Mrs. Frederick W. Vanderbilt spent the day at Hyde Park, and there were several large house parties at Hempstead and Westchester. Tuxedo, however, was perhaps the most favored of the country resorts, and there were few cottages open there that did not have gay parties. Among the cottage owners who gave dinners to friends stopping with them were Mr. and Mrs. F. A. Snow, Mr. and Mrs. Richard Mortimer, Mr. and Mrs. Walker Breese Smith, Mr. and Mrs. J. Frederic Tams, and Mr. and Mrs. W. A. Garrison.

It was stated yesterday that Mrs. William Rhinelander Stewart would pass part of the Christmas holidays at Tuxedo, and on Sunday that Mrs. H. Victor Newcomb had gone to the Riviera to visit her daughter, Mrs. Reginald H. Ward, and would remain abroad on an extended visit. If these reports were true, both Mrs. Stewart and Mrs. Newcomb must have solved the old problem of being in two places at once, as Mrs. Newcomb returned from her trip abroad over a fortnight ago, and Mrs. Stewart sailed on the Oceanic on Dec. 13, to spend the Winter abroad.

Mr. and Mrs. William Douglas Sloane have planned to leave town to-day for the Virginia Hot Springs for a short stay. Mrs. Levi P. Morton and the Misses Morton will early in February go abroad, and there join Miss Edith and Miss Helen Morton, who at present are in Rome.

The christening of little Grace Wilson, the youngest child of Mr. and Mrs. Cornelius Vanderbilt, who is three months old, took place yesterday afternoon in the Ogden Goelet residence, at Fifth Avenue and Forty-seventh Street, occupied this Winter by Mr. and Mrs. Vanderbilt and their family. The ceremony was performed by the Rev. Dr. John Wesley Brown, rector of St. Thomas's Church, in the presence of Mr. and Mrs. R. T. Wilson, R. T. Wilson, Jr., and a few intimate friends of the family. The baby's christening robe was of white satin covered with point lace and ornamented with pearls. She was brought in in the arms of her nounou lying on a pillow of white satin covered with lace. The child was given her mother's name. Her little brother, Cornelius Vanderbilt, Jr., who is not yet quite two years old, was present and took great interest in the proceedings.

Mrs. Hermann Oelrichs gave yesterday afternoon at her residenee, 1 East Fifty-seventh Street, her annual Christmas tree for the young friends of her little boy, Hermann Oelrichs, Jr., now about ten years old. The children invited numbered nearly 100, and ranged in age from twelve years down to two or three. By half-past three the ballroom of the Oelrichs residence, in one corner of which a large tree was placed, laden with gifts, was filled with happy little faces. The children were first entertained by a quartet of singers, and then by a sleight-of-hand man, and afterward were allowed to choose their presents from the tree. Mrs. Townsend Burden, Mrs. Charles Oelrichs, and other women, intimate friends of Mrs. Oelrichs, and Mr. Hermann Oelrichs, Mr. Charles Oelrichs, and a few other men superintended the distribution of the gifts. There was music by an orchestra, and the children also enjoyed a collation. Some of the young girls who will come out next Winter, notably Miss Gwendoline Burden and Miss Natica Rives, and a number of their friends of the same age were also present, as was Miss Lily Oelrichs, who makes her début this Winter. The entire entertainment was arranged and managed very skillfully, and Master Oelrichs's little guests departed laden with gifts and delighted with the afternoon's enjoyment.

With Christmas in the past, the holiday dances will begin to-day with a rush. Mrs. Anson Phelps Stokes will give a bal poudre for her daughter, Miss Mildred Stokes, at her residence, No. 229 Madison Avenue, this evening. Mrs. Fachiri, of No. 145 West Fifty-eighth Street, will also give a dance in honor of her daughter, Miss Fachiri; the second Tuesday Evening Assembly will take place at Delmonico's, and the second of the De Coverley dances at Sherry's. Mr. F. Raymond Lefferts, Jr., will lead the cotillion at this De Coverley dance.

Most of the dances of the week will be for the young people not yet out, and especially for the boys and girls and young men who are home from school and college for the holidays. Mrs. A. H. Holmes, of No. 453 Madison Avenue, will give one of the dances for young people to-morrow evening, and Mrs. Bayard Dominick will also give to-morrow evening at Sherry's a cotillion for her daughter, Miss Helen Dominick, who is one of this season's débutantes. Mrs. Woodbury Langdon and other well-known young matrons have organized some subscription dances for boys and girls not yet out, the first of which will take place on Friday evening next.

Family dinners last evening were the order of the day, and had a decided effect upon the box attendance at the opera. There were also many gaps in the stalls, and altogether it was a decidedly off night at the Metropolitan, from the social standpoint. This was, of course, to have been expected.

Mrs. William C. Schermerhorn gave a Christmas dinner yesterday at her residence, 49 West Twenty-third Street, which was attended by the members of her family.

The nurses of the Samaritan Hospital, conducted by Dr. W. Gill Wylie, will give a theatre party to see "Sherlock Holmes" to-night, and after the theatre a supper and small dance will be given at the hospital, which has been beautifully decorated with Christmas greens. Miss E. White will receive the guests at the hospital.

Mr. and Mrs. George Gould are said to be so well satisfied with the success of their entertainment of last Thursday at Lakewood that they are planning an amateur circus to open their casino amphitheatre at Georgian Court for the coming Washington's Birthday. It is also said that they purpose giving a fancy dress ball on the evening of the day when the circus is held. Both these reports must, however, be taken with a grain of salt, as they may proceed from the lively imagination of some seeker after novelty or would-be guest. There is only one thing that might militate against the success of a circus and ball at Lakewood on Feb. 22, and that is the probable absence at that time in the Winter of the very fashionable element with which Mr. and Mrs. Gould are now affiched. From present indications the best known members of the fashionable world will be scattered long before Washington's Birthday, in Europe, at Aiken, the Hot Springs, and the Florida resorts. The amphitheatre of Mr. Gould's new casino would be admirably adapted for an amateur circus, and if the proper people are given charge of it this might be made very amusing. The famous Waterbury circus given some years ago at Westchester by Mr. and Mrs. James Waterbury it still recalled as perhaps the most amusing and successful affair in which New York society has ever participated.

The Sunday evening dinners de luxe at Sherry's, which were such a feature of the season last year, are once more the vogue, and on Sunday the Palm Garden was crowded with well-known people. This was rather unusual for Christmas Eve. A mandolin orchestra played, and among those dining were Mr. and Mrs. Albert B. Boardman and Miss Boardman, Mr. and Mrs. Gilbert Jones, Mr. Eugene Glaenzer, Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Kemp, Mrs. Neilson, and Messrs Harry W. Bates and J. F. Pierson, Jr., who had as their guests the Misses Sedley and Mrs. D. O. Fowler.
